Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit some observations to the House relative to this bill, because I have submitted similar observations to the Pension Committee. I do not approve of the present procedure in considering private bills before this committee, because the majority of them are not referred to the committee for consideration until after the chairman and the clerk have decided whether or not the individual measure contains merit and decides the amount the party asking for a pension should be allowed.

During the Sixty-fifth Congress every bill that came before the Pension Committee was referred to a special subcommittee which carefully considered the merits of same and then reported it to the entire committee for consideration. During this session of Congress the chairman of the Pension Committee has appointed subcommittees for the purpose of considering legislation that is introduced by Members residing in various States. These subcommittees should consider every bill coming under their jurisdiction; however, under the present plan adopted by the committee only such legislation as has not received the approval of the chairman is referred to these subcommittees, and I think I am safe in saying that 75 per cent of the items in this bill have never been referred to the subcommittee having jurisdiction. If I make a mistake in this statement I want the chairman of the committee to correct me.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has already made a mistake. As a matter of fact, the chairman never reports out a bill without reference to the full committee. Every bill in these omnibus pension bills after having been considered by the chairman has been reported to the full committee for such action as it might desire to take.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Does the gentleman mean to say that the subcommittees which have been charged with a certain amount of responsibility have had the opportunity of considering these bills?

Mr. SELLS. Yes; most emphatically so.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Have they done so?

Mr. SELLS. They could where they desired to do so.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The point I make is the bills passed on by the chairman of the committee are not referred to the subcommittee or the report of the special examiner is not read to the entire committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TILSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCLINTIC. According to the procedure followed during the last session of Congress every bill considered by the Pension Committee was read before the committee and separate action was taken. I make the statement that no member of the committee has any knowledge of 75 per cent of the items in this bill. I also make the statement that the special reports made by the examiner relating to 75 per cent of the bills in this act have not been read by any member of the subcommittee having jurisdiction or by any member of the Pension Committee. I want to be perfectly fair to the chairman, and will say I do not care to cast any reflection on him personally. I also want to say I have not received any complaint as to favoritism being shown any member, but I do not believe that it was the intention of the creators of the Pension Committee to have legislation considered in this manner.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There are subcommittees appointed to consider bills introduced from geographical subdivisions.

Mr. McCLINTIC. From the various States.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. From the various States. Now, when I was a member of the Pension Committee I went to the box and got the pension bills which were within the jurisdiction of the subcommittee of which I was a member.

Mr. McCLINTIC. That is the procedure we followed two years ago.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is there anything to prevent that being done now?

Mr. McCLINTIC. The chairman looks over the bills, decides the amount that the individual should be given without any member of the committee knowing anything about the merits of the individual bill. Later a motion is made in the committee that the action of the chairman be approved.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But is there anything to prevent members of the subcommittee from getting bills and passing upon them?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Any member of the Pension Committee, as I understand it, has the right to go there and look into any case; but the point is subcommittees have been appointed to consider certain bills, and if these bill are not referred to them then, of course, they will not feel warranted in asking the chairman to rescind action when the bills have already been passed on by him.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The chairman of the subcommittee, and usually the chairman, would have a perfect right—what difference is there; what is the difference now?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Heretofore in other sessions of Congress the committee has always investigated every single bill before granting a pension to any person.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is when the distribution is made members endeavor to get the bills from their respective States.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The committee or the chairman of the committee does not refer all of the pension bills which are introduced by Members of Congress to the subcommittee having jurisdiction.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is it not the fault of the members of the committee rather than the chairman of the committee?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I am making these statements to the House for the reason the committee has departed from the old custom of handling pension legislation, and I am afraid if this policy is continued at some time in the future there may be room for criticism.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But if the members of the committee do not do their duty it is incumbent upon somebody to pass upon the bills and lay them before the committee with some statement of facts with reference to them.

Mr. McCLINTIC. During the Sixty-fifth Congress the subcommittees considered every bill that was placed before them, and there was no complaint I have ever heard of from any source.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Do I understand the chairman of this Pension Committee is doing all the work?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Seventy-five per cent of it.

Mr. LITTLE. Then, for heaven's sake, why do not the rest of the committee pitch in and help him out?

Mr. McCLINTIC. They have not been given the opportunity.

Mr. LITTLE. You can go and get the bills and look them over.

Mr. McCLINTIC. As I have said before, I do not make these statements to the House for the purpose of casting any reflection on any member of the Pension Committee; but, on the other hand, I feel that the practice of completing legislation without the members of the committee knowing what it contains will later on bring about a condition which will cause criticism to the members of this committee. Inasmuch as I have made a motion in the committee that no legislation be considered until the report of the examiner has been read to the committee, and it has been voted down, I find myself in a position where I can not conscientiously further remain a member of this committee, and my resignation will be sent to the Speaker immediately.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. UPSHAW. I want to oppose the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I simply want to emphasize my indorsement of the course of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions in this matter. I do not like to find myself out of agreement with my good friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC], but I have found in working on this committee what other Members have found, that it seems utterly impossible in the time that is given to it to go through all of these bills. The chairman, with his expert, goes through certain bills and recommends their passage. We indorse them. Certain bills that he thinks are not quite so clear he simply leaves for the committee to examine. Personally, I want to do my duty as a faithful Congressman, but, with the pressing demands upon my crowded time, I never go to this committee that I do not tear myself away from other insistent demands or I am called back from my committee to my office; and it seems there is no way to plow through that tremendous amount of work and get anywhere except by following the line of the chairman. I believe he is right about it. We know that he is faithful. We trust his good judgment, and I believe he is industriously and patiently leading in a way to save the time of busy Members and to do this work in the most expeditious manner. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last three words. I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to the Mexican War pensions. I notice in this bill that there are included some increases of pensions for widows and survivors of the Mexican War. Has the gentleman any information as to how many of those widows are left and how many war survivors are remaining?

Mr. SELLS. I think there are about 300 Mexican War widows left.

Mr. BEE. I wanted to ask the gentleman if there is any rule of procedure, outside of the introduction of bills, with reference to the increase of pensions of these old widows of the Mexican War? In my own section of Texas there are a great many of them, and I do not believe they are advised of the fact that any special measure would entitle them to have their $12 a month pension increased. The gentleman says there are about 300 left.

Mr. SELLS. The Committee on Pensions in the House, for six or seven years, has been increasing the pensions of the Mexican War widows from $12 to $20 a month, whenever a bill to that effect has been offered.

Mr. BEE. I will say to the gentleman I do not think that $20 a month is enough. I have no objection to the raise, but I want to understand the procedure as to how some had received increase of pensions and some had remained at $12.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. SELLS. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would like to call to the attention of the gentleman from Texas that I have a general bill pending in the Committee on Pensions that I am hoping the committee will report favorably, to give those Mexican War widows and some others, who are not now being taken care of, the same pensions as the Civil War widows get, and I will be very glad to have the cooperation of the gentleman from Texas in securing its passage.

Mr. BEE. I hope that when the bill comes before the House that there will be a full attendance.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 10515.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10515) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of James W. Hendrickson, late of Company K, Ninth Regiment Illinois Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Charles E. Kingsley, late of Troop E, First United States Volunteer Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Brooks, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Massachusetts Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Michael W. Murphy, late of Company H, Eighth Regiment Massachusetts Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Peter Black, late of the United States Navy, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Dora F. Wilson, widow of Frederick Wilson, late of Troop B, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William H. Miller, late of Companies C and K, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Philip Owen, late first lieutenant, Company L, One hundred and fifty-eighth Regiment Indiana Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Walter C. Tharp, late of Company I, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment Indiana Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Mary A. Johnson, mother of Hilding C. Johnson, late of Company K, Second Regiment Minnesota Infantry, National Guard, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SELLS], the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Tennessee some hope that some of the House bills now pending in the Senate may receive action by that body in the near future?

Mr. SELLS. I could not give the gentleman any definite information. We are only hoping that they will.

Mr. CRAMTON. I assume that the gentleman in taking up this Senate bill is not seeking to give the impression that all the Senate bills are to be promptly disposed of, while ours slumber over there.

Mr. SELLS. I will just say to the gentleman that this bill was passed by the Senate during the last session of the Sixty-fifth Congress. It came to the House and objection was made to its consideration, and so it went over without action. The bill was then again passed by the Senate during the extra session, and it seems but fair, in view of the fact that the bill has been prepared for more than a year, that it should be considered by the House and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out all of lines 13 to 19, inclusive (pensions of Edward Flannery and Thomas Kent).

Page 3, line 5, strike out "$12" and insert "$24" (pension of Andrew E. Waterman).

Page 3, strike out all of lines 7 to 13, inclusive (pensions of Henry L. Henrisen and Isaac F. Roberts).

Page 6, line 23, strike out "$24" and insert in lieu thereof "$17" (pension of George Moir).

Page 10, strike out all of lines 12 to 24, inclusive, and lines 1 and 2 on page 11 (pensions of John Daley, Charles F. Hahn, Arthur H. Letts, and Floyd E. Driskel).

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were severally agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SELLS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate bill was passed was laid on the table.

The foregoing bill is a substitute for the following Senate bills referred to the House Committee on Pensions:

During the reading of the bill,

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 6, line 11, by striking out the name "Christian" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Christopher."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Page 6, line 11, strike out the word "Christian" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Christopher."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on page 10, line 7, I move to strike out the name "Janet" and to insert in lieu thereof the name "Janett."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Page 10, line 7, strike out the word "Janet" and insert in lieu thereof "Janett."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 12, line 18, by inserting after the word "Donze," the words "known as Charles F. Douze."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Page 12, line 18, after the word "Donze," insert the words "known as Charles F. Douze."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on page 18, line 18, I move to correct the spelling of the word "Main" by inserting the letter "e."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Page 18, line 18, strike out the word "Main" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Maine."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 25, by striking out lines 19, 20, 21, and 22, the proposed beneficiary being dead.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Page 25, strike out lines 19 to 22, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, on page 33, line 13, I move to strike out "$40" and insert "$50."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: On page 33, line 13, strike out the figures "$40" and insert in lieu thereof "$50."

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think that amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then I have no comment to make.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think any amendment of that nature ought to be adopted without some explanation to the House. It is a little unusual.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This bill for Mr. Sanford was introduced a long time ago. As is known to everybody, these pension bills have not been considered as rapidly as we have heretofore considered them, because other matters were under consideration. At the time the bill was considered by the committee Mr. Sanford was still able to be about. He is now 84 years of age. He has an old gunshot wound in the knee. He is now confined to his bed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. His disability has increased and his age has increased a year since the bill was introduced.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes. I think his necessities are such that the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is it because of a change for the worse in the pensioner's condition since the introduction of the bill or its consideration by the committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The bill was introduced for $50, but at the time it was considered by the committee the evidence did not show that Mr. Sanford was confined to his bed. He is now confined to his bed.

Mr. WALSH. This is a case of which the gentleman has personal knowledge?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I know Nathan Sanford very well.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman does not know whether there are other items in the bill of a like nature?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am quite sure that if there were any other items of a similar nature in the bill, the Members interested would call attention to them, and the chairman of the committee would do as he has done in this case.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman thinks that other Members would follow the illustrious example of the distinguished gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I move to amend, on page 44, line 15, by striking out the name "Moxey" and inserting in lieu thereof the name "Maxey."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Page 44, line 15, strike out "Moxey" and insert in lieu thereof "Maxey."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I offer the same amendment in line 16.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 16, strike out the name "Moxey" and insert in lieu thereof "Maxey."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FULLER of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 433.

Resolved, That during the consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union of the bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, it shall be in order, notwithstanding the general rules of the House, to consider the following items of said bill:

Page 22, line 19, beginning with the word "including," and line 20, as follows: "Including increases hereinafter provided, $1,200,000."

Page 23, lines 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the increased compensation for positions in the Postal Service of all classes and grades made and provided for in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920,' approved February 28, 1919, and House joint resolution of November 8, 1919, entitled 'Joint resolution to provide for additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service and making appropriations therefor,' and the classification and grades specified in said act and resolution shall continue in force during the fiscal year 1921, unless otherwise provided by law."

And it shall be in order to consider said section 2 first, before considering the rest of the bill.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, strike out lines 4 and 5.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this rule is to make in order the increases made to the clerks, carriers, and other employees in the Postal Service.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does this bill make the provisions of the bill permanent law?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; only for the next fiscal year.

Mr. GARNER. In order to pass the same legislation in the next appropriation bill it will be necessary to have a similar rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. To get by points of order on the increases; yes.

Mr. GARNER. This merely makes in order certain provisions in the post-office bill that take more money out of the Treasury of the United States than the statue authorizes.

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; what is authorized in the current year.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Illinois says no, and the gentleman from Kansas modifies the statement because he knows that the answer "no" would not be correct. I said the rule makes in order legislation that would not be in order under the rules of the House and the statutes now existing.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Under the general law.

Mr. GARNER. The increases in the bill are not now authorized by law.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true.

Mr. GARNER. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] as to the necessity for economy and cutting down appropriations for the next fiscal year, I merely call the attention of the House to the fact that this special rule from the Committee on Rules, which probably has the sanction of the steering committee on the Republican side, including the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], provides for increased expenditures that are not now authorized by law.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, during the last two fiscal years the Post Office appropriation bill has carried the increases made in order by this rule. It is for the purpose of making these same increases in order for the next fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1920, that this rule is brought in in regard to this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. It is true, is it not, that this rule does not make in order any increases that the employees in the service are not now receiving?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true.

Mr. MONDELL. So that the rule does not provide for any increases in salary above those now being paid.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. FESS. If these increases were not made in order, the operation of the bill would be to reduce what the employees received last year.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. But you are taking away from the House of Representatives in the Committee of the Whole the privilege of any Member of this House who thinks that the salaries might be higher than they ought to be the right to make a point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this rule makes it in order for the House to consider the increases. If the rule is not agreed to, it would be in order for a single Member to prevent the increases by making a point of order. If this rule is adopted, the majority of the House may agree to the increases or it may reduce the amount to the amount provided in the general statute on the subject, or it may reduce it below that amount if Members of the House see fit to do so.

Mr. GARNER. But the only opportunity that a Member of the House who desires to let the statutory salaries continue as now authorized by law would be to vote against this rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; when this rule has been agreed to, when these items are read for consideration in Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Texas, or any other Member, can move to amend by striking out the provisions of the bill providing for the increase and secure a vote in the House.

Mr. GARNER. No; that was not the question I asked the gentleman. The gentleman does not state it correctly. The only chance to get a record vote in the House of Representatives would be to vote against this bill. Of course you can get a vote in the committee, but that is not a record vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman could get a record vote in the House if he could get a vote to strike it out, or he could get a vote on these increases on a motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is a fact that the gentleman from Texas could declare himself in favor of reducing the present salaries by voting against this resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true. The gentleman from Texas, I do not think, would take advantage of the suggestion made for his benefit by the gentleman from Illinois. However, Mr. Speaker, unless there is further debate desired on this rule, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands a division. Those in favor of agreeing to the resolution will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Sixty-two Members have risen. Those opposed will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I probably should be mean enough to accomplish the result the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] desires to bring about, namely, to get a record vote on this matter and make the point of no quorum, but not being of that disposition I will let the matter go. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER (after counting). One gentleman in the negative. On this question the ayes are 62 and the noes 1.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11578, the Post Office appropriation bill, and pending that motion I desire to ask if we can agree upon some time for general debate.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I discussed this matter with the chairman of the committee this afternoon, and the gentleman suggested three hours, which is satisfactory to this side of the House.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is satisfactory to us. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the Post Office appropriation bill be limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LONGWORTH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 10137) to amend an act entitled "An act to classify the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CALDER, and Mr. SHEPPARD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, this is the largest Post Office appropriation bill that has ever been reported to the House. It carries $461,000,000. It exceeds by $25,000,000 the appropriations in the regular appropriation bill and the deficiency appropriations made for the Postal Service for the fiscal year 1920. There are, however, pending before the Appropriations Committee additional estimates for the fiscal year 1920 of $3,550,000, and if those should be granted this will only exceed the appropriations for the present fiscal year by $21,000,000. Whatever figure we take, the increase over and above the appropriations for the present fiscal year is less than 6 per cent, which is the usual increase from one year to another. It will, therefore, be seen that the bill is not extravagant. We are now enjoying an extraordinary increase in business and the prospects are that it will continue. So the appropriations in this bill are really less than would be justified by the volume of business. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads recognized that it was our duty to pursue a policy of economy, and we have cut out appropriations which we thought were not absolutely necessary, yet we believe we have amply provided for all reasonable requirements. The Postal Service is different from other branches of the Government, for it is more in the nature of a business enterprise than it is a governmental function. It is really conducting a vast transportation service, and as a rule this service has been upon a self-sustaining basis, and in some years has shown a surplus. It has always been the professed policy of every administration, and it is a sound policy, that the postage rates and charges should be so fixed that this service would be self-sustaining.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Dealing with the proposition that the revenues of the Post Office should make the Post Office as nearly self-sustaining as possible, as the gentleman has just said, I understand that there is pending before the gentleman's committee a bill which is to reduce the rate on drop-letter postage from 2 cents to 1 cent. Is it the opinion of the gentleman that that bill would substantially reduce the revenues of the Post Office Department?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is my opinion that it would. There are several bills of that character; but the department itself estimates that the immediate reduction by the drop-letter

1-cent rate would be $28,000,000, although they estimate the amount of drop letters would double in two years; and, of course, doubling it, you have cut the rate in two, and the deficit would be made up.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentleman speaking of the first year thereafter?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. The department states that there would be a deficit of $14,000,000 the first year.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What is the gentleman's opinion as to what the condition might be in, say, three or four years?

Mr. STEENERSON. The department would be a good deal in the situation of the merchant who said he was selling a suit of clothes for $25 which cost him $30, but he could do that because he was selling so many of them. The cost of transporting and handling letters has gradually increased in the last few years because of these salary increases. It costs about twice as much for clerk hire in the carrier service to-day as it did 12 years ago, when the last computation was made of handling letters. That was in 1907, when the department had an investigation made. At that time they figured that third-class matter was carried at a loss. I will say, further, that I have received numerous letters from members of the One Cent Postage League, who have been requested to write me, no doubt; and the reason they give for the 1-cent rate is the fact that it would be cheaper for them to have the Government do it than to do it themselves.

I sent an inquiry to the postmasters of some of the largest cities on this subject, and I put the inquiry in this way: The Government has a monopoly over first-class mail but has no monopoly over third-class mail. Anyone can carry it. A very large part of the third-class mail consists of circulars, and since the invention of the mimeograph process, especially, the number of circulars in the mail has increased.

Now, there is no reason in the world why any company or person that thinks it is possible to deliver these letters in the large cities at a profit can not do so. The postmaster at Brooklyn writes there was a company a few years ago, when you could hire men for less wages, that delivered circular letters among the business men of the city and charged about 1 cent apiece for them, but it has discontinued the business, and there is not anyone to-day, a private express company or concern or anybody, that does that business, presumably for the reason that it does not pay. It will cost more than 1 cent. The Government statistics show that it costs more. For that reason it is difficult to see how you can get revenue over and above the cost. The more business you would be doing at 1 cent the worse off you would be. The fact is that the old theory upon which the postal receipts were based does not apply. The theory used to be that you had an organization and you had the help, and that it was economical to employ it at its full capacity, and by so doing you would find that the business would be very profitable because of the so-called law of increasing returns. If you have a carrier who only carries 10 pounds of mail and load him up to 10 pounds more, then it is profitable to have that additional load. But we find now—and it is the testimony of the carriers and of the clerks that they are all worked to capacity—there is no slack. It is all taken up. Down here at Atlanta and New Orleans and Memphis, for instance, the witnesses, without being led by any question of the kind, voluntarily stated that they were loaded beyond their capacity, that they were required to carry enormous loads of 50, 60, 70, and even 100 pounds. That was the grievance they had, that they were loaded down too much. Now, it stands to reason that if you should increase the volume of mail by reducing the postage that you would have to have more clerks and carriers. You can not do the business without more clerks and carriers and therefore can not take advantage of the law of increasing returns. You have arrived at that stage of the business in the Postal Service that we may call in the terminology of political economy the stage of constant or decreasing returns, and therefore the addition of this class of mail at the rate proposed, it is believed, would be a loss instead of being a revenue. You could increase the volume. A great many would send letters that they now pay private carriers a cent and a half to deliver, but the Government could not do it at the price proposed. We would lose on it. Therefore that is not the way to increase the revenue. It is desirable to increase the revenue.

We have adopted these temporary salary increases and I do not believe that any fair-minded man can study the postal affairs and go and listen to the story of the men who do the work, the men who work these hours under great strain, men who are required to possess skill and efficiency, without being convinced that even the present rate of compensation, if the present high cost of living should continue, would be insufficient. I believe it will be necessary for Congress to adopt further increases if the present rate of prices shall continue. I noticed that in the report of the Postmaster General it is stated that it would be advisable to postpone the fixing of salary rates until normal conditions shall return. That would be a very wise suggestion provided we had any prospect that normal conditions as to prices would return in the near future. But if it is going to take several years it would be, I think, an unwise policy to postpone a further revision of salaries. The fact is that with the salaries, even as they are increased and carried in this bill—and which are the same as are in force to-day—it is difficult to get help. In nearly all the large cities of the country the eligible lists of the civil service are exhausted and they have to employ anybody they can get, whether they possess the qualifications or not. Now, the result of that is you fill the lower ranks of the service with unskilled men and you have poor service. Letters are missent and delayed, and you have an extraordinary amount of work thrown upon the employees who are already there and are skilled and trained. They are required to work overtime. This morning I received a letter from a clerk complaining that during the holidays he had to work 16 hours in order to get the mail out. They do not want to do it. It is too hard on the physical man to do it, and the result of taking in these unskilled men is that you are overburdening these older men and making the service poorer. So that if you had better compensation you could take men of education and training, and you would get better recruits and the future employees would be as skilled and efficient as the old employees. For these reasons I think it should be the policy of Congress to try in some way to increase the revenue in order to be able to pay adequate compensation to those who do the work. There has been an unprecedented increase of postal business. No doubt this is due to increased trade and commerce. People as a rule are getting high wages and are spending their earnings freely. The passenger trains are running in three or four sections. They are running with 14, 15, and 16 passenger cars and sleepers.

I have no doubt it is a result of the high wages that are received in industrial occupations. The common laborer is getting more and his money is being scattered among those who receive it for goods and services.

As stated in my report here, the last month of which we have a record, tested by the receipts from 50 of the largest cities in the United States, which 50 largest cities represent one-half of the postal receipts, the total receipts exceeded the receipts for the corresponding months last year, when we had a 3-cent letter rate, by 7 per cent. As you know, the Postmaster General computed that 1 cent extra on letters and post cards put into the Treasury 17 per cent of the total revenue, $71,000,000 in all. Seven per cent in addition to 17 makes 24. So that the receipts for the last three months exceeded the normal receipts at the same rate of postage as we have now by about 24 or 25 per cent. If that shall keep up, even if we have some additional expense, we are likely to have a surplus.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the increase in receipts keeps up, of course, that means also an increase in the amount of mail carried?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That increase is 25 per cent. The Post Office employees are now worked at their full capacity. How does the gentleman expect the Postal Service will be properly carried on with an increase of over 6 per cent in the expense, as proposed by this bill?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, we accepted the estimates made by the Post Office Department as to what the expense would be, but that was not really an official estimate. It was the different department chiefs. Outside of salaries we took their estimates. For instance, the railway mail pay. There was $7,000,000 unexpended of last year's appropriation for transportation of mail by railway and they recommend the same appropriation, which we gave them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They pay it in another way now.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, we believe the $7,000,000 proposed would be sufficient on that item, out of $50,000,000 or $60,000,000, to pay for the increased transportation. And there are other items. I think the item of transportation of mail by vessels is greater by about two or three millions than the expenditures of last year. So we have some latitude. But, as the gentleman says, if this increase of business should continue there might be a deficiency appropriation necessary, but there would not be a deficiency between the receipts and expenditures, because the expenditures would hardly overtake the receipts.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. During the last fiscal year there was turned over from the Post Office Department into the General Treasury of the United States something like $71,000,000, representing the excess paid as between 3-cent and 2-cent postage. In view of the fact that the expenditures of the United States Government during the fiscal year are largely in excess of our revenue, what was the prevailing idea that called for the reduction of the postage from 3 cents to 2 cents? Was it accomplished as the result of a vote of the Congress, and, if so, from what source was it recommended?

Mr. STEENERSON. I can give my own views on that subject. In the first place, the gentleman must remember that the revenues were sufficient for that fiscal year and there was a surplus. In the next place, it is not the function of the Postal Service to supply revenue to the Government. That was only an exceptional case, by reason of war. The Constitution does not authorize the Government to use the Postal Service as an instrumentality of taxation. It authorizes Congress to levy taxes; but the postage is paid by those who use the service, and consequently it would be a violation of the spirit and intent of the Constitution to use the Postal Service to supply revenue to the Treasury. It should be, as we believe, made to balance. That, I think, was the reason that actuated the Congress in reducing the postal rate to the former rate of 2 cents. And I think there was another reason. I spoke a while ago about the law of increasing and decreasing and constant returns. Now, you can place postage so high as to discourage the use of the mail. If you should put postage at a dollar a letter, mighty few letters would be carried. Now with regard to post cards. The 2-cent rate applied to them—the war revenue. The rate was doubled. I am informed by the postal authorities that the number of post cards diminished very rapidly and that they have enormously increased since the rate went down again to 1 cent. And the fact that we are enjoying such large revenue to-day from 2-cent postage indicates to me it is a circumstance that more letters are sent at 2 cents than at 3. There is a small profit at the lower rate, and an increase in letters yields profit. This was probably one of the reasons why Congress thought that in the long run it was best to have 2-cent letter postage.

The estimate made in 1907 in regard to the cost of mail showed that there are 45 first-class letters to each pound, making a revenue of 84 cents, some of them being only 1-cent letters. But these are first-class letters. Eighty-four cents a pound was the revenue, because there were so many of them under weight. Of course if they were full weight they would be 32 cents. The estimated cost was 50 cents a pound, so that the profit on 1 pound of first-class mail would be 34 cents. Now, if you cut the postage in two and made it 1 cent you see that you would lose the difference between 42 cents, which you would receive at the new rate, and 50 cents, which it costs. You would lose 8 cents a pound on every pound of first-class mail.

That is a sufficient answer to those gentlemen who so eloquently have advocated 1-cent letter postage. The fact is that 2 cents now only has the purchasing power of 1 a few years ago, so that in effect we have 1-cent postage now. You could not have 1-cent postage unless you taxed the people for part of it, because you would be losing 8 cents a pound on every pound of first-class mail at that rate. Those figures were made in 1907, and I here insert the official table taken from the annual report for 1909.

Revenue, expense, and profit or loss per pound and per piece for the several classes of mail, based on weighing, in 1907.

Class of mail.	Revenue per pound.	Expense per pound.	Profit per pound.	Loss per pound.	Pieces per pound.	Revenue per piece.	Expense per piece.	Profit per piece.	Loss per piece.

But the element of transportation of letters amounts to only one-tenth of the expense. Nine-tenths of the expense is in clerk hire and in carriers and other expenses, including overhead charges, so that the clerk hire having gone up, and the carriers' salaries having gone up since 1907 about 100 per cent, the figures of those days as to first-class mail are too low, and there is not a profit to-day of probably more than 25 per cent on first-class mail. But that is a good, round profit.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. Is not the gentleman mistaken when he says that the salaries paid to the letter carriers and other post-office employees have been increased 100 per cent since 1907? I do not believe the increase is over 60 per cent, if that much.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, that is immaterial. You must remember that the law establishing the first increase was enacted in 1907, and those statistics relate to the time prior to that date. Then in 1912 there was another increase, and since then there have been later increases. I might have it too large, but at any rate there has been a material increase in the wages and compensation of clerks and carriers since the figures of 1907 were compiled. The only point I was trying to make was that if it cost 50 cents a pound for handling and transporting first-class mail in 1907, it would cost more than that now, and therefore there would be a smaller profit than there was then at the 2-cent rate.

A great deal has been said about the second-class rate. It strikes me that we are likely to have nearly a compensatory rate in 1921, when the farthest zone rate for advertising will be 10 cents a pound instead of 1 cent a pound, as it was before the increase was made a year or two ago.

There is one statement made in the Postmaster General's report with which I fully agree. That is that advertising matter should pay a rate sufficient to pay its cost. That is the reason he gives for these high rates for advertising contained in newspapers and magazines, which will be in force in 1921. But the Postmaster General, under the authority of the parcel-post act, reduced the postage on certain classes of articles, notably when he transferred books, including catalogues, from third-class mail, where they bore 1 cent for every 2 ounces, or 8 cents a pound, to the fourth-class mail, making it subject to the parcel-post rate, and therefore enjoying the extraordinary low rate for local and on first and second zones.

Now, there are millions and millions—probably 60,000,000—of catalogues sent out every year, weighing each 4 and 5 pounds, and the general way of that distribution by the large houses is to ship them to central points by freight and then redistribute them under the low rate in the first, second, and third zones, the rate being 5 cents for the first pound and 1 cent additional for the next zone, making a 5-pound catalogue carried for 9 cents. The Government used to get 8 cents a pound, or 40 cents, for carrying such catalogues. The excuse for making that change, giving to the mail-order house the right to distribute to the farmers and local people at 9 cents, was that the railway mail service was so high that there was no profit in it anyway. But under the space-plan law the Post Office Department has the right to ship all kinds of mail by freight, and the department does avail itself of it. In the last annual report it was shown that nearly 100,000,000 pounds—99,000,000 pounds—were shipped, and that the cost was less than a cent a pound.

Now, you see if this could be done with the blue-tag matter, magazines and things like that, it could be done with catalogues, and the Government would thereby make a profit.

In 1921 the rate of postage in the first and second zones for the 5-pound catalogue will be 9 cents, but for 5 pounds of advertising matter in a magazine or a newspaper it will be 10 cents, and there will be still more discrepancy in the 10 pounds, and so on; so that if it is not changed, the Government will be discriminating against the advertising in the newspapers, which is paid for by the local merchants and the moneys received by the local publishers very largely, as against the big merchant in New York or Chicago, who ships his catalogues by freight and then remails them to first, second, third, and fourth zones.

They will have a cheaper rate than the advertising contained in the newspapers, paid for by the pound. Now, manifestly that is unfair, and manifestly the Postmaster General did not intend such a discrimination, because at that time the zone law in regard to second-class rates was not in contemplation. So, as the Postmaster General has the authority to change that rate, I think he will do so. I do not like to have Congress meddle with the parcel-post rates, because we gave the Postmaster General the authority to do that; but if he does not equalize the rates of transportation for the advertising matter contained in second-class publications, so as to make those rates commensurate with those enjoyed by people who send catalogues, Congress will have to act. I have introduced a bill to that effect. However, I hope that when this discrepancy is pointed out the Postmaster General will restore the catalogues to the old third-class mail where they always belonged, being in reality printed matter and not books. By so doing we will get 40 cents where we now get 9 cents, plus, perhaps, 1 or 2 cents which it costs to ship to distributing points by freight, the same as they do the blue-tag matter. Now, that would add a revenue, I believe, of about $10,000,000. That would help to pay the salaries that we are increasing.

I have pointed out these reasons why we should so manage as to secure a sufficient revenue to pay these increased salaries.

In the face of the increased cost of hiring skilled employees we can not undertake to reduce postage in any direction, it seems to me. I would like to reduce postage. It would undoubtedly be a popular thing, but unless it can be established beyond a peradventure that a reduction will bring more revenue and will be profitable, I think we ought to frown upon it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Would not a reduction of postage from 2 cents to 1 cent do away with the distinction between letter mail and circular mail and throw all the circular mail into first-class postage?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. That is another point that I had never thought of; but in view of the immense volume of the circular mail matter it would be impossible to tell the difference. The third-class mail does not receive the attention that the first-class mail does. First-class mail, paying a larger postage than the others, receives special attention. If you will go down here to the terminus or the post office you will find that the letters are first cared for. They are worked sufficiently to be placed upon railway post-office cars, and there the railway postal clerks separate them and work them, so that in many cases on arriving at Chicago or New York they are ready to be delivered to the very carrier on his route, for the purpose of expediting that class of mail. But when you could not tell the difference, you would have to treat it all alike. You could not tell what was first class or what was third class. The suggestion which the gentleman made is a very valuable one, in my way of thinking, against the proposition to reduce first-class postage, because the tendency would be to slow up first-class mail by the addition of this immense volume of third-class mail. What the American people want is expedition, not of one letter in a thousand or one letter in ten thousand by flying machines, but expedition to the general public. It does not do the people much good for the mail of one man out of a thousand to be expedited a few hours. What is wanted is general expedition of the mail. We must legislate for the general benefit. I am very glad the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] made the suggestion he did, because it is one of the strongest arguments I have heard against a reduction of letter postage. I never thought of it before.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. In estimating post-office expenses and comparing them with the revenue is any allowance made for overhead charges, for depreciation and interest on investment? In the large cities the United States Government owns the post-office buildings. Is any account taken of what the interest on the investment will amount to and is it charged up against the operations of the Post Office Department?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is not charged up annually, but an account is kept of it.

Now, there is one thing more I want to say. I do not mean it as a partisan criticism upon the present incumbents of office, but I want to say it generally, and it is especially applicable to the present administration, that it is impossible to arrive at an intelligent conclusion in regard to the cost of each class of mail service and as to the revenue derived from it.

Now, there has been a great deal said as to first-class mail making 100 per cent, while other mail is carried at a very great loss, and some claim that there is a big profit on the fourth-class mail. Although Congress provided in the parcel-post law that the rates should be revised frequently, so that the revenues should equal the expense, it has never been done. There was an attempt to do it in 1916, but it was guesswork. The parcel-post law also provided that there should be a distinctive stamp; that the postage should be paid by a distinctive stamp. If that had been done, we would have known what the revenue was. But discretion was given to the Postmaster General to remove that provision, and so he changed it by abolishing the distinctive stamp, since which time no living soul within the department or outside the department can tell how much revenue there is from fourth-class matter. The only revenue that we can determine exactly is the revenue from second-class mail, because it is paid by the pound. It used to be 1 cent a pound, and all you had to do was to find the weight and multiply by 1 cent a pound. But now it is a little more difficult, because the cost varies, but the department knows how many pounds of second-class mail there are.

It has never been determined how much it cost. It has been stated that it cost 9 cents a pound and that there was 8 cents loss. That is based on the report of 1907, but the expense of second-class mail is largely made up of transportation, and transportation has gone down; we do not pay one-half of what we did 12 years ago.

There is no way of telling how many postage stamps are used upon letters, or first-class mail, because we use them for other articles, third and fourth class. There is no way of determining how much the revenue is on third-class matter because the same stamps are used on it. They have made no test and no count. We were supposed to be advised as to how much the aeroplane revenue would be because Congress in authorizing the air service gave to the Postmaster General authority to prescribe not more than 24 cents for an ounce. He prescribed several rates and finally came down to 6 cents. There was not a sufficient demand for the service at 6 cents and they needed ballast, and so they took the 2-cent mail and used it for ballast. The result was that whereas you and I paid 6 cents for the aeroplane service the man who only paid 2 cents got the same service as far as the letters were needed for ballast.

As long as you required a distinctive stamp it could not go without that stamp, but as soon as they used other mail for ballast you could not tell what the cost was.

The Harriman National Bank, of New York, when an aeroplane was burned up in Cleveland last year, lost letters containing valuable papers worth $63,000. That bank is evidently in ill luck, because six months ago another aeroplane burned up and they lost a large sum of money. They wrote to the department making an inquiry by what authority they carried mail for 2 cents regular rate when the law prescribed 6 cents. Reply came that it was discretionary with the Postmaster General to charge whatever he pleased. I took issue with that, because Congress authorized and the order was issued at 6 cents, and the Postmaster General did not have discretion to carry mail for 2 cents. When the attention of the department was called to the matter they abolished the extra postage.

They abolished, as I say, the distinctive stamp, and so, of course, there is no revenue from that special facility. The reason for this is that they say they can not go to the trouble of picking out the letters provided with a distinctive stamp. Yet they use a distinctive stamp for special delivery and get a straight delivery service. Therefore it seems to me practicable to pick out letters that have a distinctive stamp.

The result is that when you come to discuss the question of having each class of mail pay its way, when you come to consider whether you want first-class mail to pay more or less, when you come to decide what it costs to perform the service with reference to second-class or fourth-class mail, it is impossible to get any reliable information on the subject.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Has the gentleman any judgment as to how near they can estimate? What does it cost to carry first-class mail and second class and third and fourth?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think their estimates may be very close at times. It depends a great deal upon the estimator. I would not have much faith in the estimate of revenue based on calculations of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is, on truck routes?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. He calculated that he was making 80 cents out of every dollar. That is the biggest profit in any business that I have ever heard of. The trouble is that he was too enthusiastic.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Eliminating the trucks, what is the gentleman's judgment in respect to the others?

Mr. STEENERSON. It depends upon the man who conducts the investigation. If he proceeds with an open, an honest intention to ascertain the truth, the estimates may be very valuable and come within a small percentage of the facts. I understand they are making a count of the parcel post, counting the pieces and weighing them, and seeing how much postage is paid on them. They are doing this in the 50 largest post offices, and they are compiling these statistics. If that is done with the intention and fixed purpose of finding what the truth is, they will know what the revenues are; but then comes the next question, of how much is the expense—what is the expense of the parcel post? Can the gentleman tell—can anyone tell—what increase in the automobile vehicle service in the cities is due to the parcel post? We used to have a bill for screen-wagon service of $2,000,000 before the parcel post was inaugurated. Now the bill is over $10,000,000. Take, for instance, the quarters in New York. The parcel post has increased to such an enormous extent that it is a freight business, and the post-office stations in the city of New York especially are so crowded and the help must work in such cramped quarters that it is a disgrace to the Government. It is a good deal the same in Boston and Chicago. There is not space enough for them to work in. In this bill we have authorized an extension of the leasing period from 10 to 20 years. That will induce capital to construct better buildings. They are in great need of space in all these large cities. To build these buildings ourselves would cost hundreds of millions of dollars. All that is due to the enormous increase in the parcel post which is brought in there, brought to congested places of the city, where freight ought not to be handled. It ought to be provided for in some other way. Nobody knows how much we should charge up by reason of these things, how much should be charged as expense for rural delivery, and how much for city delivery, how much for clerk hire. If a person starts with a desire to show a profit, if he has a prejudice one way or the other, however honest he may be, there is plenty of room to show a profit of ten or twenty or thirty million dollars on the parcel post; and if there is a disposition to show a loss, I think it can be figured out that way.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Of course, the estimates of profits on the trucks by Mr. Blakslee about a year ago were rather unusual, and I do not suppose that he will ever make that mistake again.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not think it was a mistake. It was the estimate of a man carried away by his enthusiasm of feeding the world.

Mr. RAMSEYER. But the other activities of the Post Office Department have extended over years, and probably they are more accurate in arriving at the real cost and earnings than Mr. Blakslee was in the truck system.

Mr. STEENERSON. I hope so. How much time have I used, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 53 minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. I reserve the remainder of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the chairman of the committee if he will not move to rise at this hour. I have had two or three requests for time, but the gentlemen are not on the floor.

Mr. STEENERSON. I realize the difficulty, and I also realize the strenuous evening the gentlemen on the other side had at the Jackson dinner last night. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11578, the Post Office appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5818. An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 10847. An act granting the consent of Congress to Marion County, State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across the Pearl River, in Marion County, State of Mississippi;

H. R. 8084. An act granting to certain claimants the preferential right to purchase certain alleged public lands in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9947. An act to authorize J. L. Anderson and H. M. Duvall to construct a bridge across Great Pee Dee River at or near the town of Cheraw, S. C.;

H. R. 10558. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Connecticut River Railroad Co., its lessees, successors, and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts;

H. R. 8661. An act to authorize the Kingsdale Lumber Corporation to construct a bridge across Lumber River, near the town of Lumberton, N. C.;

H. R. 10135. An act for the construction of a bridge across Rock River at or near East Grand Avenue, in the city of Beloit, Wis.; and

H. R. 11025. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Tombigbee River near Iron Wood Bluff, in Itawamba County, Miss.

APPOINTMENT OF REGENTS FOR THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER appointed the following gentlemen to fill the vacancies on the Board of Regents for the Smithsonian Institution: Mr. GREENE of Vermont, Mr. PADGETT, Mr. ELSTON.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 10, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting reports from accounting officers of the department, showing what officers of the Government were delinquent in rendering their accounts for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 579); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, to pay claims for damages by naval vessels, adjusted by the Navy Department (H. Doc. No. 580); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required for current expenses of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 581); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation necessary to carry out the provisions of private act No. 10 (H. Doc. No. 582); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation required by the Coast Guard to pay a collision damage claim (H. Doc. No. 583); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting communication from the Secretary of War, submitting proposed legislation for inclusion in next deficiency bill authorizing the expenditure of the unexpended balance of the appropriation "Medical and hospital department, 1919," fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 584); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required for "Miscellaneous expenses, Bureau of Fisheries," fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 585); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of War, submitting a proposed paragraph of legislation for inclusion in the next deficiency bill, authorizing expenditures from prior appropriations for the construction of storage facilities for ordnance stores, including the purchase of land (H. Doc. No. 586); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institute, for the purpose of refunding income tax paid on a gift to the institution by Charles L. Freer, deceased, of Detroit, Mich. (H. Doc. No. 587); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 11602) for the erection of a public building at the city of Susanville, Calif., and appropriating money therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

762. By Mr. JAMES: Petition of Italian Citizens' League, of Laurium, Mich., Societe Fratelli Nandiera, of Bessemer, Mich., and of the Italio-American Federation, of Laurium, Mich., protesting against the passage of the Johnson immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

763. By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Petition of Joseph Callaner and 36 others, of Pawtucket, R. I., urging passage of Senate bill 1699 and House bill 3149; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

764. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Baltimore, Md., opposing the legislation in the Cummins bill that will prevent strikes if conditions warrant; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

765. Also, petition of Mothers' Club, of Baltimore, Md., favoring the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

766. Also, petition of William H. Myers, Rosedale, Kans., favoring the Raker bill (H. R. 5), the volunteer officers' retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

767. Also, petition of Rotary Club of Baltimore, Md., favoring the Davey sedition bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

768. Also, petition of the Lime and Cement Exchange of Baltimore, Md., favoring House bill 10650; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

769. Also, petition of Baltimore Federation of Labor, favoring House bill 3404, to send a minister and consuls to the republic of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

770. Also, petition of H. B. Wilcox, of Baltimore, Md., favoring the Cummins railroad bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

771. Also, petition of Local Union No. 240, International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers, and Helpers, C. L. V. Whiteman, president, opposing the Cummins-Esch railroad bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

772. Also, petition of Jeffrey Quante Post, No. 20, American Legion, favoring House bill 5545, entitled "To provide homes for soldiers"; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

773. Also, petition of Maryland Commandery of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, favoring the Raker bill (H. R. 5); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

774. Also, petition of R. B. Norment, jr., assistant surgeon, United States Public Health Service, favoring the Crago bill (H. R. 10846); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

775. Also, petition of W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the Anderson amendment to the Esch railroad bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

776. Also, petition of Oriole Lodge, No. 214, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Baltimore, Md., opposing the Cummins railroad bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

777. By Mr. MACGREGOR: Petition of National Industrial Conference Board, favoring the Cummins railroad bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

778. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, protesting against the continuance of discriminatory tariffs from so-called central freight territory to Gulf and South Atlantic ports; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

779. Also, petition of American Federation of Railroad Workers, protesting against the passage of the Cummins-Esch bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

780. Also, petition of Abraham Lincoln Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, protesting against loans to foreign nations; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

781. By Mr. SINCLAIR: Petition of a committee composed of delegates appointed by the Legislatures of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota, members of the Flood Control Commission of North Dakota, president of the Tri-State Flood Control Association, and president of the North Dakota Flood Control Association, asking aid in the matter of flood control in the Red River Valley of the North; to the Committee on Flood Control.

782. Also, petition of Prairie View Grange, No. 24, Beulah, N. Dak., protesting against the action of the National Grange in opposing the Plumb plan of railroad operation, and declaring for the Plumb plan as the only plan under which railroad rates will not be increased; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

783. By Mr. VARE: Petition of Joseph Plunkett Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, asking for recognition of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

784. By Mr. WOOD of Indiana: Petition of residents of Lafayette, Tippecanoe County, Ind., urging the enactment of a law to retire the civil-service employees of the United States Government; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 10, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, give us Thy gracious favor for the task of this day. We can not shut our eyes to the vast responsibilities of this hour, to the far-reaching influence of every word that we utter and every plan and purpose that we have. Give us a divine inspiration that we may make the moral distinctions, that we may measure the moral forces, that we may understand the movement of God in this our day; and give us faith to put ourselves at Thy command. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gronna	McKellar	Robinson
Beckham	Hale	McNary	Sheppard
Borah	Harris	Moses	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Harrison	Myers	Smith, Md.
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Spencer
Curtis	Kenyon	Page	Sterling
Dillingham	Keyes	Phipps	Trammell
Elkins	Kirby	Pittman	Williams
Fernald	McCumber	Pomerene

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent from the Senate, due to illness.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER], being confined to his home by illness.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] is detained from the Senate by illness in his family.

I wish also to announce that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. Call the roll of absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. COLT, Mr. FRANCE, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. NELSON, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts, and Mr. WATSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. NEWBERRY, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. LODGE, Mr. KING, Mr. NUGENT, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. DIAL, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. WALSH of Montana, Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. JOHNSON of California entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1726) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 9281. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 10515. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 11310. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 11554. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 5818. An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 8084. An act granting to certain claimants the preferential right to purchase certain alleged public lands in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8661. An act to authorize the Kingsdale Lumber Corporation to construct a bridge across Lumber River, near the town of Lumberton, N. C.;

H. R. 9947. An act to authorize J. L. Anderson and H. M. Duvall to construct a bridge across Great Pee Dee River at or near the town of Cheraw, S. C.;

H. R. 10135. An act for the construction of a bridge across Rock River at or near East Grand Avenue, in the city of Beloit, Wis.;

H. R. 10558. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Connecticut River Railroad Co., its lessees, successors, and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts;

H. R. 10847. An act granting the consent of Congress to Marion County, State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across the Pearl River, in Marion County, State of Mississippi; and

H. R. 11025. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Tombigbee River near Iron Wood Bluff, in Itawamba County, Miss.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented the memorial of Dr. C. H. Mayo, of Rochester, Minn., remonstrating against the adoption of the provision in the so-called Esch railroad bill relating to the issuance of passes to local surgeons along the line when needed for traveling, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. NEWBERRY presented a memorial of S. M. Stevens Lodge, No. 150, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of Marquette, Mich., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins railroad bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, Michigan Federation of Gleaners, State Association of Farmers Clubs and Labor Organizations, held in Detroit, Mich., favoring a two-year extension of Government control of railroads, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PAGE presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Montpelier, Vt., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins railroad bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3683) to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes" (Rept. No. 362); and

A bill (H. R. 10331) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918 (Rept. No. 363).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 547) authorizing the enlistment of non-English speaking citizens and aliens, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 364) thereon.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 20) to provide for the payment for certain lands within the former Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana (Rept. No. 365); and

A bill (S. 2962) for the relief of Nick Sitch and Billie H. Evashanks (Rept. No. 366).

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 604) for the relief of Delilah Siebenaler, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 795) to provide for the disposition of public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the reclamation laws, and which are no longer needed in connection with said laws, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 367) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bill and joint resolution, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3138) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey to the Great Northern Railway Co. certain lands for stockyards, and for other purposes, at Browning Station, in the State of Montana (Rept. No. 368); and

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 30) to permit the disposition of certain lands in Montana ceded by the Crow Indians (Rept. No. 369).

Mr. KENYON, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise, and their return to civil employment, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3610) for the relief of William S. Britton, formerly second lieutenant of Infantry, who has been erroneously dropped from the rolls of the United States Army, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 370) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota:

A bill (S. 3693) granting a pension to Gertrude A. Robinson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3694) granting an increase of pension to Helen D. Longstreet; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 3695) for the relief of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 3696) to change the time for holding court in Laurinburg, eastern district of North Carolina (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 143) requiring the several departments of the Government to pay for advertising their business matters; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3451) authorizing the United States Shipping Board to adjust the equitable claims of wooden-ship builders arising out of the prosecution of the war, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

ADDRESS BY DIRECTOR GENERAL HINES.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial published in the New York Sun under date of Friday, January 9, 1920, making comment upon the address recently delivered by the Director General of Railroads.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DIRECTOR GENERAL HINES FOR A FEW RAILROAD SYSTEMS WITH DIVISION OF EXCESS PROFITS.

"Director General Hines's clear and vigorous treatment of the railroad problem before the association of the bar is a matter of prime importance for more reasons than the fact that he is the present head of the Government-operated transportation system of the Nation. He is a highly developed, technical railroad man of many years of familiarity with financing, building, operating, and expanding carriers under private management. For more than a generation he fought the battles of the companies. In recent months he has had to fight the battles of the roads, their workers, and the public, not to mention the United States Treasury. And after it all, this bred-in-the-bone railroad man declares these explicit conclusions based upon his practical experience in all the capacities in which he has served:

"I believe that there must be fundamental changes which will consolidate the railroads into a few great systems. I believe that the public and labor, as well as capital, must be represented upon the management of these systems. I believe that a definite standard for rates must be established and that earnings clearly in excess of a reasonable return must be provided and must go largely to providing adequate reserves to take care of years of depression and at the same time enough of the excess must be left with the company earning it to provide adequate stimulus for efficiency. In my opinion, if any effort be made to return the railroads to private control without the fundamental reconstruction which I advise, the result will be progressively disappointing, and in a few years of dissatisfaction of the public will manifest itself through an insistent demand for a radically different plan which is not likely then to stop short of outright Government ownership.

"Mr. Hines is right in his view that American railroads can never give satisfactory service as a whole, can never become financially sound as a whole, can not keep up with the growth of the country, can not continue as private institutions except as a very few great systems naturally consolidated, closely coordinated, and centrally controlled. He is right because in this age big things—and the American railway system is incomparably big—can be done well only in big ways. The railroads which long were in advance of the growth of the country are not now keeping up with it and can not keep up with it as forty-eleven different fractions of a national transportation system at cross purposes and with conflicting policies. They can not get the best and most use out of carriers, out of trackage, out of terminals, out of traffic offices, out of overhead fixtures. They can not give the best and most service to the public which will determine the ultimate fate of the roads, big and little, good, bad, and indifferent.

"Mr. Hines is right in his view that because of their need of public confidence and support, because of their need of full cooperation by the workers, because of their submission to Government rate making and other regulation, there must be participation in the railway problems by not only the owners but the workers and the public.

"This does not mean that the public and the workers shall be partners in the sense that the term is now bandied about by strike leaders and political agitators—a partnership to share the profits but not the losses. It does mean that they shall get into the thing in a way to enable them to reach a common understanding of what must be done for the roads and what, while it is necessary for the roads, is equally necessary for the workers and for the public.

"Mr. Hines is right in his views that an immovable obstacle in the way of getting general rate increases adequate to the needs of the poor roads is the fact that some few roads are making and always do make high dividends and rich surpluses. Any rate that would put the destitute roads of a region on their feet would make the rich roads doubly and trebly rich. The public always will be unwilling to approve and pay rate increases which pour forth showers of gold into the laps of those roads already opulent while merely rescuing the great majority of the roads from poverty row.

"Undoubtedly this proposal of Mr. Hines will be very unwelcome to some railroad men. It will be unwelcome to them, although Mr. Hines urges the necessity of giving roads enough of the excess earnings beyond a reasonable return to be a powerful stimulus to initiative, economy, and efficiency. Undoubtedly also his suggestion will be a shock to others who sincerely believe that if it is not legally unjust it is wrong in principle and immoral in practice to take from the road or the man what is honestly earned by diligence, competence, and merit to give to the road or the man that, for whatever reason, does not earn or can not earning a living.

"But it is a condition, not a theory, which confronts the railroads. It is a hard, cold fact of this condition that the Government is intrenched in the very center of the American railroad system, as the owners themselves are not and never were. It is a hard, cold fact that the Government determines how they may operate and how they may not, where they may go, and where they may not, what they may charge and what they may not. It is a hard, cold fact that the Government in its control of the roads, its exercise of the functions essential to their welfare, its authority to feed them or starve them, its power of life and death over them, is in effect the overshadowing senior partner, so to speak, of this vast national business institution.

"And it is a hard, cold fact of this condition that the roads, which are unwilling to give up any of their excess profits, will not get the rates to make those excess profits unless there is some such division. The common-sense question for them is not whether they ought to be able to keep what they get, but whether they ever will be permitted to get it unless some of the excess beyond a reasonable return is yielded by them. They never will get it else.

"Consider the alternative. Not many men will question the power and the right of the Government to tax out of the railroads for the purpose of public revenue their excess earnings beyond a reasonable return. The Government could lay a revenue tax that would take from all railroads every penny beyond such reasonable return. But this, in truth, would kill that incentive which Mr. Hines declares is necessary to efficiency. It would stimulate extravagance and waste. It would put a premium on failure instead of success. In the end, it would degrade every efficient, rich, and powerful road to the low level of the poorest and meanest.

"Director General Hines proposes a national railway program which broad-minded and prescient Americanism can back—a program to which all the railroads, no less than the country, sooner or later will be glad to come."

ARTICLE BY FRANK I. COBB (S. DOC. NO. 175).

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed as a public document an article by Frank I. Cobb, editorial writer of the New York World, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 5, 1920, pages 1025 to 1028.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR UNDERWOOD.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered by my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] before the chamber of commerce and the general public in Birmingham, Ala., Friday, January 2, 1920.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The speech is as follows:

SPEECH OF HON. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD BEFORE THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND THE GENERAL PUBLIC, BIRMINGHAM, ALA., FRIDAY, JANUARY 2, 1920.

"Senator UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, ladies, and gentlemen, I wish to thank you for this splendid audience that greets me to-night. I am not here to deliver an oration. I am not here to please you with metaphor or honeyed words. I came here to talk to you to-night about a practical detail of legislation that confronts the whole American people.

"The Senate of the United States has passed a bill relating to the transportation system of America that, if it becomes a law, will mark a new era in the history of the American Republic in at least one respect. The era of war between capital and labor and the great transportation lines of this country will cease. The era of settlement by reason, by arbitration, by the law of social justice will have begun. There are many questions involved in the bill that the Senate has passed, and I am going to take the chance of wearying you by trying to explain the terms of this bill. It is a practical question, but it is a home question. It does not make any difference whether you are the man that sits at the lever, who moves the great transportation system of America across the continent, or whether you are the woman that sits at home, nurses your baby by the home fireside—this bill affects you both. This bill relates to the industrial life of the Nation. It relates to the happiness and peace of the home life of the Nation. America can not live without a transportation system. It is the artery that throws the blood from the heart of the Nation to each separate part of the national body, establishes life throughout the whole body politic, and you must look at this question from that standpoint.

LEGISLATION A PRACTICAL QUESTION.

"This bill is not in entire accord with my views, although I supported it in detail; but in passing let me say there are few great bills that have passed the Congress of the United States in the 24 years I have represented this immediate constituency that in all their details have met with my approval. Great legislative enactments are matters of compromise, and men who desire to be constructive in legislation must accept the best obtainable to accomplish the desired result and can not expect that every detail of legislation will meet with their approval.

"There are many problems embraced in the so-called Cummins bill that it is not necessary for me to go into to-night, and if I did attempt to discuss all its details we would not be through before the sun rises in the morning. There are many pages devoted to changes of organic law suggested by the Interstate Commerce Commission. There is incorporated within the pages of this bill the entire and absolute control of the issuance of railroad securities for the future, the regulation of the issuance of railroad securities so that in the future there shall be no more so-called watered stock; so that the money that is invested in the railroads and must earn interest in the future must be money that is actually invested for the benefit of the public.

"There has been practically no opposition to these features of the bill. Public sentiment has grown and drifted until almost by universal acclaim these features of the bill are recognized by the public as necessary in the public interest and have been accepted. It might be of interest to you to tell the details, but I am not going to detain you to-night by going into them, because I want to go to the battle line of the bill, the contested part of the bill, the questions where men differ, and give you my views for my support of the bill on these features.

THE NEWLANDS RESOLUTION.

"This proposal for solution of the railroad problem is nothing new. It is not worked out overnight. Nearly six years ago I was first nominated to go to the Senate. For nearly five years I have been a Member of the Senate, and my very first suggestion when I became a Member of the Senate was that a joint commission should be appointed to work out the railroad problem and see if we could not place it on a solvent and safe working basis in the interest of the public. It was known as the Newlands resolution. Senator Newlands was chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee. I wrote the resolution and asked Senator Newlands to introduce it. It was passed by both Houses, and a joint commission to work out the railroad problem was appointed. I was a member of that commission. We had many hearings; we gave long consideration to financial, operating, and labor problems. But before we reached any conclusion or final determination of the question the Great War came on and the railroads came under governmental operation, and the work of our commission of necessity ceased. The men who were on that commission, though, set upon the Interstate Committees of the House and Senate and wrote this legislation that has now gone to conference. So they were educated on the subject before it was actually taken up.

"You will recall that a year ago the President of the United States notified the Congress that unless it desired to legislate before he returned the railroads to their owners, the war being over, he was prepared to return them on the 1st of March, 1919. It was impossible for Congress to write legislation by the 1st of March, 1919, and the members of the committees of the two Houses represented that fact to the President; and then he said that he would postpone action until the 1st of January, 1920, and when the first of this year came the bill was in constructive condition, so, by proclamation issued a day or two ago, the President has postponed the return of the railroads to their owners until the 1st day of March of this year. That proclamation can not be recalled. It was authorized under law and can be made but once, and whether we legislate or do not legislate the railroads will go back to their owners on the 1st day of the coming March, unless Congress fixes a prior date.

PROLONGED STUDY OF THE PROBLEM.

"A year ago the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate commenced its hearings on this bill. For months it heard the railway executives, the shipper, the business man, the representative of labor, all appearing before the committee, and for days and weeks and months their various views were reflected into the committee. About the 1st day of September the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate reported what is known as the Cummins bill, because Senator CUMMINS, of Iowa, is chairman of the committee, and introduced the bill. The bill was considered and debated by the Senate until the 20th day of December, when it was passed by the Senate and went to conference between the two Houses.

"Now, my purpose in giving this introduction is merely to show you that the 17 men who sat on this committee were thoroughly informed on this subject; that every angle in reference to this legislation had been brought to their attention. There are 17 men on the committee. On the day the bill was reported to the Senate two of them were absent, leaving 15 men present, and out of the 15 men, coming from the various States of the Union, the bill, in practically the form that it was passed by the Senate of the United States, was reported to the Senate by a vote of 14 to 1 from that committee, 14 members of the committee voting for the bill, Senator LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin, casting the dissenting vote.

"We do not contend that this is perfect legislation. The Congress of the United States never passed perfect legislation. Perfect legislation can only be evolved in time; but I think this legislation meets the equation.

LABOR, FINANCE, AND THE PUBLIC.

"There are two paramount sections in that bill. There are many of them, but I am going to confine my remarks to-night to two. One is section 6, that involves finance, and one is section 29, and the immediately following sections that involve labor. And when you say finance, and when you say labor, you have the whole railroad problem before you, except one other word, and that is the public—the man who pays the bill. Money, labor, and the public! There was a time in the history of the development of railroads when the main factors involved in the problem were the capital and the labor. The contentions were between capital and labor. But to-day the great American Republic has become the vital living force in this question that can not be overlooked in any just settlement of the problems involved.

"I am going to spend a few minutes, first, in outlining to you the financial side of the problem, and then I shall discuss at some greater length the labor problems involved. Section 6 of this bill relates to finance. Under the old system of Government regulation of railroads, you know in the beginning when Commodore Vanderbilt established one of the first great consolidated systems of railroads in the country, capital was the all-dominating factor. Capital could charge what it pleased for the transportation of freight, could order labor to do what it wanted to—could handle the whole situation without limitation. But since that day two great organizations have begun to function in the transportation system of the country. One is the Government and the other is organized labor.

"Four decades ago the Congress of the United States started to regulate the railroads, and in 1906 passed a bill that completed the direct control of the railroads, so far as freight rates were concerned. Organized labor commenced maybe five decades ago, certainly four decades ago; I can not remember the actual date. It was weak in the beginning, and grew and grew until it became a more powerful factor in the operating equation than the capital that owned the railroads.

THE RATE-MAKING PROBLEM.

"We are regulating railroads to-day in the interest of the shipper by regulating the freight rate for each piece of freight. Take this district. Pig iron is your great product. The cost of carrying a ton of pig iron from Birmingham to Boston is not fixed by the general manager down here at the railroad office. Of course, I am talking now as if the Government were not at present running the railroads, as if they were under private control. The rates are fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the toll that you have to pay to carry a ton of pig iron to Boston is $5. It does not make any difference whether you go to the Louisville & Nashville station or the Southern station or the Seaboard Air Line station, you pay the same price for carrying a ton of pig iron to Boston. So it is with a carload of feathers or a package of silk or anything else, the Government fixes the rate. Now, let me ask you a question: Suppose you are on the strongest railroad in the South with your town and your business—a railroad that has dense traffic and high earnings and is able to supply you with all the cars you want and give you adequate service. Are you any more entitled to live and carry on your business from a public standpoint than the man who lives on a railroad necessary in the public interest, necessary to the development of the State, but enjoying a lighter traffic, and therefore to be denominated as a weak road? He is a citizen of Alabama or a citizen of the southern country or of the Nation. He has developed a coal mine or a farm or a factory or a grocery store. He wants to live and do business. Because fate has thrown him in a territory of light traffic and you are in a territory of dense traffic, do you think you ought to have any exclusive right to adequate railway service with which to get your goods to the ultimate market of consumption and he not have a corresponding right? Of course, all that depends upon whether his railroad can live and function and do business; and that depends on whether it can finance itself. If it can not finance itself, the development of the South and of the Nation and the fate of existing communities is restricted to a few railroads enjoying unusual advantages.

"Now, the difficulty that confronted the Congress of the United States was this: Here is 'A' Railroad that started out in the beginning and wandered from one town to another. It was not built on a direct line, but it was built because one town wanted to connect with another, and it connected with another, and then they were joined together in one system. It went over mountains and hillsides; it went by circuitous routes; it built up the country. Then came along 'B' Railroad, after great commerce in the general territory was established, and built a direct line under modern engineering practice, avoiding the hills and building tunnels and making a short line. Now, bear this in mind: Eighty per cent of the revenue of all the railroads is derived from the long haul, the competitive haul, and only 20 per cent from local noncompetitive business. So that you see that a railroad, to live, must for its necessary return look to its competitive business—generally the long haul. It costs the 'A' Railroad much more to carry its freight to the final market of disposition, the railroad that was built under adverse conditions, than it does 'B' Railroad, that was built by modern methods and goes a direct line. Both are necessary in the public interest. Both must survive. And yet they must carry freight at the same rate, because if 'B' Railroad carries freight more cheaply than 'A' Railroad all of the through freight goes over 'B' Railroad, and 'A' Railroad will starve to death. So far as the loss of capital is concerned, that might not be so serious. You might say, 'Sacrifice the man who made a bad investment'; but, my friends, you sacrifice the man who made a bad investment in railroading only by sacrificing the railroad and business and happiness of the thousands and hundreds of thousands of people who live along that line. Their business must be made junk. Their opportunity to reach the ultimate market to dispose of their products will be destroyed if you destroy the road. And that was one of the problems that confronted Congress.

"There has been great pressure on the Interstate Commerce Commission in the last two or three decades for lower rates, or against any raise in rates, and if an active railroad with heavy traffic controlling heavy exchange traffic and heavy divisions of rates was making what seemed to be undue profits, the demand was that the rates on freight should come down or remain down, for higher rates would give it greater profits. Its condition was taken as the standard; it was held as the example, and when the rates came down or remained down on the strong road the weak road went into the hands of a receiver, the weak competitive road. Now, that is the great financial problem that has confronted Congress in all these months.

A NEW TEST.

"But we have proposed a new system. It has been criticized, because anything that is new is subjected to criticism, and properly so. You understand that the old basis of regulation of railroads was based on the effort to determine what was a just and reasonable charge for the transportation of a ton of pig iron from Birmingham to Boston, or a bale of feathers or cotton, or something else. What was reasonable and just? That means what was reasonable for the cost of transportation to the carrier and just to the public. But we found we could not leave it on that basis. There were some few roads that were successfully running and making money by reason of peculiar conditions. A large percentage of them were barely living and not giving adequate service to the public, and that is why you took them over for Federal operation during the war, at great expense. Conditions had choked off most of the roads in the country, and when the war came on there was no agency or relief that could put life into them and make them function and carry the soldiers, carry the raw material, and carry on the Nation's business during the war except the Government itself; and it has cost you hundreds of millions of dollars, because your legislation had choked off the majority of the roads before the war came on, and they were unable to meet the stress of war conditions.

"Now, the problem that confronts the Congress is to turn these roads back so that all roads necessary in the public interest can function and all serve the public, whether the public lives on the lighter traffic road or the strong road. So we have changed the basis of rate making. The country is divided now into three rate-making districts, the western, southern, and northern. We have said that what is fair to the railroads in the way of return on its capital should be a just return on the fair value of its property. You understand I said property, not stock. So that we have provided that the basis of freight rates in each district shall be adjusted so as to produce a return of 5½ per cent on the fair value of the railway property in the rate district. In other words, if the value of the railroad property—the real value now, not the watered stock—if the real value of the railroads in the southern district is $5,000,000,000—and that is approximately about right—the return that these railroads, not individually, but as a whole, in this southern district are to be entitled to earn is as nearly as practicable 5½ per cent on $5,000,000,000; it would be something between $260,000,000 and $270,000,000—5½ per cent.

"Do you think that is unjust? You can buy an untaxed Government bond on the New York Stock Exchange to-day at a price that will yield 5 per cent. It sells enough below par to pay you 5 per cent, with valuable tax exemptions. Do you think you can make these railroads function unless you give that much—5 per cent—to investors in railway securities? Now, they do not get it if they do not earn it. Many of the roads will not earn it; they must work for it and earn it through efficiency if they get it; but on that basis of 5½ per cent the railroads will have a fair chance. Before the war, or the three years immediately preceding the war, the railroads had an average earning capacity of 5.22 per cent in the aggregate investment, and if this bill goes through they will in the aggregate have a right to earn—that is, their freight rates will be based on a yield of 5½, or 5.50, or an increase of twenty-eight one-hundredths of 1 per cent, or about $50,400,000 for all of the railroads of the United States. Now, that is not an unreasonable increase when you consider the scale on which everything else has increased, and the increased interest which must be paid to attract investments. Now, that is net; you would pay a good deal more than that in freight rates. That is a net increase, not a gross increase. Of course, all increase in wage, all increase in coal, all increase in steel rails, in costs, goes into gross; but the railroads as a whole would get an increase of $50,000,000 in net; and it will cost more than $50,000,000 to make up to railway investors for the increased cost of money; or, you might say, for the depreciation of the value of money; and the increased value of everything else, for a ton of cotton or iron or merchandise will buy more transportation to-day than ever before in the history of the railroads.

"But we did not stop there. Some of these railroads will not earn 5½ per cent on the fair value of their property devoted to public use. Some of them will earn more. We said heretofore that a railroad could earn all it could make. We now put a limitation upon its excess earnings. We have said that a railroad's earning capacity could be 6 per cent on its value, with a graduated proportion of any excess. If it is undercapitalized and earns 6 per cent on the fair value of its property, it will be more than 6 per cent on its capital stock. If it is overcapitalized, it will be less than 6 per cent; and then when its earnings goes to 6 per cent on real value, we have said that it can earn one-half of the earnings between 6 and 7, or one-half of 1 per cent more; and when it goes above 7 per cent, it can only keep for itself one-fourth of what it earns over 6 per cent. The balance has to go into a Government fund, a Government fund in the interest of the public, a Government fund that can be loaned the railroads, weak or strong, that have to borrow money in order that they may compete with the great lenders of money in New York and hold down the price of interest, because you know you—the public—have got to pay that interest. You pay it. The railroad can not run unless you do pay it; and then the fund can be used to be invested by a Government board or commission in buying locomotives and cars, and equipment of all kinds and renting it to the weaker roads or the roads that need it whether they are weak or strong. That is in the interest of the public. One of the great problems that you have to contend with is lack of cars, lack of facilities to get your product to the market. Under this bill no longer could it be said that one great concern in America can hold all the ice cars, the refrigerator cars, because if they try to make a monopoly of it the Government would build some and furnish them where the public needed them, wherever congestion or scarcity might arise. That is in the interest of the people.

INCENTIVE NOT DESTROYED.

"Now, there is complaint that we are limiting the earning capacity of these roads. We have given them the incentive to go on. There is no competition in rates now. There is only competition in service; but as this bill would allow them to earn one-half they earn between 6 and 7 per cent and one-quarter of 1 per cent above 7 per cent we would still hold out the inducement for competition in service. But as the Government under this bill would direct the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States that it shall levy freight rates on the public that will enable the railroads to earn—not on their capital stock but on their real value—to the extent of 5½ per cent, that is practically assuring the aggregate railway investment out of your pocket, Mr. Shipper, whether represented by issues of stock, if issued at real value, or by their bonds, if issued at real value, a return every year; and if the Government fixes a reasonable return for them so that they can live and function, it is but just and right that the Government shall say how far they shall have the privilege of earning out of the business of the American people.

THE GREAT MUTUAL AND FIDUCIARY INSTITUTIONS.

"Now, I want to say this: Some people contend that section 6 is not a wise provision. You know that under the old system the railroads can't go on without breaking down, because they broke down before, and they are in worse condition now than they were before the war. If they had to go on now without any further legislation, you wouldn't have railroads; there would be no use talking about strikes. If they had to go on without this legislation, there wouldn't be any money to pay the man who sits in the cab of the engine. You have to have financial legislation if you are going to run these railroads.

"This legislation would put them on their feet financially. Why do I say that? The great owners of the railroads are not Judge Lovett, who is the head of the Harriman system, nor Mr. Smith, who is probably one of the ablest railroad men that has ever been in this country, the head of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. They do not own the railroads. Most of the railway executives own mighty little stock in them. They run them. Who owns these railroads? The great holders of railroad securities in America are the insurance companies, the savings banks, and the great mutual institutions of America—universities and charities. My friend, if you have an insurance policy to-day to protect your wife and children in case of your death, on the average—I am speaking in averages—25 per cent of the assets that stand behind your insurance policy is railroad securities. So this is a problem that comes to you as well as the public, as the real owners of these securities.

"Now, why do I say that section 6 will enable these railroads to function and do business? It is not because I know, because I am not any more of a financier than you are; but if you have noticed the New York papers recently you will see a public statement signed by Mr. Kingsley, the head of the New York Life Insurance Co.; by Mr. Haley Fiske, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.; by Mr. John J. Pulleyn, head of the greatest mutual savings institution in the country; Mr. W. D. Van Dyke, of the Northwestern Mutual; Mr. Louis F. Butler, of the Travelers; and Mr. George K. Johnson, of the Penn Mutual, acting as a subcommittee of the heads of the great fiduciary institutions to lay their case before the public and the Senate.

"And with these men have joined others in similar positions of trust, enjoying the confidence of the Government and the public and representing the ownership of the great bulk of railroad securities, running into billions and billions of dollars, protecting the happiness of the children and the women and old age. These trustees are entitled to speak for their great trusts.

"Now, what did they say? They said that this Cummins bill ought to be passed, and they indorsed section 6. They are the men who have invested the money that you put in to protect your life insurance policy. They are the men that are selected by you in these mutual life insurance companies to represent your interest. They have put it in railroad securities which used to be the prime investments in this country, and they have said that if section 6 of this bill goes through it will fairly and reasonably protect you from disaster. It is not going to be a great return, but it will protect you from disaster, and they advocate it. Now, I have got confidence in these men. They represent institutions which own the securities. Those men are not gambling in securities. Their companies buy them for permanent investment. Those men are trustees for you. It is probable that they stand as trustees for nine out of ten men in this audience to-night in their insurance policies; and they say to me that if this bill goes through it will put these railroads on a fairly solvent basis. Do you not think that is a pretty good basis for me to cast your vote on? I think so; and I think that if this bill goes through it will not only put your interest in that railroad security, represented by your insurance policies, on a solvent basis, but it is going to give you a railroad system in this country that can function and do business, and carry your freights to the ultimate markets of the world, and allow you to develop your great manufacturing enterprises, and carry the products of your farm and your factory to the Orient and to the Occident; and if you don't financially sustain this great railroad system disaster faces the American people.

"I might go on and discuss the financial problem at greater length, but in a brief way I have given you a summary of what it means.

LABOR PROVISIONS.

"Now, I want to come down to the other problem, and that is labor. It is just as vital to you as finance. It doesn't make any difference whether you be an engineer or a railroad conductor, or whether you run a grocery store in Birmingham, or are at the head of a great steel plant. Labor functioning properly in the great railroad system in this country is necessary to the life of the Nation, so necessary to the life of the Nation that when the time came when the men of America had to save the world from the Hun you told the man who was engaged in railroad labor he need not go to the firing line; that it was more necessary for him to stay on his job. Some of them went and performed gallant service for the country; but they went as volunteers, not by the compulsion of your Government, because your Government realized that this great railroad system must function and go on. That is how vital transportation is to the country, so we have taken a very radical step in the labor world in this bill.

"I am not surprised that labor leaders have criticized it. It would be strange if they had not when first written in this bill and before the rank and file of labor had thought it out. But I think the step that the Senate has taken is necessary, not only for the protection of the American public but for the protection of railway labor itself.

"I told you a while ago the provisions of this bill were reported from the Senate committee, 15 men voting, by a vote of 14 to 1. That 14 to 1 vote carried the labor provisions as well as the financial provision of the bill. A motion was made in the Senate of the United States to strike out the labor provisions in this bill and was defeated by a vote of 47 to 25. Now, that may not mean so much to you. Labor is a very powerful factor in politics, and labor leaders had come before the committee of the Senate and absolutely rejected the provisions of this bill. The Senators of the United States are elected to office by labor as well as by farmers and business men, and they are slow to defy the mandate of a great class unless they feel sure that they are right. And by a vote of 47 to 25 they refused to strike out of this bill its labor features. Now, I think, whether you represent labor or capital or the public, that that should give you cause for consideration. Why, I see men in this audience whom I have known for 35 or 40 years—men who have represented the great labor interests of this district. I don't think that any man there can say, although I have not always agreed with them, that my general attitude against labor in this district has been unfair. Six years ago, when I was a candidate for the Senate, I had some splendid indorsements from the very men who do not agree with me in this position. My friends, does it occur to you—I don't think I am a coward, nor do I think you charge me with that. Neither am I a fool, and I don't think you will charge me with being a fool. I have no desire to antagonize a vast number of the constituency that I have represented here in this county and who have honored me as representative of this district for 20 years unless there is some weighty reason for my doing so and unless I believed there was weighty reason for my doing so.

THE PRECEDENT OF 1916.

"Yet I want to make a confession to you. I am probably more responsible for the labor clause in the Cummins bill than any man in the Congress of the United States, because I first proposed it in the Senate. When the Adamson bill came before the Congress of the United States in 1916 it came there to avoid a great railway strike. The labor and the representatives of the railroads—I won't say labor and capital, because capital had little to say about it; it was the management of the railroads and the labor—could not agree. The President of the United States was appealed to and he could not bring them together, and, finally, labor itself asked the Congress of the United States to solve the problem by Federal statute. Now, some people deny that. One of the leaders of the brotherhoods in my office a week or two ago denied that proposition. 'Ah,' he said, 'but they had not done so officially'; that they had not officially asked the Congress of the United States to solve this problem by a statute; that there was nothing on their books to authorize such action. I said, 'Mr. Wells, you came into this office and asked me to vote for the Adamson bill, and a committee from the Birmingham district representing railroad labor came to Senator BANKHEAD'S office, met Senator BANKHEAD and myself and asked us to support the Adamson bill. We did not ask you for your credentials as to whether you had passed a resolution in your organization to favor the Adamson bill, but you told us that you were the representatives of the four brotherhoods, and you asked us to vote for it. Were we not justified in presuming that your organization was for it?' If they had not stood for it, and if the President of the United States had not asked for it the Adamson bill never would have become a law. What did they ask for? They asked for the Government of the United States to fix the rate of wages and the hours of work. It came from labor, and it was going their way.

PRECEDENTS MUST STAND.

"When men make a precedent they can not deny it. They must stand by their own handiwork; and if there are any railroad men in this hall to-night—I know there are—you know that every word I have just uttered is true. You were right in asking for it when a strike became inevitable. The peace and the happiness of the Nation were threatened. There was nothing that could save it but the Government, and the time had come when the Government should function, and it did function. But I knew then that the Adamson law did not solve the problem; I knew then that if the final decision of governmental authority was right as a temporary expedient, it was right that the Government should fix the rates of wages whenever and as often as the disagreements between management and employees became irreconcilable. I knew that we Members of Congress knew nothing about the real equation involved. How did we know, with the many duties that we have to perform, whether the particular rate of so much per day paid to the man who sits in the engine cab was just or fair or not? The solution of that question requires an expert board, careful deliberation and consideration, and I proposed, when the Adamson bill came to the Senate—this is why I say I am primarily responsible for this proposition—when the Adamson bill came to the Senate I proposed in the Committee on Interstate Commerce that the Interstate Commerce Commission in the future should fix the rate of wage and hours of work of the labor engaged by the great railroad transportation companies of America, and it was favorably reported to the Senate by the committee; and then, although Congress passed the Adamson bill, it got cold feet. It got scared, and when it came to the water jump it would not go over and rejected my amendment, and I only got 14 votes for it at that time.

MAKE NO MISTAKE, THE LAW WILL BE OBEYED.

"Now, that is where this whole thing started, and that idea has grown and grown until it has been passed by the Senate by a vote of 47 to 25, and unless the conferees or the House of Representatives rejects it it will become the law, and if it becomes the law it will be obeyed. Make no mistake about that, the law will be obeyed. [Prolonged applause.] Now, is it right? Is it the right thing to do? That is the problem.

A NATION-WIDE RAILWAY STRIKE.

"A few months ago we were facing a nation-wide coal strike. It looked as if there was no way out. One hundred and ten million people in America did what? They appealed to the President, to the Government, and the Government settled it. There was no permanent law on the statute books for it looking to the particular settlement, but it was worked out, partly under a war-time statute and partly through intervention by the administration. You are in a coal district. You may not have been alarmed, but how about the many hundreds of thousands of householders in America, when that strike was threatened, who thought about winter coming on, the wife and the little ones by the fireside without coal to carry them through the winter? It meant freezing children, sickness, and probably death. No fault of theirs. No part of the responsibility on them. They had nothing to do with fixing the wage. They had nothing to do with the determination of the question whether it was just or unjust; but yet, because one set of men said that this shall be done, and the other set of men said it shall not be done the great mass of the American people were to be made to suffer. That is the place where Government should function. Government is organized for the purpose of protecting the great mass of the people who live in a community from the arbitrary act of any one class. [Applause.]

"What is the soviet government? A class government. What was the organization of the soviet government of Russia? The organization of government by the soldiers and workmen of Russia—class against the mass—and it has resulted in the most arbitrary, autocratic government that the world has ever known, not in the interest of the people, not even in the interest of the class. It has created a dictatorship, behind which stands the destruction of property and the trail of the life blood of women and children. In this country years ago, when capital was disposed to combine and organize the so-called trusts to control the commerce of the American people, the Government, representing the people, stepped in and passed the so-called Sherman law, and to capital the Government said, 'So far and no farther.' There have not been so many men sent to jail, but there has stood the signboard on the road, and every man has known where he must stop in the public interest.

"Whenever a class arises in this country where caste and class are out of place, whenever a class arises in this country that threatens the life and the peace and happiness of the American people, whether it be capital or labor, or any other class, then comes the time that your Government must function, and your representatives in public life who fail to stand up and do their full duty are recreant in their duty to the public and traitors to the cause of the people. [Applause.]

NO BLOW AT LABOR.

"What have we done in these labor sections of this bill? Have we attempted to strike down labor, organized labor? No. My friends, let us look this question squarely in the face. Bear this in mind as the very first premise, that when labor or the man at the bottom ceases to battle upward, your Nation is dead. Look at Egypt! Look at India! Whenever you destroy the right of battle by which a man may fight his way to the top, you have a dead nation. And it is not the thing you want to do. But when any class gets so strong that they threaten the life of the Nation, then your Government must function or cease to exist as a Government. [Applause.]

"I say I am responsible for this provision of this bill—I mean its main feature—and I think it is just not only to the public but to labor. Now, just let me tell you the personal attitude. I am not saying it in advocation of myself, but I want to tell you how I approached this subject. Labor has appealed to me many times in the past 24 years to vote for things they wanted, and I have most of the time supported their problems because I thought they were just. I believed the man at the bottom had the right to battle up as long as he was not tearing the other fellow down.

"You know long ago we passed a law requiring that all cars should have certain air-brake equipment, but it did not require that the railroads must be forced to couple them together, and when the crews would get in a hurry they would couple only a few cars close to the engine, and then the brakeman, riding on the rear caboose sometimes, when the engineer put on his air brakes and the slack ran together would be fired out into the sagebrush, because the whole train came together like that, and they appealed for many years for a law to require that all the air or a proper portion of the air should be coupled up. Well, I offered that bill and put it through the House myself. It afterwards became a law.

"There is a good deal of remedial legislation on the statute books that the railroad men of America have proposed and wanted that I proposed in Congress for them. So that I did not approach this subject adverse to them, but I approached the subject in an effort to do what was just both to them and to the American public.

"This bill is not unjust to American labor in the railroads. Under its provisions it says that any two men or more engaged in railroad business shall not enter into a conspiracy to interfere with interstate commerce. It is not applied exclusively to men in the railroad business; the law says any two or more men shall not conspire to interfere with interstate commerce. That includes capital. Two or more general managers can not do it. Two or more men of the public can not do it. Two or more men of the public not connected with the railroad could go out here and oil the track to stop the running of trains, and they would be in violation of the law, or if two or more men engaged in the railroad business as employees conspired together that would be in violation of the law. It relates to everybody.

THE RIGHT TO QUIT WORK.

"Now, I think that law is just, provided that in taking away the weapon of labor to battle upward you give labor something else to take its place. We did take away one weapon of labor to battle upward, but I want you to understand that for that antistrike provision we gave them something else in its place. That antistrike provision says that two or more men shall not conspire against interstate commerce, but it says that nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any man from quitting his employment. There has been a good deal of talk about this bill taking away the personal right of men and making slaves of them. The act itself expressly negatives that position. But there is a very great difference between a man quitting his employment and striking. Quitting employment is a matter of personal liberty. It is a matter of personal right, a matter of personal freedom, but to strike means just what it says. It is a weapon of offense; it is a blow directed at the other man to accomplish a purpose. You realize that. [Applause.] Quitting work is not all that is wanted in a strike, for somebody else takes your place. You want higher wages, fewer hours, or something else, and you exercise the blow to force the other man to come to your terms, just as you make use of a blow if you are in a personal combat on the street. That is what strike means. It is not an act of personal liberty, personal protection, individual rights; it is the big stick used against the other fellow. It is a joint or social action falling within the domain or functions of government where the results of the action directly affect the public welfare.

UNIVERSAL RAILROAD STRIKE AND THE PUBLIC.

"Now, my friends, what does a universal railroad strike mean? It ceases to be a blow directed against capital, because, although capital may lose dividends for three or four months while labor is out on a strike, that is infinitesimal compared with what is going to happen to the public. The owners of the railroads may lose a few dollars. Railway investment may lose the earning capacity in 90 days of a fourth of its dividends for a year. What does that mean? But little. It is an operating expense that will be paid in the end by the public. But a universal railroad strike for 90 days in America is directly aimed at the American public. A strike for 90 days means idle factories and foundries, men out of employment, women without food. A strike for 90 days means that the milk trains have ceased to go into the great cities, and the infants are dying in their mothers' arms. A strike for 90 days means that the whole business life of the Nation has ceased to function, and panic and disaster stalks in the land. You know that. The blow is not directed against capital. It is directed against the public to coerce the accomplishment of a result that the public, unorganized, has no power to control.

"My friends, you who have spent your lives at the throttle of an engine, or as a conductor of a railroad train, tell me, if you produce that result in the Birmingham district, how long you could live in this district? Just think about it a minute. Suppose you deliberately, through your organizations, brought on a 90-day strike; assuming that your cause was perfectly just, that you were asking for higher wages and you were entitled to them, and you could not get them out of the railroad management, and because you could not get them out of the railroad management you brought on a strike for 90 days and paralyzed the business life of this Nation and had infants dying in their mothers' arms and men starving for lack of food, how long do you think the public, your neighbor, would stand it? Before the 90 days were out there would be blood in men's eyes and the governor of Alabama would have his troops in Birmingham protecting your homes and your lives if you brought about that result, and you know it as well as I do. The American public is very peaceful as long as it is not affronted, but you strike blood in its face as the German Emperor did, and it arouses itself like a wild animal, and then nothing in the history of the world has ever stood before it since the dawn of this Republic. [Applause.]

PROTECTION TO LABOR.

"I tell you that the provisions of this Cummins bill is the greatest protection that American labor has ever had offered it. American labor can not strike against the American public. [Applause.] More than that, think what it costs you. When I was 30 years younger than I am now I was hotheaded. I wanted to scrap. I wanted to fight the way through, and you younger men who are in the railroad world probably have the chip on your shoulder now and want to scrap it out with anybody that gets in your way. But the railroads in this country have very properly passed or recognized the system of long service, have acquired positions by faithful service. Let me ask an engineer or a conductor in this audience who has served a great railroad system for 20 or 30 years, and, by hard, faithful service, has finally become the engineer or the conductor of the fast mail. He runs out his 100 miles or his day's work in five or six hours. He makes the best wage on the road, or approximates it. He has earned his position for peace in life by labor. His position is just as much an accumulation of that man's time as if he had been a banker and saved his interest and invested it in property. He has invested it in good character and good service and has won his position, and you young, hotheads bring on a universal strike, scrap the whole business, and throw him out of employment; and then this man who is 60 years of age, maybe, after 30 years of service, must he go out and begin all over at the tail end of a freight train and lay on the sidetracks all night waiting to come home, and do the work over again that he did as a boy? And, if you are a youngster, when you get 30 years older do you want the accumulation of your 30 years to mean nothing more to you than that it can be scrapped overnight? That is what a universal railroad strike would mean to you. That is what the labor chiefs have asked you to maintain as a system. It is an impossible system, an impractical system, where it is a blow directed not against capital but against the American public.

"Now, what have we proposed? What did I propose in 1916? Not that capital can exact the last hour of work from you, not that capital can enforce unjust conditions upon you, but that a board representing the Government of the United States must hear your complaint at any day and reach a just determination as to what is fair and just to you and the public. That is what I proposed in 1916. And what does this bill propose? I did not suggest any penalty clause. I do not think the penalty clause is necessary, but I see no objection to the penalty clause, because I do not think anybody has a right to interfere with the transportation of interstate commerce. The public is too vitally interested. I do not care whether you are engaged in railroading, whether you are a general manager, brakeman, or the outside public, the penalty clause is not necessary, for once you have a Government board to adjust wage scales and working conditions of railroads in America the strike is necessarily gone, because you can not strike against your Government. You know that as well as I do.

COMMON SENSE.

"You know, I think we have come pretty close to an understanding about this matter. All the common sense in the world is not in capital or the public. Labor is possessed of just as much common sense as other people. When this Cummins bill first came before the Senate all four brotherhoods came before the committee and protested, and Mr. Gompers came with them. I have known Mr. Gompers a good many years. I have talked to him about many matters. Mr. Gompers always goes with his crowd. That is very natural. Twenty-five years ago when I first knew Mr. Gompers he was pretty radical. I had many occasions to talk to Mr. Gompers during war times, and he was quite conservative. Men get more conservative as they grow older. Now, Mr. Gompers came before the Interstate Commerce Committee and I cross-examined him on this bill. He said that he was opposed to the penalty clause because it took away a personal right from these men. I differ with him because I do not think there is a personal right involved. The right to hit another man in the head is not a personal right. The right to quit is guaranteed by the bill. But I said, 'Mr. Gompers, if we leave out the penalty clause of this bill, are you in favor of a Government board fixing the wages?' He said no, he was not, because you could not strike against a Government decision. He was right. You can not. Then I said, 'Mr. Gompers, can you tell me some other way by which we can avoid a universal railroad strike in this country, and all the disaster that will follow in its wake, other than the method we have written in this bill?' He said no, that there was no other way. He did not believe this would, but he had nothing else to suggest. In other words, he proclaimed the doctrine that in this great Republic the force of capital or the force of labor must prevail and the battle field must be over the homes of America. That was in August. Last week the press dispatches said that the position of Mr. Gompers and the representatives of the four brotherhoods, in issuing their statement about this legislation, was that they were opposed to the penal features of the bills, but were prepared to accept the remedial part of the legislation, and asked that the legislation be extended to Pullman-car conductors, who had been unfortunately left out. [Laughter and applause.] What are the remedial features of the legislation? So far as the Senate bill is concerned it is that if there is a dispute as to wages or working conditions each side may select a certain number of arbitrators—five, I believe—and they shall try to agree.

"If they agree, then that settles the difference. If they can't agree, then the question shall go to the board of transportation, a Government board appointed by the President, and the board of transportation shall finally determine what is a just wage or what are just working conditions. Those are the remedial features of the bill. Instead of the board of transportation that is created by this bill, in 1916 I proposed the Interstate Commerce Commission, in principle the same. Now, I was not in Washington, but you may refer to the daily papers of this city two or three days ago—I forget the date it came out—and you will see the statement came out from Washington just as I have repeated it. That is a very great change from the testimony that was presented before the committee. If that statement correctly presents the attitude of the labor leaders, is not that a change that has reflected the sentiment of the great mass of railroad workers of America, who want only what is just and what is right? I think it is. I think it is. Now, let me tell you: If you have a board, if this legislation goes through and you are not satisfied with your wages or working conditions, you, as an individual, if you are engaged in railroad employment, can carry the question to the board of transportation. Or if you belong to the labor union your union can demand arbitration, and if arbitration is not worked out satisfactorily, your union can carry it to the board of transportation and have it determined in a peaceful, orderly way and dispose of the question, and you will not lose your job. You will not lose your daily wage, your family will not have to suffer, and the great American people will not be starved to death while you are doing it. Now, that is what we are offering you. Those are the remedial features of the bill. Well, if you have those remedial features what care you whether there is a provision in there that no man shall conspire to interfere with interstate commerce? While you sit in the cab of the engine, do you want some fellow to conspire to interfere with interstate commerce in a way that may throw your engine in the ditch? I think not. I think it is very good protection to you, although, as I said before as to the real merits of this case, it is not material whether you keep the penal features in or not, because whenever you say that a Government board shall fix the wages of the great railroads of this country the strike is gone. You can not strike against the Government. Even if there were no penal features, the American public would not sustain you in a strike. You could not live up to it. So it is not material about these penal features, except, as I say to you—the man who sits in the cab of the engine—they are more likely to protect you than hurt you.

THE PUBLIC PAYS THE BILL.

"Now, my friends, let me just ask you to look one step further on this question, and I will not detain you very much longer. Since the war began the cost of running the railroads of America, as shown by the report of Mr. Hines, checked up by the Interstate Commerce Commission and its experts, has been $1,835,000,000 more than it was before the war started. Railroad capital has not paid that. It could not. Why, $1,835,000,000 is more than the railroads ever paid out in interest on their bonds and dividends on their stock in any one year of their existence. Some people say that this increased cost of wages and material ought to come out of the railroads. Of course, the man who says that is an anarchist. He wants to destroy property. It could not come out of the railroads. One billion eight hundred million dollars is nearly two billions of dollars. There are but about eighteen billions of dollars invested in the railroad business. Divide two billions into it, and it would take nine years for you to eat up all the capital that is invested in railroads, if it came out of capital. At the end of nine years you would not have anything left.

"But, more than that, you can't take it out of railroad capital, because railroad capital has got to exist. If the L. & N. Railroad went broke the capital would remain, and the Government would make you sell it to somebody else that would run the railroad. So you can't absorb railroad capital. Where does it come from? It comes out of the public. Freight rates were increased 50 per cent and passenger rates were increased 25 per cent, and the public pays the bill. And who got it? One billion seven hundred and seventy-five millions of dollars of that increase went to labor, as shown by Mr. Hines's report, and since that report came out another hundred million was absorbed in the adjustment of some minor matters. So that, in fact, the railroad labor has absorbed the entire $1,835,000,000 of increase in the cost of transportation. The next greatest item of cost to a railroad is coal. Before the war came on the railroads were buying coal at an average of $2.10 a ton. To-day they are paying $4 a ton, and one time it went up to $4.20 on an average. Before the war the railroads were buying steel rails at $30 a ton. At one time during the war they got up as high as $57, and to-day they are selling for $47 a ton. Now, labor has absorbed all of the increase that the public is paying, and yet there is a further increase in the cost of coal, rails, oil, lumber, and everything else it takes to run a railroad. The railroads are very much worse off than they were before there was any increase in freight and passenger rates.

DOUBLE CHARGE AGAINST PUBLIC.

"Now, labor is asking another billion dollars. From whom? Capital? No. Capital can't pay it. Nobody for a minute contends that capital can pay it. They are asking it from the public—the farmer who ships his cotton to market, the pig-iron man who ships his ton of pig iron to Boston, the grocer who is shipping his food to your house. Is that all it is costing you? In the debate in the Senate on this bill I heard it asserted that when you increase freight rates $1 that by the time that increase got to the consumer it amounted to $5. I think that was an exaggerated statement, and I don't stand for it; but that was asserted. But it certainly does increase the cost of commodities more than the increase in freight rates, because when the producer sells the raw material and ships it over the rails, the man who buys it, the manufacturer, adds the freight and the cost of the raw material together, and then multiplies his profit into it, whether it is 10 per cent or 25 per cent. When it gets to the jobber he adds the cost of the goods and the freight together and multiplies his profit into it, and when it gets to the wholesaler he does the same thing, and the retailer does the same thing; and that profit runs all the way from 10 to 100 per cent. So I think you are safe to say that for every dollar of increased freight rates you put on the American people, whether you do it for labor or capital or anything else, you put a charge of $2 on the pockets of the American people when they come to consume it. When you put a dollar of freight on the food of the American people, you charge the American consumer $2 out of his pocket at least. As I say, some people asserted it was five times as much, but I think that is an exaggerated statement. Well, now, if it is twice as much, then the charge that has been put on the American public for the increased cost of labor on the railroads is not $1,835,000,000, but it is $3,670,000,000, and if you put another billion dollars on that for labor that they are demanding now, that is $2,000,000,000 more that the ultimate consumer of the American public has got to pay for, and that would be $5,000,000,000 since the war began as the price of increased labor on the railroads that the American consumer has to pay for. How are you going to get down the cost of living? Talk about this being in the interest of labor! There are all kinds of labor.

THE COMMON INTEREST OF LABOR.

"I am not fighting union labor. Union labor has done great things for its class. It ought to battle upward; ought to be allowed to battle upward, but it ought not to be allowed to destroy the public. That is where the line is drawn. Take the clerk in the store. Is not he labor? When he has to feed his family out of his meager salary, is not he interested in this charge that you are putting on him? Is not the man in the mill, the factory, or the ditch digger in the street labor? Has not he got a right to be represented in the determination of this increased cost that you are putting on the food that goes into the mouths of his children? How can he be heard? He is not organized to function in this fight between labor and capital. There is but one way he can be represented, and that is by a Government board. The Government represents that man, and it is the duty of the Government to do justice by him. [Applause.] That is what I have stood for as your representative in Washington. Now, I do not mean to say that the labor on the railroads were not entitled to an increase. I think the increases that were allowed during the war to the conductor and the engineer on the railroads was very reasonable. Their increase amounted to about 35 per cent. It was not at all excessive. There was the highest skilled labor on the railroads. It was not at all excessive when you consider the increased cost of living. But there are some other classes of labor that received increases from 100 to 150 per cent, for which there was no reason, to that extent, and the increase in wages of that class of labor prevented the conductor and engineer from getting a more adequate increase. And why? Because it was not done by a board that carefully analyzed and worked out the situation. I am in favor, if you are going to have any further increases in this matter, of having a board, a Government board, a Government board of experts, a just board, to sit in and analyze this situation and visualize it from every standpoint, and then do justice by the men.

"I am not in favor of cheap wages. It is a mighty good thing for any community and any public to pay labor as good a wage as it is possible without destroying business, because the wages of labor are always spent in the community to build it up and encourage business. But there is a line that you have got to draw. When you go with wages beyond a certain limit, business ceases to function. When you go beyond the limit, your producer or manufacturer that can not go into a competitive market and sell his goods at a profit then ceases to work.

THE GREAT EQUATION.

"Now, those are all the problems that you have got to solve in this great equation, with the life of the public involved. And as your representative in the United States Senate, do you want me to stand for the problem of solving that question on the battle field of a great strike, where force and anger and discord sit at the judgment seat, or do you want me to stand for the problem that a high court of governmental justice, a board appointed by the President of the United States, representing the best interests of all the people of the United States, shall sit in judgment and decide the equation for you justly? [Applause.] That is what I have done. That is what I stand for.

"Now, let me say to my constituency: For nearly a quarter of a century I have represented you in the halls of the Congress of the United States in one branch or another. I do not attribute to myself any undue courage. I try to follow your wishes when I can. I do not attribute to myself any undue virtue; but I want you to understand that when I function for you and write your laws on the statute books it must be in the interest of the entire people of Alabama [applause], and abstract justice and right must stand behind your demands. Now, labor is entitled to one great demand, and that is social justice, and there is no man in the American Congress who is more desirous of giving them absolute social justice than I am; and by "social justice" I mean that the high ideals of American life, American liberty for American labor, shall be maintained; that the sanctity of your home and your fireside, the education of your children, and the future development of your class, and the opportunity to rise to any high ideal in this great American Republic shall be yours. [Applause.] But when you lift your mailed fist against the life, the happiness, or the prosperity of the great body of the American people to accomplish your own desire, whether it be selfish or unselfish, then, so far as I am concerned as a Government officer, I will say, 'Here you must stop.' [Prolonged applause.]"

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 9281. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 10515. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 11310. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 11554. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3317) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is there any amendment to the bill pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No amendment is pending unless it be that of the Senator from Idaho, and the Chair does not know whether or not that is pending.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if I could have a reasonably full Senate, I should not object to taking a vote on the amendment. I dislike very much, however, to dispose of a matter which I believe to be of importance at a time when, for different reasons, a great many of the Senators are necessarily absent.

I wish to call attention to this amendment, for fear that some of those who are present to-day were necessarily absent on yesterday when we were discussing it. This is an amendment to section 3 of the bill. Section 3 of the bill is the nonmailing provision, and it provides:

SEC. 3. That every document, book, circular, paper, journal, or other written or printed communication in or by which there is advocated or advised the overthrow by force or violence or by physical injury to person or property of the Government of the United States or of all government, or in or by which there is advocated or advised the use of force or violence or physical injury to or the seizure or destruction of persons or property as a means toward the accomplishment of economic, industrial, or political changes is hereby declared to be nonmailable and the same shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier.

The amendment which I propose does not change the language of this section at all; it does not modify it in any respect. It simply provides a hearing under certain conditions for those who may be affected by the order of the Postmaster General in excluding printed or written matter from the mails. I will read the amendment so that it may be understood. It is as follows:

Provided, That any author, publisher, or party affected or aggrieved by the action of the Postmaster General in excluding materials from the mails under this section shall, upon filing a bond to cover the actual cost of such proceeding, be entitled to a hearing de novo before a judge of the Federal court of the district or circuit in which the party affected or aggrieved resides. But in case the party aggrieved or affected is successful in securing the admission of his mail matter to the mails he shall not be liable for the cost of the proceedings, and the court shall have power during the pendency of the proceedings in court to suspend the order of the Postmaster General: Provided further, That no such court proceedings shall bar or interfere with any criminal prosecution under the terms of this act.

It will be observed that the amendment simply provides a hearing de novo before a Federal district or circuit judge in case the party files a bond to cover the costs; and unless the judge, upon a showing, issues an order affirmatively suspending the order of the Postmaster General, the order of the Postmaster General is in nowise interfered with, and the matter continues to be excluded from the mail during the hearing.

The amendment does provide that the judge has power to suspend the order of the Postmaster General; but, of course, that must be upon showing; and everyone, I presume, would agree that there could be no danger of any seditious literature of a distinctively serious nature passing by a Federal judge; but it gives an opportunity for a hearing upon the part of those who may be publishing a magazine, a weekly or a daily paper, who contend that they are not within the law, and who want an opportunity to present their cause in an open, public way.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator think he has provided with sufficient distinctness the method of procedure in the Federal court in case proceedings are had?

Mr. BORAH. I think so, because it is really simply utilizing the Federal judge to hear the matter the same as the Postmaster General would hear it. I would be glad to accept any suggestion with reference to that, but after discussing it with some other Senators privately it was concluded that, perhaps, the amendment would cover it, and I so frame the language that any author, publisher, or any party affected or aggrieved by the action of the Postmaster General in excluding matter from the mails under section 3 shall, upon filing a bond to cover the actual costs of the proceeding, be entitled to a hearing de novo.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I presume it would be in the nature of a petition to the judge setting forth the grievance which the party has?

Mr. BORAH. I think it would result in this way: The party aggrieved would simply file his bond, and then the Postmaster General would send the papers that were before him to the judge.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That was the question which suggested itself to my mind—who takes the initiative? The aggrieved party files his bond, of course; but the amendment is silent then as to whether the Postmaster General shall present the papers to the court, or the aggrieved party shall present his case by petition and ask that the Postmaster General be required to suspend his order.

Mr. BORAH. I think that it might be done in either way; the party could, by petition, present the case, if the Postmaster General failed to do so; but the Senator from Oregon will observe that until the party filing his bond takes the initiative, the matter continues to be excluded from the mails.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It continues to be excluded from the mails, even after the filing of the petition and the giving of the bond, until the finding has been made by the judge.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. So, if it is bad literature, it continues to be excluded unless the question is presented to the judge in such a way that the judge makes an affirmative order canceling the order of the Postmaster General. The able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] the other day stated that a vast amount of seditious literature was going into the South to the colored people, the sponsors for which nobody had knowledge. That would not be affected by the amendment at all; such matter would be excluded from the mails, because the identity of the sender is unknown. No action can be taken until the party sending it comes forward and files his bond and puts himself in court so that he may be dealt with. That is not interfered with at all.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is only one other provision in the Senator's amendment as to which I desire to ask him a question. I have always thought it was rather unjust in all criminal proceedings in the Federal courts that a defendant, even though acquitted, was not entitled to recover his costs; that is, he has to pay for the attendance of his own witnesses and other costs that might be assessed against him, and there was no chance to recover against the Government. The Senator places the party in this proceeding in a different category from the ordinary defendant in a criminal case. Does the Senator think that there ought to be any discrimination made?

Mr. BORAH. I think that the party ought to be entitled to recover his costs. I will say to the Senator, however, that this amendment does not represent by any means what the Senator from Idaho desires; neither does it represent what the amendment when first presented was intended to accomplish; but when I first presented it I found I could not get very much support for it, and therefore I undertook to modify it in order to get it through. I have, therefore, cut out some of the things that I very much desire to have in the amendment. I think there ought to be a provision to the effect that in case the party is successful he shall recover his costs.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can see no objection at all to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho, and I am going to give it my support. I wish, however, to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the provision in the amendment concerning costs will be of no use, as the Senator will realize, I am sure, upon reflection.

Mr. BORAH. I do not quite understand the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I say that the provision in the amendment concerning costs will be of no value whatever, because costs can not be taxed against the Government, and, if the applicant is successful, of course he can not be taxed for the Government's costs.

Mr. BORAH. That is the reason why it was suggested that there was no occasion for putting in the amendment a provision taxing the costs against the Government, because costs can not be assessed against the Government, but in order to make it clear I wanted the party relieved from all question of costs in case he was successful.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But there is no statute under which costs may be taxed against a successful litigant.

Mr. BORAH. Very well; then it will not do any harm.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It will not do any harm, but it is useless to put it in.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps so. I rather think the Senator from Montana is correct about that. I have no particular objection to striking it out, except it has a kind of consoling effect.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The amendment reads:

But in case the party aggrieved or affected is successful in securing the admission of his mail matter to the mails he shall not be liable for the cost of the proceeding.

There is no statute making him liable, and, of course, it is contrary to every concept we have of cost statutes that he should be made liable. I submit to the Senator that it does not mean anything.

Mr. BORAH. I think, as a legal proposition, the Senator from Montana is right.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota and Mr. STERLING addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I think the junior Senator from South Dakota first rose. I will yield to him, and then to the senior Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I could not quite hear the substance of the amendment as it applies to the stoppage of the paper during the process of trial or investigation.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment does not interfere with the Postmaster General's order excluding the mail unless the court, upon a showing, sets aside or cancels the order of the Postmaster General.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. During the time that the case is tried does the paper continue to be put out as usual until the decision of the court?

Mr. BORAH. It continues to be excluded from the mails. I now yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota if he intends the amendment to mean just as it reads in regard to a trial or hearing de novo before the Federal court? Does the Senator understand it is to be a hearing before the judge?

Mr. BORAH. It is to be a hearing.

Mr. STERLING. Before whom—the judge?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; before the judge.

Mr. STERLING. I think, then, Mr. President, with that understanding, and with the understanding that the latter part referred to by the Senator from Montana in regard to costs is to be stricken from the amendment, I shall be willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. What is the necessity of striking out the costs provision?

Mr. STERLING. Because I agree with the Senator from Montana that it is absolutely useless.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, I would tender an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator, striking out all of the amendment commencing with the word "But," on line 7, down to and including the word "and," in line 10; that is—

But in case the party aggrieved or affected is successful in securing the admission of his mail matter to the mails, he shall not be liable for the cost of the proceedings.

Then make a period and begin:

The court shall have power during the pendency of the proceedings in court to suspend—

And so forth.

Mr. BORAH. It is the judgment of the Senator from Montana that with that stricken out, if the party were successful, no costs would be taxed against him?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why, I am entirely satisfied of that.

Mr. BORAH. And the reason for striking it out is purely because it is ineffective?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the understanding of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that that is my understanding.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know, myself, of any statute by which the costs could be taxed against him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I may say to the Senator that I object to its being in the amendment, because it introduces a departure which might give rise to some question in the future.

Mr. BORAH. Well, I accept the amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Idaho, who would pay the costs of the petitioner's own witnesses in a case such as that? If he is to have legal process to bring witnesses into court, so that they would be entitled to mileage and per diem, under the language of the amendment, as modified by the suggestion of the Senator from Montana, who would pay the costs of securing the witnesses for the petitioner?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the subject of costs would be regulated by the general costs statute. The prevailing party is entitled to costs against the unsuccessful party, except in the case of the United States, where the prevailing party can recover no costs against the United States; so that if he succeeds he can not tax any costs against the United States. If he is defeated, the subject of costs is left to the control of the general statute.

If he wants to get witnesses, he must tender to the witnesses their fees, of course. He must tender them their per diem. If he wants to set the officers of the law in operation to procure the attendance of witnesses, he must, of course, tender the officers their fees for making the service of subpœnas. If he prevails, he is in the same situation as everybody else who sues the United States; he can not get back any costs, and it is not expected that he shall. It is simply provided that he shall not be liable for the costs of the other party. He is liable, of course, for his own costs. He has to pay those in advance. He has to advance to the witnesses, and he has to advance to the officers, all of their fees and costs in the first place, and he is not permitted to recover any judgment against the United States to get those back.

Mr. BORAH. Let me ask the Senator a question: Suppose the party were successful in securing the admission of his mail matter to the mails, and nevertheless the court, by reason of some view which he might take of the case, felt that each party should pay his own costs. Could not the court make an order adjudging that the party should pay those costs which he himself had incurred?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the very point I am making. He is obliged to do that, anyway.

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not think the Senator understands me. Suppose that A files his bond and transfers the controversy to the judge. The judge reverses the order of the Postmaster General, but he says, "I think, nevertheless, though the party is successful here, that he should pay the costs." Has he not the power, under statutes which now exist, to assess those costs against him?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No, Mr. President. Under the prevailing statute, of course, the court can regulate costs in all equity cases and distribute them as the case may require, but the complainant is always obliged to bear in the first place whatever costs he incurs. Now, unfortunately, in cases against the United States he never can get those back. He is always obliged to sustain those costs, so that if the court should order that he pay his own costs the court would be ordering him to do only what he is obliged to do anyway; and the court, of course, could not impose upon him the costs of the United States if he were successful.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? Does the Senator from Montana think the rule would be changed in any respect where the proceeding was really not in the name of the United States, but in the name of the Postmaster General, who might be acting outside of his jurisdiction in having undertaken to enforce the law? If it were the Postmaster General as an individual, arbitrarily acting, would the same rule apply to him that would apply if the Government were the losing party or if the Government were the party to the proceeding?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can not conceive that the proceeding would be regarded as anything except a proceeding against the Postmaster General as an agency of the United States. Of course it is against an official act of his that the proceedings are directed. I think that he does it by virtue of his office and claiming to discharge the duties of his office under the laws regulating the duties of his office.

Mr. STERLING rose.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from South Dakota wish to address a remark to me?

Mr. STERLING. Nothing further than to repeat what I said, that if the Senator from Idaho agrees to strike out the provision relative to costs I will accept the amendment, so far as I am able to do it.

Mr. BORAH. I ask permission, then, if I have a right to do so under the rule, to modify my amendment by striking out the clause which reads as follows:

But in case the party aggrieved or affected is successful in securing the admission of his mail matter to the mails he shall not be liable for the costs of the proceedings, and—

Make a period there and commence the word "the" with a capital—

The court shall have power during the pendency of the proceedings—

And so forth. Does that meet the view of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho offer this as an amendment?

Mr. BORAH. I offer it now, with that stricken out, as an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 3, on page 2, after the word "property," it is proposed to strike out the comma and insert a semicolon; in the same line it is proposed to strike out the word "or," after the word "property," and to insert in lieu thereof "and it shall be unlawful for any person," so that, if amended, it will read:

Or to advise or advocate a change in the form of government or the Constitution of the United States or resistance to the authority thereof by force or violence or by physical injury to person or property; and it shall be unlawful for any person by force or violence to prevent, hinder, or delay—

And so forth.

Mr. STERLING. This amendment is simply for the purpose of clarifying the language, that is all. Hence, the semicolon after the word "property," and then the use of the words "and it shall be unlawful for any person," to indicate the introduction of a new clause, completing the clause which is already in the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not understand this amendment. The Senator from South Dakota says it is to clarify the language. That might mean a whole lot under this bill.

Mr. STERLING. I will read the language of the bill, and then the amendment, so that the Senator will see where it comes in:

To advise or advocate a change in the form of government or the Constitution of the United States or resistance to the authority thereof by force or violence or by physical injury to persons or property, or by force or violence—

It is a little ambiguous now; it is not quite clear as to whether that which follows is connected with what precedes, and so I just add the words "and it shall be unlawful for any person." It is intended that it shall be unlawful for any person by force or violence to prevent, hinder, or delay, or attempt to prevent, hinder, or delay; but you have to go back several lines in order to get the connection, and I make it complete by inserting there again the words "and it shall be unlawful for any person."

Mr. BORAH. Is that section 1?

Mr. STERLING. It is section 1.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, it is my opinion that with the exception of section 3 of this bill there is nothing in it that ought in the Senate of the United States to provoke the slightest opposition—indeed, I feel justified in saying the slightest discussion. I fully agree that there may be very honestly differing opinions concerning the wisdom of section 3 of the bill, but I believe that every legitimate objection that may be urged against that section is entirely removed by the amendment which the Senate has just adopted, tendered by the Senator from Idaho. Yet it is a marvel that a bill of this character should have received the attention, by way of opposition, that has developed against it and legislation of like character.

Mr. President, no one undertakes to assert that this bill is a remedy for whatever evils there are in our institutions and in our system of government which breed, if they do breed, the efforts to overturn the Government at which this bill is aimed. Those are to be taken care of by other legislation. But, Mr. President, since government began, even in its most elementary forms, there never was a time when any government could tolerate an effort to overthrow it by force or violence. It is a principle that is as applicable to the most complete and thoroughgoing of republics and democracies as it is to the old patriarchal form of government and even the most autocratic of modern systems. No government can tolerate anything of the kind, nor can it tolerate the advocacy, either by oral or written language, of efforts of that character.

Mr. President, there was a time in our history when we might, as has been suggested even upon the floor of the Senate, allow the loud-mouthed anarchist freely to express his views and purposes in public, depending upon the general good sense of the people of this country and their attachment to the principles of our Government to counteract whatever possible evil there might be in the assertion; but that time has gone by, and everybody recognizes that it has gone by. We have in our midst here a vast multitude of people who have no appreciation whatever of our institutions. They are not imbued with their spirit at all. They came here poisoned with political ideas that they have absorbed in the midst of some oppressive, autocratic system of some country in Europe with which they are more or less familiar and whose tyranny they have felt, and fired with a purpose to overthrow the Government and to overthrow all governments. Many of those subject to the influence of such agitators not only are unappreciative of our institutions and of the principles which underlie them, but they are utterly unable to read our language and advise and inform themselves concerning these matters. Papers, documents, pamphlets, newspapers, in their particular language, are laid before them advocating the doctrine that red revolution is the only remedy for the wrongs that need correction, with the necessary result that the readers are imbued with the ideas which they promulgate and seek to enforce.

Early in the present session, Mr. President, upon the occasion of the concerted attempt to take the lives of a great number of the foremost men of the country, including the Attorney General of the United States, by assassination, I introduced a bill substantially like that which is now before the Senate for consideration. It will be recalled that at the scene of the attempted destruction by a bomb of the home of Attorney General Palmer, with the occupants thereof, early in the month of June, there was found a leaflet or pamphlet entitled "Proclamation of a Revolution—Plain Words," which I introduced into the RECORD, and which is found therein under date of June 3, 1919. I read briefly from it, as follows:

PROCLAMATION OF A REVOLUTION FOUND IN EFFECTS OF ANARCHIST—PLAIN WORDS.

The powers that be made no secret of their will to stop, here in America, the world-wide spread of revolution. The powers that must be reckon that they will have to accept the fight they have provoked.

A time has come when the social question's solution can be delayed no longer; class war is on and can not cease but with a complete victory for the international proletariat.

The challenge is an old one, oh, "democratic" lords of the autocratic Republic. We have been dreaming of freedom, we have talked of liberty, we have aspired to a better world, and you jailed us, you clubbed us, you deported us, you murdered us whenever you could.

Now that the great war, waged to replenish your purses and build a pedestal to your saints, is over, nothing better can you do to protect your stolen millions and your usurped fame than to direct all the power of the murderous institutions you created for your exclusive defense against the working multitudes rising to a more human conception of life.

The jails, the dungeons you reared to bury all protesting voices, are now replenished with languishing conscientious workers, and, never satisfied, you increase their number every day.

It is history of yesterday that your gunmen were shooting and murdering unarmed masses by the wholesale; it has been the history of every day in your régime, and now all prospects are even worse.

Do not expect us to sit down and pray and cry. We accept your challenge and mean to stick to our war duties. We know that all you do is for your defense as a class; we know also that the proletariat has the same right to protect itself since their press has been suffocated, their mouths muzzled, we mean to speak for them the voice of dynamite, through the mouth of guns.

Do not say we are acting cowardly because we keep in hiding; do not say it is abominable; it is war—class war—and you were the first to wage it under cover of the powerful institutions you call order, in the darkness of your laws, behind the guns of your bone-headed slave.

No liberty do you accept but yours; the working people also have a right to freedom, and their rights—our own rights—we have set our minds to protect at any price.

We are not many, perhaps more than you dream of, though; but are all determined to fight to the last, till a man remains buried in your bastiles, till a hostage of the working class is left to the tortures of your police system, and will never rest till your fall is complete and the laboring classes have taken possession of all that rightly belongs to them.

There will have to be bloodshed; we will not dodge; there will have to be murder; we will kill, because it is necessary; there will have to be destruction; we will destroy to rid the world of your tyrannical institutions.

We are ready to do anything and everything to suppress the capitalist class, just as you are doing anything and everything to suppress the proletarian revolution.

Our mutual position is pretty clear. What has been done by us so far is only a warning that there are friends of popular liberties still living. Only now we are getting into the fight, and you will have a chance to see what liberty-loving people can do.

Do not seek to believe that we are the Germans' or the devil's paid agents; you know well we are class conscious men, with strong determination and no vulgar liability. And never hope that your cops and your hounds will ever succeed in ridding the country of the anarchistic germ that pulses in our veins.

We know how we stand with you, and know how to take care of ourselves.

Besides, you will never get all of us—and we multiply nowadays.

Just wait and resign to your fate, since privilege and riches have turned your heads.

Long live social revolution! Down with tyranny!

It is to prevent the circulation of literature of that character that this bill is intended, and who is there to say that it is not just and wise that this effort should be made and the necessary legislation enacted?

Mr. President, it is not difficult at all for any man who desires to understand to appreciate just exactly the distinction between literature that is protected by the constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech and of the press and literature which is subject to the provisions of this act. The matter was considered by the Court of Appeals of the State of New York in the famous case of The People against John Most. It will be recalled that it was charged, and very generally believed, that the assassination of President McKinley was directly attributable to the teachings of this most undesirable alien. I want to read with some freedom from the report of that case, and then from another document, for the purpose of making entirely clear, so far as I can, where the distinction lies between literature the circulation of which can not be prohibited and literature the circulation of which can be prohibited, and which ought to be prohibited. Speaking of the defendant, the opinion says:

He was the publisher of a weekly newspaper called the Freiheit, and the wrongful act consisted in the publication of an article in that paper advocating and advising revolution and murder.

The object of the article, as we interpret it—was not to criticize or discuss public officers or public affairs but to denounce government as "murder dominion" and to advocate the murder of those who govern. While it was written with special reference to rulers who wear crowns, it recommends the murder of all rulers, without exception, express or implied. The argument is that as the enforcement of law is murder, the assassination of those who enforce the law is not only justifiable but to spare them would be a crime. It calls the constituted authorities murderers, and urges its readers to "murder the murderers." Its tendency is to incite and stimulate the destruction of government and its agents "through blood and iron, poison, and dynamite." It teaches the doctrine that government is founded on murder; that all rulers are enemies of the human race; and that "crime directed against them is not only right but it is the duty of everyone who has an opportunity to commit it and it would be a glory to him if it was successful." The publisher exhorts his readers to "let murder be our study, murder in every form," when directed against those who preserve order and enforce law. Government is described as "reaction," and not only is the murder of those having authority upheld and urged but revolution against government as "the attacking party" is proclaimed as "nothing more than necessary defense."

Says the court—

The court says with respect to that matter:

He not only defended but advised the most serious crime known to the law. His language was an invitation to murder. He who counsels murder becomes a murderer if his advice is taken. Such advice given to the 3,000 subscribers and to more than that number of readers of the defendant's paper might naturally, as the history of the times shows, result in violence and murder. The courts can not shut their eyes to the fact that there are elements in our population, small in number, but reckless and aggressive, who are ready to act on such advice and to become the assassins of those whom the people have placed in authority. The public peace is seriously endangered when arguments are made and advice given which may naturally result even in a simple breach of the peace, and when the arguments and advice are of such an alarming and dangerous character as to naturally lead to the assassination of public officers, punishment and repression are essential to the welfare of society and the safety of the State. We think that the act of the defendant was a violation of the Penal Code and constituted a misdemeanor under the section cited.

Then the defendant urged in his defense, almost as has been urged here upon the floor of the Senate, that he was protected in publishing the matter complained of by the constitutional provision guaranteeing freedom of speech and of the press, and he cited the constitution of the State of New York upon that subject. The court in answer to this contention says:

The constitution of our State provides that "Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press."

The constitution does not protect a publisher from the consequences of a crime committed by the act of publication. It does not shield a printed attack on private character, for the same section from which the above quotation is taken expressly sanctions criminal prosecution for libel. It does not permit the advertisement of lotteries, for the next section prohibits lotteries and the sale of lottery tickets. It does not permit the publication of blasphemous or obscene articles, as the authorities uniformly hold. (People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns., 290, 297; People v. Muller, 96 N. Y., 408; In re Rapier, 143 U. S., 110.) It places no restraint upon the power of the legislature to punish the publication of matter which is injurious to society according to the standard of the common law. It does not deprive the State of the primary right of self-preservation. It does not sanction unbridled license nor authorize the publication of articles prompting the commission of murder or the overthrow of government by force. All courts and commentators contrast the liberty of the press with its licentiousness and condemn as not sanctioned by the constitution of any State appeals designed to destroy the reputation of the citizen, the peace of society, or the existence of the Government. (Story on the Constitution, 1878; Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, 518; Ordronaux on Constitutional Legislation, 237; Tiedeman on Police Powers, 81.) We think that no constitutional right of the defendant was violated by his conviction and that the judgment pronounced against him was rendered in accordance with law.

That opinion was concurred in by every member of the court.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think that case states the law precisely as it is. Freedom of the press does not mean a man shall be exempt from the consequences of the abuse of the right. The only contention I have ever made here—and that is what the Senator referred to—is that under the first amendment of the Constitution of the United States there is no power in Congress by which it can put any previous restraint upon publications; that there is no power by which you can establish anything which has the nature of a license system. If the party publishing publishes that which is libelous, or that which is calculated to incite force and violence against the Government, he is responsible for the consequences. I do not disagree at all with that authority. But you can not censor his publication. He has a right to publish on his own initiative and without leave or license. If he abuses his right he may be punished.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Leaving section 3 of the pending bill out of consideration, there is not anything in it that is anticipatory in character at all. It makes it penal to do these things, and, of course, the man can not be punished for doing them until after the thing has been done.

Mr. President, I want to call attention upon the other hand to the character of literature that we can not repress. Much has been said here, quoted from statements made outside the Chamber chiefly, about an effort to prevent criticism of the Government or the advocacy of changes in our form of government. So long as those go on by appeals to constitutional methods, by arguments addressed to the reason of the readers, it is not only impossible, but it is eminently undesirable, to repress them in any way whatever.

I have before me a very interesting document entitled "The Poison in America's Cup," purporting to have been written by one Philip Francis, who takes to himself the credit of being the author of most of the editorials appearing during the last year in the Hearst newspapers. This advocates the entire overthrow of our existing system of government. It proposes not only the abolition of the United States Senate, but of the office of President of the United States, and proposes to repose all power, legislative and executive, in a single parliamentary body.

Not only that, Mr. President, but it proposes that that parliamentary body shall be elected, not by the general body of the people but chosen by classes, the farmer class to have representatives and the manufacturing class to have representatives. It may not have been as carefully read by many Members as I have studied it, and I accordingly take the liberty to read at some length from it. I read from chapter 12, as follows:

Fortunately there is neither any need nor any excuse resorting to violence in our country in order to change our political or industrial system. The Constitution prescribes an orderly, legal, peaceable method of changing our system of government whenever we want to do so. We can summon a constitutional convention whenever the majority thinks it should be done, and we can institute an entirely new system of government without firing a gun or shedding a drop of blood.

Any man who advocates the use of force to effect political or industrial reforms in our country is a fool—as big a fool as the man who advocates the use of police power and jails to stifle free speech and free discussion of reforms in government.

The resort to violence to overthrow a despotic government in such a country as Russia, for example, is always justifiable. The Russian people had no orderly method to use. Our fathers took the same method. The men of the French Revolution followed their example. The American Revolution, the French Revolution, and the Russian revolution are the three great political events of modern history. The gratitude of ages is due all three.

But America can and ought to carry through another revolution, as far-reaching and beneficent as either of the other three, without even a hint of violence. What we ought to do is to abolish our out-of-date system of government, with three independent branches, each with independent authority, and our present system of electing representatives who are beyond popular control, and then replace these obsolete systems with a purely democratic system of government, in which all the powers of government will be lodged in a single body of representatives, who will be elected directly by the people, voting in occupational groups instead of geographical groups, and will be subject at any time to dismissal from office by the group which elected them.

Let me show how this would work.

In the first place, we would have no President and no more one-man power to coerce the representative body; to plunge the Nation into war, without asking the people whether they wanted to go to war or not; to appoint the Supreme Court and the Federal judges, and thus hold control over the administration of the laws; to appoint a Cabinet ministry responsible to himself only and entirely beyond the control of the Congress or the people; and to be in actual practice more autocratic than the constitution of the German Empire ever permitted the German Kaiser to be. We do not need a President any more than Great Britain needs a King. Both can be and ought to be dispensed with by a free, self-governing democracy. The Congress would then become the sole repository of all powers, both in peace and in war, and the administration of domestic and foreign Federal affairs would be conducted by committees, directly responsible to the popular assembly.

With all power thus lodged in the popular assembly, the one thing essential to direct people's rule would be the election of a body truly representative of the people and their direct control by the people. These would be assured by a radical change in our election machinery, through which the people would vote in occupational groups, and by the universal application of the initiative, the referendum, and the recall.

Voting by occupational groups is the most important of these political reforms.

Then the author tells how Congress would be constituted when thus elected by such occupational groups:

There will be representatives of agricultural occupations, 165; of mining occupations, 15; of mechanical occupations, 140; of transportation occupations, 35; of trade occupations, 50; of professional occupations, 20; of domestic-service occupations, 50; and of clerical occupations, 25.

Now, Mr. President, no one could advocate, scarcely anyone could propose a change in our system of government more thorough and complete, more radical than that thus proposed. It denounces our whole system from beginning to end as utterly wrong and declares that it ought to be changed; but it is proposed to change it not by violence, not by force, not by the destruction of life and property, but in the manner provided by the Constitution and the laws of the country.

However we may differ with those doctrines, however inimical we may think the teaching of them is to the public welfare, there is no power in the Congress of the United States nor in any department of the Government to prevent the publication of literature of that character or the dissemination of it through any means whatever. It is protected by the guaranty of the freedom of speech and of the press in the first amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. BORAH. But we may pass a law excluding it from the mails?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I rather doubt that.

Mr. BORAH. I am very glad to have the Senator say so; but if we follow the case of ex parte Jackson as the department and the Postmasters General have construed it, we could undoubtedly do so. However, I think the Senator is correct as to the limit even of the power of exclusion from the mails.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have not examined the matter with particular reference to that point, but my recollection of the opinion dealing with the subject is that it leaves it open to question as to whether the power of Congress in the matter is unlimited and unrestricted by the first amendment to the Constitution. I do not believe that question has ever been definitely determined by the Supreme Court. My own judgment about the matter, which is not worth much without having given special consideration to it, is that such a document can not be excluded from the mails, that even that would be a violation of the Constitution.

But I call attention to these two classes of literature for the purpose of eliminating, if I can, from the consideration of the question any suggestion that we are invading the rights of any citizen of the United States under the first amendment to the Constitution by the legislation which is before us.

One of the Members of this body opposing the legislation spent much time in endeavoring to demonstrate to the Senate that the legislation is not necessary at all, because we now have statutes ample to cover the cases to be reached by it.

The Attorney General of the United States thinks that we have not; the Judiciary Committee of the Senate thinks that we have not. I have given some consideration to the subject personally, and I am satisfied that we have not.

If we have legislation covering the case, why should anyone be opposing this particular legislation?

I think it has been too long delayed, and I hope that we may have speedy action on the bill now before us.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in view of the remarks of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] I wish to say a word. The objection which I have had to all these measures has rested largely upon those provisions which have to do with the use of the mails. I have never felt the same uneasiness about the other drastic features of the law if we could have a hearing such as we must have, of course, when we are trying parties under section 1 of the bill. But I can take the statutes which are now upon the statute books, together with the provisions of this bill, and as Postmaster General can practically edit or destroy every newspaper in the United States. It is that feature of the bill to which I object, and it is that feature in which in my judgment we have already gone beyond our constitutional powers.

I do not accept the view—the Senator from Montana has not urged that view, and therefore I am not controverting what he has said—I do not accept the view urged in other places, however, that we can exclude any printed matter from the mail and to any extent that we want to do so. You can not go to the extent of interfering with the freedom of the press even under a provision of the Constitution which gives us jurisdiction over post roads, and so forth. We have gone now to a point covered by different statutes where, in my judgment, we have already trespassed upon the principle which is announced in the first amendment to the Constitution, because we have established what is in its practical working a censorship. We have already legislated or passed laws which are wholly in contravention to the rights of free speech and a free press. We are day by day going farther.

These laws enable the Postmaster General, if he sees fit to do so, to practically direct the tone and the trend of any paper that may come under his surveillance. The latitudinous discretion which is given to him under these measures necessarily results in the utilization of this power in a way which can not be justified under a government of law. It becomes a government of persons, of individuals.

If you give an open public hearing upon the question of punishment, as we do in the courts, even though the law does seem severe or drastic, it will cure itself. Publicity in the courts will take care of it, and those who ought to be punished will be punished; not very many who ought to be punished will go unpunished. It is a different proposition when you are constantly giving to the head of a department the power to supervise matters, from which supervision there is no appeal.

I read in this connection a single paragraph from ex parte Jackson, the case upon which they all rely for the power to exclude to any extent Congress may see fit any material from the mail:

> Great reliance is placed by the petitioner upon these views, coming, as they did in many instances, from men alike distinguished as jurists and statesmen—

Having reference to a report which was filed by John C. Calhoun—

> but it is evident that they were founded upon the assumption that it was competent for Congress to prohibit the transportation of newspapers and pamphlets over postal routes in any other way than by mail; and, of course, it would follow that if with such a prohibition the transportation in the mail could also be forbidden, the circulation of the documents would be destroyed and a fatal blow given to the freedom of the press.

In other words, they say if you exclude them from the mails and also exclude matter from being carried by the express companies, and so forth, that you have then gone to such an extent as to be within the inhibition of the amendment to the Constitution.

> But we do not think that Congress possesses the power to prevent the transportation in other ways, as merchandise, of matter which it excludes from the mails. To give efficiency to its regulations and prevent rival postal systems, it may perhaps prohibit the carriage by others for hire, over postal routes, of articles which legitimately constitute mail matter.

The court seems to intimate, although it does not expressly decide, that there is a limit upon the exclusion of mail matter from the mails, even under the provision of the Constitution which gives the Congress jurisdiction of post offices and post roads. The court held in this case that as the material excluded from the mails could be sent by express or freight, it was not an interference with the freedom of the press.

I venture to say that some of these days the court must revise its opinion upon this question, for the reason that if matter is excluded from the mails and reliance can only be had by the publisher to reach his readers through express or freight facilities, the press is controlled just as effectually as it can be controlled in any other way. The man who is not permitted to utilize the machinery of modern inventions for the purpose of conducting his business is out of the line of doing business with his competitor who may use them. To say that you may exclude his matter from the mails but that you can not prevent him from carrying it by freight and that thereby he has his right under the Constitution, is, in my judgment, an unsound position, for if you are a publisher and you are excluded from the mail and compelled to go by freight and I am permitted to send my matter by mail, your publication is destroyed. If jurisdiction is given to the Postmaster General of these subjects in this way, he may, in order that the party may get back into the mails, cover the entire tone and drift and subject matter of the publication. I am one of those who believe that under the first amendment to the Constitution Congress can not take a single step which will in any way directly or indirectly permit the censorship of the press.

Mr. President, a word on another matter. The Senator says—and correctly, as I had supposed until a few days ago—that all the reforms in this country which are effectuated through the ballot box and in a peaceful way are permissible under the Constitution; that if a body of men desire to change this Government from a representative government to a socialistic government or to a soviet government they have a right to do so, if they do it in a peaceful way and by manifesting their wishes and desires through the ballot box. It has been the contention of men, among others myself, who believe in orderly government, that there is no justification in this country for any man resorting to violence, that there is no justification for any man resorting to lawlessness, for the reason that the Government affords a method by which men may effectuate their desires in a peaceful way, and that is through the ballot box. But, Mr. President, a few days ago one of the most remarkable things, I think, in the history of American politics took place in the Legislature of New York, where five men were excluded from taking the oath. I read the reason assigned for that act. They were called before the speaker's chair, without any previous charge or any previous notification of incapacity to serve as legislators of that State, and were advised as follows:

> You are seeking seats in this body. You have been elected on a platform that is absolutely inimical to the interests of the State of New York and of the United States.

If these men had not been legally elected, if there was fraud connected with their elections, or if they were ineligible by reason of any law found in the statutes or the constitution of New York, if there were any specific charges, they were entitled to have a statement covering these matters. In justice to the men who stood ready to take the oath of office, in deference to the dignity and honor of the great State of New York, and above all, as a matter of orderly and legal procedure, if there were charges of a specific nature they should have been stated. We are led to conclude that there were no such charges, for if there had been certainly no thinking man would have put himself in an indefensible position by saying, "You have been elected on a platform that is absolutely inimical to the State of New York and the United States." They were proscribed and made to stand aside by a majority because of their political and economic views. Their platform did not suit the majority. Their right to take the oath in a body to which they had been elected by the people was denied not because the people who elected them thought their views inimical to the State of New York, but because the majority of the representative body thought so.

Mr. President, the Republicans could exclude every Democrat, and Democrats could exclude every Republican at every opening of Congress upon any such proposition if the Vice President should call before him a man who had been elected and say to him, "Your views are inimical to what I consider the best interests of the United States and the State from which you come." The Vice President would have just as much right to say that to a Senator presenting himself to take the oath as the speaker of the Legislature of New York had the right to say it to those Socialists. If you deny men the right to effectuate their purposes and their plans through the ballot box, you invite them to violence and lawlessness.

Mr. THOMAS. Do you not also force them to resort to violence as an alternative?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; there is no alternative unless we are to become intellectual slaves.

Mr. STERLING. I desire to say in this connection that the action of the Legislature of the State of New York in excluding the so-called Socialists does not meet with my approval at all. I do not indorse any such proposition as that.

Mr. BORAH. No; and I do not see how it could meet with the approval of any man who has any regard for law and order, for the most lawless man is the man who having taken an oath to support the laws and the Constitution of the country violates them. Ignorant men, men of limited opportunities, denied much because of adversities in life, engaged in a struggle for existence, may with some excuse entertain the idea of lawlessness and of taking the law into their own hands. Every man must find some compassion for the man from that station of life who is misled into such false theories; but there should be no pity and no sympathy, there should be nothing but the severest condemnation, for men who have risen to the position of responsibility and then take the law into their own hands.

The further statement made by the speaker of the New York Legislature to these men upon examination leaves little doubt that these men were made to stand aside solely because of their political and economic views or at most because of their adherence to organizations which teach and urge socialism. It is a thoughtless and an ill-considered move which would attempt to establish any such precedent in this country because it can not but work tremendous evil. It should be rejected promptly and conclusively. Any such principles would Mexicanize this Government. It would do worse if possible; it would destroy the Government in all its fundamental worth. Only the strange and accursed fruits of war psychology could ever lead thinking men or just and thoughtful men so far from the true principles of representative government.

That proposition has two principles, or so-called principles, upon which it stands: First, upon the ipse dixit of the speaker and those who supported him, the men are called forward for judgment before any charges are made against them or any reason assigned to the men themselves; secondly, they are excluded from the privileges and rights of the assembly to which they have been elected until men shall judge whether or not they are qualified. Not a single objection known to the constitution of the State of New York is stated; not a single incapacity to serve as a legislator is alleged, but the political opinions of the men who stood there were adverse to those of the majority, and the majority excluded them. In my humble judgment such action forces lawlessness and revolution in this country.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I inquire of the Senator from Idaho whether he does not think that something of the same spirit is evinced in the resolution passed by the Senate some time ago providing for an inquiry as to whether or not Socialists were employed by the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. BORAH. I expressed myself about that at the time.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to call attention to an incident in English history which may be instructive. In the year 1763 one John W. Wilkes was the owner of a newspaper known as the North Briton in England. Through his newspaper columns he made an attack upon Lord Bute, the King's minister. On April 23, 1763, he assailed the King's message to Parliament. Thereupon Lord Halifax, leading secretary of state, issued a general warrant "to search for authors, printers, and publishers." Wilkes was arrested and thrown into the Tower. A week later he was released by the court on account of his privilege as a member of Parliament.

Lord North moved that No. 45—which was the issue of the North Briton complained of—was a false, scandalous, and seditious article, and practically everybody voted for the motion. No. 45 was publicly burned, as if you could burn up truth, if it be truth; and it was in this instance.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator quote the particular date again?

Mr. BORAH. This occurred in 1763.

Wilkes, thereupon, on January 19, 1764, was expelled from the House of Commons. He was also convicted in the court. As he was absent in Paris, recuperating from a wound received in a duel, he could not be sentenced, and was therefore declared an outlaw.

He returned to London in 1768 and asked for a pardon, which was denied. He ran for Parliament, and was defeated. He again ran in the county of Middlesex, and was elected. About this time he was sentenced under the old conviction to imprisonment for 22 months. He was again expelled from Parliament February 3, 1769. The voters of Middlesex promptly reelected him. Parliament declared the election void. He was again reelected and again rejected. In the fourth election Col. Luttrell ran against him, receiving 296 votes to 1,143 received by Wilkes. The House declared Luttrell duly elected. Then a storm of public indignation broke throughout England and the cry became "Wilkes and liberty," inspired by the denial of the right of the people to select their own representatives.

His prison cell was thronged daily by people from all parts of the Kingdom.

In 1769 he was elected alderman for London; in 1771 he was elected sheriff of London; in 1774 he was elected Lord Mayor of London. He sat in Parliament from 1774 to 1790. In 1782 he had expunged from the record of Parliament all the declarations which Parliament had made against him.

That was accomplished in 1763 and the years immediately following under rather adverse circumstances, so far as the people were concerned, because they had very few rights at that time. I advise those who think they can deny the most essential rights of the people—and the right to choose their representatives is one of those—to reflect upon this page of English history.

Mr. President, it is the most dangerous thing imaginable to fly in the face of the fundamental principles of representative government and to exclude men from representation in legislative bodies because of political opinion. Aside from the legal question involved, think of the utter unwisdom of it. Here are five Socialists in a body of 150 or perhaps 200 members, and they are excluded from that body—upon what possible theory I do not know, except that their views would be dangerous. Well, that does not dispose of their views. You can not thus be rid of their opinions. You can not destroy socialism in that way. You must meet its arguments before the electorate. If you are defeated, they have the right to sit in places of power and to legislate.

Mr. President, I am not a believer in socialism as I understand socialism. I think if it were adopted in this country those who are now urging it would be as quick to regret it as those who are now opposing it. I do not believe that socialism can be made a success either from the standpoint of material progress or from the standpoint of moral and intellectual progress. But that has nothing to do whatever with the question which I am now debating. There is no way by which we can more effectually augment and spread the doctrine of socialism or sovietism than to admit by word and act that our own system of Government has broken down and that we are willing to trample upon the most fundamental rights of representative government in order to try to shield ourselves from the onrushing tide of socialism. There is only one way to meet socialism, if it can be met at all, and that is to demonstrate that this blessed old Republic without sacrifice of its fundamental principles is sufficient to meet every emergency in social progress, and to deal effectively with every crisis in industrial affairs, and to provide effectively and successfully for the progress and the happiness and advancement of the human family. I am one of those who believe that we can keep the Constitution and its guaranties, observe all its pledges in all their integrity, deny no man or class of men the rights and privileges which it provides for, and yet endanger not at all the safety or security and the stability of American civilization. The theory that there are times when provisions of the Constitution are suspended, either in peace or war, is a perfectly fallacious and vicious theory. The theory that you must do away with the guaranties of the Constitution in order to save the Constitution is not only folly but when put in practice is a conspiracy against our entire form of government. There is no occasion, in my opinion, for this utter distrust, apparently, of the well-established, thoroughly tested and tried principles of representative government. This appeal to force, to arbitrary power, to oppression, will work no benefit to the American people. It will in the end prove rather an unmitigated curse to the American people.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] anticipated me in my purpose of referring to the incident recently occurring in the New York Legislature. He has expressed his opinion, not only of the act but of the consequences inevitably flowing from it, so much more conclusively and eloquently than I could possibly hope to do that I am almost tempted to leave the subject with the mere expression of my cordial approval.

The incident, so far as I have observed, has not received the commendation of any respectable journal assuming to know all the facts. On the other hand, it has been properly criticized and condemned by the majority of them. I have had occasion once or twice to criticize what is called the nonpartisan movement, the Non-Partisan League of North Dakota. A social revolution is in progress in that State, the outcome of which no man can foresee; but I have taken especial pains to emphasize the fact that the movement, from its inception to the present time, has been conducted under the forms of law. No constitutional or other lawful provision has been violated, so far as I know, either in the inception or in the progress up to this time of the purpose of the organization. I think it is doomed to defeat. I think it is a peaceful revolution. I think its purpose and its methods are inimical to representative government; but so long as the majority of the people of North Dakota through the legal forms of political expression have sanctioned the movement, just so long does it represent the sentiment of those people, and must be tolerated and treated accordingly. It is thereby in grateful contrast to the wild and irresponsible turbulence of I. W. W.ism and kindred movements.

I have denounced, and I shall continue to denounce as long as I am a Member of this body, all forms of violence, all appeals to violence, to bloodshed and riotous revolution, either to menace or to overthrow the institutions of this Government, but if men like the Socialist representatives of the city of New York lawfully nominated, elected, and certified as the representatives of their particular constituencies, are to be denied the right of representation and the right to their seats in the legislative bodies of the general assembly, not because of any challenge of the legality of their election, not because of any contest, either actual or threatened, but simply because they are the exponents of a public policy which is obnoxious to the majority, then those men and their constituents are necessarily driven to a resort to unlawful and revolutionary methods for enforcement of the convictions which they entertain.

While I share, and share fully, the views of the Senator from Idaho regarding socialism, I am yet generous enough to concede to the great body of the members of that faith the same sincerity of conviction which I claim for myself. They may be, and I think they are, deluded, but they have a right to be under our institutions, and to express and if possible to give effectual force to their delusions, if by peaceful and lawful methods they can convince a majority of the people that they are not delusions; and none of us—certainly none who have reached my time of life—feel like asserting any infallibility, either in the entertainment or in the expression of political or other convictions.

I trust that the common sense and through that the aroused public opinion of the great Empire State of New York will operate and operate very soon to reverse the action of the majority of the general assembly, and that they will perceive not only the wisdom but the essential policy of recognizing these men as the duly elected representatives of their constituencies and giving them the places to which they have been lawfully chosen. I might say the same regarding another election, the results of which will soon come before the body at the other end of the Capitol, but that, perhaps, might be an unwarranted assumption upon my part, and I shall therefore forbear any comments upon that situation, although I have very decided convictions about it.

Mr. President, I shall support this bill with much reluctance. I do not want to vote for section 3 at all. I know that it is necessary that some action should be taken, particularly in view of the official opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, whereby his hands can be strengthened in his efforts to deal properly with those who are menacing the life and well-being of the Nation by resorting to criminal and unlawful processes. But it is an extremely difficult thing by legislative enactment so to restrict the use of the mails as to accomplish the desired object and at the same time prevent the abuse of the processes which we enact into law. The difference, in other words, between what is and what is not a physical menace to the institutions of the country is something which no man can define and something into the definition of which the opinions and the prejudices of those who are supposed to enforce the law must largely enter. I greatly fear that a law of this kind can be enacted and escape abuses in administration.

I refer to section 3, and I do not know but that some of the provisions of section 2 in their practical administration will develop the same conditions. I do not know to what extent the mails are being improperly used. I do know that they are being so used to a very large degree. I wish it were possible for the Congress by specific legislation to declare what shall and what shall not be given entry into the mails, and thereby do away with that discretion which necessarily accompanies the enactment of such legislation and its subsequent enforcement. In view of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho which has been accepted, I shall give the Government the benefit of the doubt; but I do it with much reluctance, because of my fear and apprehension as to its administration.

I felt the same way regarding the espionage act. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has called attention to specific instances arising during the war in which the fundamental rights of the citizen have been interfered with, most oppressively, and in most instances without any justification.

In times of war that is perhaps to be expected. It certainly is unavoidable in many instances. But while we are technically in a state of war now, we are actually in a state of peace, and consequently there should be no need for those more drastic provisions which at that time were supposed to be essential for the protection of the Republic.

I am satisfied, Mr. President, that this legislation will not prove as efficacious as a great many seem to think, although I hope that it may. It is impossible, in a country like ours, to entirely suppress extremes of opinion, or to prevent those occasional volcanic outbursts which are the offspring of discontent, sometimes real and sometimes assumed. I believe that in the forum of full and unimpaired discussion, the education of the people, so to speak, by those who are capable of educating them, is the essential and may be the ultimate and final salvation of the Republic; for just so long as men appeal to the baser instincts of humanity, just so long as the disparity between the very rich and the very poor is widely apparent, and particularly where the rich, as now, are constantly flaunting their wealth in the faces of discontent and poverty, just so long, Mr. President, will a spirit, whether we call it bolshevism or something else, manifest itself, find expression, and win converts, and until we recognize that fact and meet it, as the great middle class of this country must meet it sooner or later by recognizing its causes and removing them, just so long will legislation like this prove to be palliative and nothing more.

We are deporting aliens who, while they enjoy the blessings and the benefits of American freedom, have lifted their hands and voices against the Government; and I am heartily in favor of deporting them. No man who has not availed himself of the privileges of citizenship here, but who takes advantage of his presence to preach violence and destruction, should be permitted to stay within the jurisdiction of the United States one moment longer than it is necessary to apprehend and to remove him, to send him back to the country of his origin.

But that will not prevent their coming. I have here a very significant cartoon from a paper in my State, the Denver Post, entitled "Ships That Pass in the Night," the design showing one ship going in one direction filled with deportations, another passing in the other direction, labeled "Foreign Immigration to the United States." We can place limitations upon that condition if we will, but it is there, and until the spirit of the people and their apprehensions are aroused to the same degree and to the same extent that the enthusiasm of the Bolshevists manifests itself, just so long will it remain, if it does not expand.

Apprehension has been expressed here regarding the circulation of revolutionary literature among the negroes in the South. That is deplorable; I hope it will be prevented. But, Mr. President, the best way for the country to rid itself of the menace of negro discontent, if it is one, is to extend to the negro full rights and protection under the law. We compel the negro to pay his taxes, we conscript him in our armies, we compel him to obey our laws, but in practice we are prone in too many instances to deprive him of the right to appeal to those laws for his protection when accused of offenses, whether heinous or trivial. You can not expect a great body of people, I do not care who they are, to be loyal to institutions of the benefits of which they are largely deprived.

This evil is not wholly confined to the Southern States. Unfortunately lynch law is contagious, and the victims of it, found hitherto in one section of the country, are found in these days wherever the two races conflict. I am no advocate of race equality, but I am profoundly convinced that law and order are the offspring of that affection for the institutions of one's country which springs from the conviction that they protect as vigorously as they punish. The man who violates the law in this country, black or white, Jew or Gentile, is entitled to every constitutional guaranty which culminates in a trial in courts of competent jurisdiction and before a jury of his peers. Every man who is required to give allegiance to the Nation and obedience to the laws is entitled to demand that the Nation shall protect him in the enjoyment of every right and the protection of every safeguard designed for the welfare of the citizen.

Such a policy, Mr. President, attended by that spirit of toleration which goes with sympathy and enlightenment, and with a recognition of the right of others to his own convictions, even in these perilous and exciting times, will, in my judgment, do much to heal the diseases of the body politic, and much more than any drastic legislation that we can enact. Indeed, such a policy responds to every impulse of enlightened selfishness.

This law will be measurably effective, I hope. But I shall be greatly surprised if it is not supplemented by appeals for something still more drastic before this Congress shall have expired and passed into history. I hope not.

I shall not detain the Senate longer, Mr. President. I suppose the Senator having charge of the bill would like to obtain a vote to-day. But I shall ask permission, before taking my seat, as indicating some of the things that are transpiring in the country and out of it, to insert in the RECORD a communication to the New York Times of the 24th of December last, from the pen of Walter Duranty. The communication consists very largely of the reproduction of a document which was found in the soles of the boots of a Russian sailor seized at Riga while attempting to make his way to the United States.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be inserted in the RECORD, as follows:

WIDE PLOT OF REDS TO SPREAD CHAOS IN THIS COUNTRY—LETTER FOUND ON RUSSIAN COURIER BOUND HERE PROPOSED TO DISORGANIZE LABOR—ALSO TO DISCREDIT WILSON—AGITATION AGAINST LEAGUE OF NATIONS, CONGRESS, AND CAPITALISTS SUGGESTED—WORKERS MUST BE ARMED—COMMUNIST PARTY TO BE ORGANIZED FROM EXTREMISTS AND CONTROLLED FROM MOSCOW.

Here is a copy of the document mentioned in my previous dispatch, which, together with valuable jewels and large sums of money, was found in the soles of the boots of a Russian sailor seized here while trying to make his way to the United States. The prisoner's name and the name and address of the person in America for whom the document and funds were intended I have communicated to the proper quarter.

The document is signed jointly by Buharin, chief of the executive committee, Bureau of the Communist Internationale, and by Bersin, alias Winter, a well-known Bolshevik of Lettish origin. More than any argument, it proves what are the real aims of the red leaders and what their protestations of peace are worth. It begins:

"Dear Comrades: Permit us to give you a full résumé of our advice and instructions regarding current work in America.

"1. We firmly believe that after the expulsion of a number of sections of certain nationalities from the American Socialist Party the time has come to organize in the United States a communist party, which will proceed to get officially in touch with the Communist Internationale.

"We firmly believe also that this party could be organized from, firstly, the Socialist Propaganda League; secondly, the extremer—and now excluded—elements of the American Socialist Party; thirdly, the extremer elements of the Socialist Labor Party, which, as we are well aware, it is most important to split, as its actions are contrary to our aims; and, fourthly, the International Workers of the World, whose principle of nonpolitical action will disappear as it comes to recognize the dictatorship of the proletariat and soviet rule. The organization of this party should be effected in Moscow.

TO WORK ON SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

"2. We firmly believe that one of the most important aims at present is the organization of communist small nucleus centers among soldiers and sailors as a fighting section to carry on energetic propaganda in organizing soviets of soldiers and sailors and in preaching fanatical 'hostility' (the Russian word means literally persecution) toward officers and generals.

"3. Such organizations of workmen soviets as already exist should not be allowed to degenerate into philanthropic or cultural associations. We are much afraid that in America there is just this danger. Therefore we strongly emphasize that until the soviets have got the upper hand they must regard themselves as militant [the word is underlined] units of the fight for national control and proletariat dictatorship. There must not be an inch yielded from this standpoint. [All the last sentence is underlined in the original.]

"The organization of strikes and of unemployed and the fomenting of insurrections; that is the task appointed. Secondly, it is necessary to take the utmost precautions against the splitting up of the proletariat among the already existing national political parties. Therefore direct your energies along the lines of developing the movement to establish soviets of workers of different political views.

"The general platform will be as follows:

"(a) Down with the Senate and Congress.

"(b) Down with capitalists in the factories. Long live the management of the factories by the workers.

"(c) Down with speculators. All organizations of food and supply to be in the workers' hands.

"Everywhere it is necessary sharply to emphasize the idea of seizing the whole machinery of economic administration by the working class, and to direct toward this object propaganda and agitation—by an outcry against the high cost of living.

HOSTILITY TO WILSON AND LEAGUE.

"It is desirable to spread hostility (again the Russian word persecution) toward Wilson as a two-faced criminal as well as toward his league of nations.

"Regarding intervention, you already know what to do, but we ask you to stress the factor of our economic strangulation—and not only ours but Hungary's previously—and also to rub in the fact that western democrats are acting as our executioners.

"5. It is of supreme importance to pay the closest attention to the American Federation of Labor. This must be smashed in pieces [last three words are underlined] by active work in collaboration with the International Workers of the World to bring about strike movements and revolution.

"6. It is most necessary to develop propaganda to install into the minds of the workers the paramount necessity for arming [this word is underlined]. Revolutionary soldiers who are demobilized should not give up their rifles.

"As a more general platform:

"(a) An international socialist republic.

"(b) Frighten everyone with the bogey of new wars being prepared by the capitalists.

"(c) Use the utmost efforts to oppose the organization of White Guards. This should be done in most ruthless and violent manner.

"7. Work for the centralization and combination of your endeavors. Don't give them any opportunity to smash you separately. Organize conspirative committees.

"With communistic greetings.

(Signed) "Bureau of the Executive Committee of the Communist Internationale.

"BUHARING and J BERSIN, alias WINTER."

This document is presented as translated literally from the Russian original with the double check of one allied citizen familiar with Russian and one English-speaking native, besides myself.

RED ACTIVITIES IN OTHER LANDS.

Further documents seized from bolshevist conspirators here prove the existence of nefarious red activities in other countries besides Letvia and America. The names and addresses of English agents and "comrades" are certainly included, and, it is said, of agents and "comrades" in Scandinavia and Holland, though this I can not yet affirm positively.

A citizen of an allied country who has just interrogated the Russian sailor caught bearing the quoted document to the United States said to-day that this courier was an intelligent-looking fellow about 32 years old who made no bones about admitting that he was a communist, but cleverly evaded leading questions.

It is known that during the last 10 years he had worked on ships that put in at American ports, but up to the present he professes ignorance of the English language. Recently he has written articles for bolshevist sheets here and in Russia which are said to reveal no small degree of education and brain power. My informant got the impression that he was no mere tool, but a clever and dangerous man from whom it will be hard to extract much information other than that already known. This, however, is great, as his interesting documents are many.

Although the news of the arrest of the conspirators is not yet made public here, the effect undoubtedly is being felt, as public sentiment is much less uneasy. The people are also reassured by a timely statement from the Lettish commander, Col. Ballod, regarding the stability of the antibolshevist front and the impossibility of the reds breaking through.

The street car strike is not yet settled, but now that the dangerous element behind it has been eliminated, there is much less cause for anxiety. I talked to-day with one of the strikers through a Lettish officer. This man said he had been employed for 15 years, had a wife and three children to support, had no political bias, communist, socialist, or otherwise, but agreed to strike because he found it impossible to live on 175 Czar rubles—about $3 American at present exchange—per month.

As prices run here in rubles, he was unquestionably right, and it must be said that the strikers' demands seem wholly justified. But that is one of the cleverest features of bolshevist action. It always begins with a strike that seems wholly reasonable, with the double object of enlisting public sympathy at the outset and of later inflaming the strikers' minds and bringing about other "sympathetic" strikes, if their just demands are not promptly granted.

It is the good German strategic policy of driving first at the weakest point. Several passages in the document seized on the sailor show that this is the case, and further establish the truth of the assertion made to me in Copenhagen by Danish Minister Scavenus that the reds aim always at disrupting existing labor organizations and destroying the influence of their leaders so as to be able to conduct the mass of workers along their own lines.

It is possible that the Moscow authorities and their sympathizers in America may question the authenticity of this document or attempt to disavow the conspirators here. It can be stated that papers, admissions of prisoners, and details of the whole organization leave not the slightest doubt on the subject in the minds of those best fitted to judge.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to say a further word before a vote is taken on the pending measure.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] called our attention this morning to the interesting story of the prosecution of John Wilkes. I am glad he did so. It can not be referred to, perhaps, too often, and it is commendable in any Senator to seize any opportunity again to relate the story, for out of that prosecution, and the prosecution of Thomas Paine, also referred to by the Senator from Idaho in discussing the pending bill the other day, grew the guaranty of the freedom of speech and of the press in the Constitution of the United States and the constitutions of the States. Although the principles were recognized to some extent in the English law prior to that time, they took form and substance and took possession of the minds of the people of this country through those prosecutions.

But, Mr. President, lest some idea might be gathered from the remarks of the Senator from Idaho that anything in the prosecution of Thomas Paine militates against the measure before us, I want to put in the RECORD the indictment upon which Thomas Paine was brought to trial. It reads as follows:

Thomas Paine, late of London, gentleman, being a wicked, malicious, seditious, and ill-disposed person, and being greatly disaffected to our said sovereign lord, the now King, and to the happy constitution and government of this kingdom * * * and to bring them into hatred and contempt, on the 16th day of February, in the thirty-second year of the reign of our said present sovereign lord the King, with force and arms at London aforesaid, to wit, in the Parish of St. Mary le Bone, in the ward of Cheap, he, the said Thomas, wickedly, maliciously, and seditiously did write and publish, and caused to be written and published, a certain false, scandalous, malicious, and seditious libel of and concerning the said late happy Revolution and the said settlements and limitations of the crown and regal governments of the said kingdoms and dominions * * * intituled, "Rights of Man, Part the Second, Combining Principle and Practice." * * * In one part thereof, according to the tenor and effect following, that is to say, "All hereditary government is in its nature tyranny. An heritable crown"—meaning, amongst others, the crown of this kingdom—"or an heritable throne"—meaning the throne of this kingdom—"or by what other fanciful name such things may be called, have no other significant explanation than that mankind are heritable property. To inherit a government is to inherit the people, as if they were flocks and herds." * * * "The time is not very distant when England will laugh at itself for sending to Holland, Hanover, Zell, or Brunswick for men"—meaning the said King William the Third and King George the First—" at the expense of a million a year, who understood neither her laws, her language, nor her interest, and whose capacities would scarcely have fitted them for the office of a parish constable. If government could be trusted to such hands, it must be some easy and simple thing, indeed, and materials fit for all the purposes may be found in every town and village in England." In contempt of our said lord the now King and his laws, to the evil example of all others in like case offending, and against the peace of our said lord the King, his crown and dignity. Whereupon the said attorney general of our said lord the King, who for our said lord the King in this behalf prosecuteth for our said lord the King, prayeth the consideration of the court here in the premises, and that due process of law may be awarded against him, the said Thomas Paine, in this behalf, to make him answer to our said lord the King, touching and concerning the premises aforesaid.

To this information the defendant hath appeared and pleaded not guilty, and thereupon issue is joined.

So, Mr. President, it will be observed that while Thomas Paine condemned the English system of government as absolutely absurd and unreasonable, and urged everybody to adopt some other system that was more consonant with common sense, he did not advocate the overthrow of the English Government by force or violence. If Thomas Paine were indicted under this bill, if it ever becomes a statute, the Senator from Idaho would have no difficulty whatever in having a demurrer to the indictment sustained. The facts recited in the indictment upon which he was brought to trial do not make a case coming under this class of legislation. I do not imagine for a moment that the Senator from Idaho intended to convey the idea that a prosecution under this bill, if it should become a law, would be analogous at all to the prosecution of Thomas Paine for seditious libel in advocating a change by constitutional means in the English system of government; but I was apprehensive that it might be conceived from what he said that it would be so. The lessons to be gathered from the prosecutions of John Wilkes and Thomas Paine by the English Government are many and salutary, but none of them militate in any way against the measure that is now before us.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, my reference to Thomas Paine was with reference to section 3. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, without comment, a letter written by Thomas Paine on what constitutes the freedom of the press.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Prior to what is in England called the revolution, which was in 1688, no work could be published in that country without first obtaining permission of an officer appointed by the Government for inspecting works intended for publication. The same was the case in France, except that in France there were 40 who were called censors, and in England there was but one, called imprimateur.

At the revolution the office of imprimateur was abolished, and as the works could then be published without first obtaining the permission of the Government officer the press was in consequence of that abolition said to be free, and it was from this circumstance that the term liberty of the press arose. The press, which is a tongue to the eye, was then put exactly in the case of the human tongue. A man does not ask liberty beforehand to say something he has a mind to say, but he becomes answerable afterwards for the atrocities he may utter.

Some lawyers in defending their clients (for the generality of lawyers, like Swiss soldiers, will fight on either side) have often given their opinion of what they defined the liberty of the press to be. One said it was this, another said it was that, and so on, according to the case they were pleading. Now, these men ought to have known that the term "liberty of the press" arose from a fact—the abolition of the office of imprimateur—and that opinion has nothing to do in the case. The term refers to the fact of printing, free from prior restraint, and not at all to the matter printed, whether good or bad. The public at large—or, in case of prosecution, a jury of the country—will be judges of the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 3184.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the sedition bill, and that the water-power bill shall not lose its place as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senate continues the consideration of Senate bill 3317, and the pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words with reference to the measure before it passes, as it will. It has so little merit that it will pass. The Senators smile. It is a joke, a tragic joke, when our calendar is crowded with great bills which would have dealt with the serious problems of reconstruction which are upon us that such a measure as this should be consuming our time. If I did not feel unwilling to delay the Senate I would read the numbers and the titles of the bills which have been displaced, crowded into the background by this repressive and destructive legislation.

The great Americanization bill, which would seek to cure these evils not by repression but by the eradication of them, has been shoved into the background week after week and month after month, despite all of the efforts of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], who has such a true insight into the causes of that discontent which has become a menace to our institutions.

I might mention a bill on the calendar which would provide hospital facilities for the poor drug addicts of the country, a bill which must be enacted before there can be any enforcement of the Harrison antidrug law or antinarcotic law, a law which can not be enforced and at the violation of which the officials of the Government are winking, because to enforce it would be to create a great host of maniacs—perhaps 500,000 of them altogether—men and women who practically would become maniacs if deprived of those drugs which under a notorious violation of the law they are now allowed to obtain and which they must obtain until hospital facilities are provided for their treatment and for their cure.

Prohibition legislation was enacted; and thus deprived of alcoholic stimulants many of those addicted to alcohol are turning to drugs, and under the lack of enforcement of the Harrison Act—a lack of enforcement which is necessary—these people are becoming drug addicts, because Congress has not had the time to pay attention to that problem.

I have mentioned the antinarcotic bill and the Americanization bill. There are many other bills of a like nature upon the calendar, constructive, corrective, rather than repressive in their nature.

On yesterday during the course of my remarks in opposition to this measure I referred to the fact that many labor organizations in all parts of the country had passed resolutions in condemnation of the legislation, because they consider that it may be used, as was the espionage act, by governmental officials to censor the press, to curtail, in violation of the Constitution the rights of free press, of free speech, and of free assemblage, rights so dear to every true American heart and so essential to the preservation of the liberties of all, and particularly of those, the very best of our citizens, who labor with their hands and live by the sweat of their brows.

I placed in the RECORD as part of my remarks several communications from local unions, members of the American Federation of Labor, which indicated, I think quite clearly, the attitude of organized labor which is so strongly opposed to all of these repressive statutes. I had many other communications of a similar nature upon the same subject, a few more of which I desire to read into the RECORD to-day in order that Members of the Senate, if they choose to read the RECORD, may be made fully aware of the fact that the legislation is considered—and I believe very properly considered—to be hostile to the interests and inimical to the rights of our working people. All the wisdom of the country, as I have said on a number of occasions, is not in the brains and in the minds of the members of legislative bodies.

To conserve the time of the Senate I will have some of these inserted in the RECORD, where they will not be read—not read, not heeded. Why, Mr. President, if they were to be read and heeded, there would be men here seriously considering the attitude of organized labor, the attitude of our working people, the attitude of the intelligent masses of Americans upon this most important piece of legislation. How many Senators are here paying any attention? They do not care. They have made up their minds to support the committee and to vote for the bill, and what organized labor has to say, what the masses of the American people have to say, makes no difference to them. You will find, probably, that the measure will pass not only without these letters having been read and heeded, but probably without even a roll call.

I will read a few of the letters, because they will not be read if they are all inserted in the RECORD. My duty in advising the Senate is done when I shall have read some of the letters and placed some of them in the RECORD and briefly expressed further my opinion of the proposed legislation.

These are but a few letters selected from many. From the International Association of Machinists, Lodge 105, Toledo, Ohio, is a letter addressed to me, stamped with the seal of the union, and reading as follows:

As American citizens we believe that free press, free speech, and the right to assemble are the foundations of our liberty and should not be curtailed, and that war-time measures restricting these liberties should not be made into the laws governing the people of a free Republic in time of peace, and we therefore appeal to your patriotism to use your influence and vote to defeat Senate bill 3317, introduced by Senator STERLING.

To conserve the time of the Senate, I will not read, but will ask to have inserted a letter from the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, of Harrisburg, Pa.; also one from Local Union No. 598, Brotherhood of Carpenters of America, Wabash, Ind.

But I will read a rather long letter from Joint Council No. 9, United Shoe Workers of America, 2040 Northwest Avenue, Chicago, Ill., a letter which indicates the thoughtfulness and the intelligence of the members of the United Shoe Workers of America, a little more of which intelligence and earnestness I wish might be represented right here in the Senate Chamber and in the other branch of Congress when such measures as these are pending. It is long, but I shall read it. It is written by one of the men whose opinions are regarded so lightly at the present time during the pendency of this measure, for no one really has discussed the attitude of the masses of the people toward the legislation at any great length. The letter is addressed to me and reads as follows:

At regular meeting of above-named council, Friday, November 28, unanimous action was taken to offer strenuous protest through you against Senate bill 3317 and its companion bill in the House of Representatives, and our reasons for taking such action are based upon our knowledge and understanding of the autocratic, sinister forces and influences that are legislating for and seeking the adoption of such measures. Years of experience, much of which has proven sad and bitter experience, has convinced us that no matter how carefully our laws are worded or how reasonable or just they appear on the surface, they seldom, if ever, operate in the interest and advancement and uplift of the vast majority of people in the United States, who, more than any other, need just laws democratically administered in order that they may live and develop their lives, conduct, and characters in accordance with the principles and programs established by the courageous, worthy statesmen and others who first instituted a government in which the will of the majority was the essential fundamental feature. Especially is this true with regard to our laws dealing with commerce and industry, not because they express the hopes and designs of plutocracy in their wording, but because of the construction and interpretation which, in the far too numerous instances, is given them by our administrative forces, particularly our courts; and this twisting and construing laws to conform to the desires of the moneyed interests has for years been conducted in such a brazen and flagrant manner that every intelligent American to-day knows that in the vast majority of instances where the issue is the moneyed interests versus the rights of the majority of citizens, particularly organized working people, such issues are not decided by the merits of the case or by what would do the most good to the greatest number, but according to the will or at least favorable to said interests, and such practice has created a very pronounced and growing suspicion among the vast majority of the working people that our administrators, particularly our courts, are but servants of those interests and are not considerate of the common interests or welfare of the majority of the common people. This opinion is now national in its scope, and no legislator will deny that it has reached a degree of distrust and impatience such as to threaten those features of our institutions and principles of government that should at all times hold the confidence and respect of the vast majority of citizens. Too long have wage earners in this country suffered by having their rights, privileges, and conscientious protests outlawed by class interpretations of just such laws as the proposed Senate bill 3317, and hundreds of capable and honest Americans, who have the best interests of our country at heart, are now languishing in prison cells for the sole reason that the financial kings want them in prison and found it an easy matter to get one or a dozen of our supposedly impartial judges to send them there. The spirit and principle of Americanism has never been, nor never will be, killed by jailing courageous men and women, and the continued jailing of such characters will ultimately force a condition where an outraged majority may strike back with weapons other than the ballot, and we would consider it a sad reflection upon all of us, particularly our statesmen, if subsequent industrial laws and conditions force an outraged working class to strike blindly or illegally in an attempt to effect such changes as they believe to be necessary, but which should at all times be effected through the orderly, lawful processes embodied in our Constitution. We believe you will agree with us that Senate bill 3317 and its companion bill in the House of Representatives will, if adopted as law, work untold hardship on an already outraged working class and will prove a large contributing factor in fanning the flames of bitterness and resentment, which are already far too pronounced.

Mr. President, this man who works upon shoes, this operator of a shoe machine, knows what is in the Constitution of the United States; he knows what his rights are under the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which guarantees a free press, free speech, and the right of assembly, free from invasion by Congress, even though there may be learned lawyers, Senators, and Members of the House of Representatives who, with a fine legal ability, are able to argue that the first amendment to the Constitution does not mean what it says, and that, therefore, we may pass a law which is in plain contravention of it. Perhaps it would be better if we had a few shoemakers in the Senate or in the House of Representatives of the United States. Perhaps the Constitution would be in safer hands.

Senate bill 3317 and its companion bill in the House of Representatives will, if adopted as law, work untold hardship on an already discontented working class and will prove a large contributing factor in "fanning the flames of bitterness and resentment, which are already far too much pronounced."

That is the whole argument against this proposed statute. No man can successfully contend before the intelligent American people that we have no State or Federal statutes against direct incitation to the use of force or violence against persons or against the Government. We have such statutes; they are drastic statutes; and I cited them on yesterday. The point is that to enact this proposed statute at this time is to do exactly what this intelligent member of the United Shoe Workers of America says: It is to "fan the flames of bitterness and resentment, already now far too pronounced."

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert some other letters from other locals of the labor unions. Such letters, I may say, are coming from all over the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

TOLEDO, OHIO, December 1, 1919.

Hon. JOSEPH I. FRANCE,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: As American citizens we believe the free press, free speech, and the right to assembly, the foundation of our liberty, should not be curtailed, and that war-time measures restricting these liberties should not be made into laws governing the people of a free Republic in time of peace, and we therefore appeal to your patriotism to use your influence and vote to defeat Senate bill No. 3317, introduced by Senator STERLING.

With best wishes for success in your efforts to preserve American liberties,

Respectfully, yours,

TOLEDO LODGE 105, INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS, [SEAL.] CHAS. BANK, Recording Secretary.

PENNSYLVANIA FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Harrisburg, Pa., November 19, 1919.

Hon. JOSEPH I. FRANCE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: By order of a special convention of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, held in Pittsburgh recently, I forward to you a copy of a resolution there adopted:

Resolution No. 8, introduced by resolutions committee.

"Resolved, That the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor in convention assembled protests most emphatically against United States Senate bill No. 3317, introduced by Senator STERLING, which ostensibly aims to punish with heavy penalties any advocacy of a change of Government by violence or violent resistance to Government authority, but which may readily be construed, as was the espionage act, to apply to any vehement protest against existing conditions.

"The orderly forces of Pennsylvania labor realize the sinister menace of this bill to the American liberties of the working people: Therefore be it further

"Resolved, That we call upon the Congress of the United States to defeat this bill; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to Senators PENROSE, KNOX, FRANCE, MCCORMICK, CAPPER, LA FOLLETTE, GRONNA, and NORRIS."

Thanking you for giving it your fullest consideration, I am,

Very truly, yours,

C. F. QUINN, Secretary.

LOCAL UNION NO. 598,
UNITED BROTHERHOOD OF CARPENTERS AND JOINERS OF AMERICA,
Wabash, Ind., November 26, 1919.

Hon. JOSEPH I. FRANCE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of Local Union No. 598, Carpenters and Joiners of America, November 21, 1919, a resolution was passed:

"Whereas a bill is now on the calendar of the United States Senate, No. 3317;

"Whereas we deem the laws now in force, National and State, are ample to suppress all persons who may attempt to overthrow the Government: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we vigorously protest against any law that may be construed and used by the enemy of labor to suppress labor. The time has arrived when we have no more use for the laws in the United States to suppress labor than we have for the principles of bolshevism."

Yours, truly,

J. W. SCOTTEN,
Recording Secretary.

LOCAL UNION NO. 275,
BROTHERHOOD OF PAINTERS, DECORATORS, AND PAPERHANGERS OF AMERICA,
Chicago, November 28, 1919.

Hon. JOSEPH I. FRANCE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: At the meeting of Local Union 275, November 18, I was instructed, by unanimous vote, to write to you in regard of the so-called "peace-time sedition law," known as Senate bill 3317.

Local Union 275 feels that this bill should be defeated, because it will serve only to restrict the lawful activities of organized labor, while it will not give more protection to the Government against agitators of violence.

Furthermore, the wording of the bill leaves it open for misconstruction, and makes it a dangerous weapon in the hands of officials who are to enforce the law.

Local Union 275 of the Brotherhood of Painters expects that you do everything in your power to defeat this bill.

Respectfully, yours,

ALBERT FRIEDLIEB,
Recording Secretary.

INTERNATIONAL MOULDERS' UNION OF NORTH AMERICA, NO. 42,
Quakertown, Pa., November 20, 1919.

Hon. JOSEPH I. FRANCE.

DEAR SIR: Local No. 42 of the Iron Moulders' Union of North America kindly asks of you to do all in your power to prevent Senate bill 3317 and its companion bill in the House of Representatives from becoming a law. Thanking you in advance very much for this favor and hoping you will comply with it, I remain,

Yours, fraternally,

JOHN C. KOEHLER,
Corresponding Secretary,
141 Second Street, Quakertown, Pa.

Mr. FRANCE. Here is one which I shall read from Local Union 2880, United Mine Workers of America, Bonanza, Ark.:

Resolution of Local Union No. 2880, United Mine Workers of America—

It is worth while, Mr. President, to pay attention to the language used by these local unions of workers on shoes and workers in the mines. It might encourage some of those Senators who feel that the Great Republic is about to totter and fall to ruin because a few rattle-brained anarchists are publishing irrational literature, the very best argument against which is its own language and its own thought. As some one has already pointed out, one of our great metropolitan dailies not long ago, while this subject was being discussed, to show the utter folly of anarchistic doctrines and of anarchistic literature, published extracts from such literature. Of course the paper carrying such quotations from anarchistic literature would have been nonmailable under the pending bill. Furthermore, the very anarchistic literature it might be well to import into this country in order that our people might know the utter folly of it can not even be imported after this bill passes. My point is that the man who believes in the intelligence of the masses of our people is not apt to be frightened by such useless and futile agitation as that which is now being carried on. As I said yesterday, I am not frightened, because I have faith in the intelligence of the masses of our people; and those who have not such faith might do well to pay not only attention to the substance but to the language of the resolutions written by these miners and workers on shoes.

Resolution of Local Union No. 2880, United Mine Workers of America, Bonanza, Ark.

Resolved, That whereas Senate bill No. 3317 now before the United States Senate does not reflect the true sentiment of the common people; and

Whereas there is a widespread conviction throughout the country to-day that in some way the Government does not represent the American people, but does represent the special interests and all forms of corporate greed which has done so much, and is still doing so much, to undermine this Government, which of late years has been drifting toward despotism with such rapid strides; and

Whereas we are now governed by injunction, intimidation, and repression—

That is not bad language to be thought out in the depths of the mines, in the darkness and in the damp, with nothing but the glow of the miner's lamp to point the way, and with peril and death lurking in every corridor. It is not bad language to be thought out by men so preoccupied in the bowels of the earth. It might do credit to a Senator who has the time at his disposal, sitting in his comfortable office or in his upholstered chair here, to find phrases suiting the thought he wishes to convey—

Therefore be it

Resolved, That we demand the restoration of government by the people; we demand the freedom of speech and press as the best safeguards of any government, and we demand the repeal of every statute that prevents the free and fearless discussion of every question concerning governmental affairs—

That is not bad, I say, for the miners. They have to meet for their deliberations at night after the day's work is done, with tired brains and sore muscles, and with that physical fatigue which is not conducive to the framing of clear and eloquent language—

Resolved further, That we are determined to oppose by every lawful means within our power the enforcement of Senate bill No. 3317, or any bill of like character, because such legislation as this is inspired by the moneyed power, and is intended to rob us of our sovereign rights as American citizens to free speech, free press, and full and free discussions of all public questions, and places us at the mercy of the Federal courts who owe no allegiance to the American people—

I disagree with that. They owe an allegiance, and I believe that the Federal courts, in spite of all their shortcomings, in spite of what has seemed to me at times to be at least something of subserviency to a popular hysteria, have been, as a rule, the bulwark of our Constitution; and yet I do not criticize those who take the extreme other view.

They go on to say:

Who have always been responsive to the enemies of popular government, the autocrats of wealth; and be it further

Resolved, That we remind the Congress of the warning of Lincoln just before the Civil War.

These miners knew about Lincoln. The miners who drew these resolutions have not forgotten him.

Lincoln said: "The people of these United States are the rightful masters of both Congresses and courts; not to overthrow the Constitution, but to overthrow the men who pervert the Constitution."

I tell you, Mr. President, the American people have not forgotten that great doctrine; and I believe that the time is coming, sirs, when they are preparing to overthrow—and the sooner it comes the better it will suit me—the men who are perverting our Constitution.

They proceed:

What constitutes the bulwark of our own liberty and independence? It is not our frowning battlements, our bristling seacoasts, our Army, and our Navy. These are not our reliance against tyranny. All of these may be turned against us without making us weaker for the struggle. Our reliance is in the love of liberty which God has planted in us. Our defense is in the spirit which prizes liberty as the heritage of all men, in all lands, everywhere.

Senators, do not tremble for a Republic bulwarked by miners—miners who, in the bowels of the earth, learn to write sentiments such as these, in language so eloquent and so full of appeal:

Destroy this spirit, and you have planted the seeds of despotism at your own doors. Familiarize yourselves with the chains of bondage, and you prepare your own limbs to wear them. Accustomed to trample on the rights of others, you have lost the genius of your own independence and become the fit subjects of the first cunning tyrant who rises among you.

(Signed) ——— ———.

Ordered by Local Union 2887, United Mine Workers of America, Bonanza, Ark.

If the miners who wrote that resolution were sitting in the Senate of the United States, there can be no doubt as to how they would vote upon this bill and upon other similar vicious and unjustifiable measures.

These few letters were selected out of a large number which have been written to me both in opposition to this bill and in favor of the bill which I introduced in January of last year for the repeal of the espionage act—a bill which, although before the Judiciary Committee and its subcommittee for many months, I believe never received any serious consideration by that committee.

Out of consideration for the Senator who has charge of this bill, and out of respect for the Senate and the respect which I believe is due it, not only from its Members but from the people, because of the great functions which it was designed to perform, I shall forego any discussion of the methods which were employed by some of the members of the subcommittee having these various bills under consideration and charged with the duty of giving them all careful and impartial consideration. I do not mean dishonorable or unfair methods but methods which seemed to me to indicate that they were not fully and impartially considering the great issues raised by these various bills. I shall leave it to the judgment of the masses of our intelligent citizens whether the members of the subcommittee who have favorably reported this bill have carefully considered the legislation already upon our statute books making direct incitation to the use of force or violence against persons or against the Government a crime, whether they have considered the evidence of the past, as revealed by our early national history as to the effect which is to be expected and which is inevitable as a result of such repressive legislation, and whether they have weighed, considered, and sought to interpret more recent events which have occurred during the full operation and under the drastic administration of the espionage act.

It has been said that history repeats itself. That is true. The course of human events tends to move in circles and cycles, instead of ever forward and upward in the direction of orderly progress because of the blindness, stupidity, and intolerance of the old guard of Bourbons, who so constantly stand across the path resisting all advance.

I have come to the conclusion that Bourbonism and what we generally understand in common phrase as bolshevism are but different manifestations of the same disease, a disease the principal symptoms of which are stupidity and intolerance. Stupid, intolerant, senile, ivory-pated Bourbonism can strike its hand in a spirit of perfect fellowship into the bloody palm of bolshevism. I mean bolshevism as it is ordinarily understood, bolshevism as it is reported and conceived in its worst aspects. Bourbonism and such bolshevism both practice tyranny, the tyranny of the majority over the minority, which respects no law and disregards personal rights. Both believe in the rule of force rather than in the rule of reason. Both dote upon reaction and revel in repression. Both would muzzle the press and silence discussion.

I have several times quoted a paragraph from Edmund Burke, to which my attention was first directed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], a Senator truly imbued with the spirit of our institutions, a champion and defender of them and of the rights of the people against all open and insidious assaults. Edmund Burke said:

It is right that there should be a clamor whenever there is an abuse. The fire bell at midnight disturbs your sleep, but it keeps you from being burned in your bed. The hue and cry alarms the country, but it preserves all the property of the province.

With all this your reactionary Bourbon disagrees, because he is either blind to or parasitically thrives upon abuses. He hates free, fearless, and vigorous speech, because it disturbs and hurts him. He resists all change, defends existing conditions, and seeks to discredit or persecute those who demand reforms. He distrusts plans for universal education, because he has a secret contempt for the minds of the masses of mankind. Bourbonism is senilism. It is intolerant of contradiction and storms against change. It remembers fondly but misinterprets the past, resents and resists what is new in the present, and views the future with foreboding. The truly liberal and progressive man, on the contrary, defends free speech and universal education, because he has faith in the intelligence and truly trusts the motives of the masses of men. The liberal man knows that we need now, not repression, but a new and better expression for the spirit of social discontent and of revolt. Discontent can be destructive or divine. It can demolish what is or it can upbuild and enlarge it to be a nobler, vaster fane of human liberty. Energy can not be destroyed, it must be converted. We can not suppress all manifestations of that fire and heat which seem now to threaten to bring on a larger conflagration, but by the proper methods we can engage it and employ it as power to drive on the mighty engines of progress.

Ah, Mr. President, the fathers were wiser than ourselves, because they understood that there was a law of conservation for social energy, that efforts to dissipate or imprison it were dangerous, and that it was the duty of wise statesmanship to give it at once free expression and proper direction.

It is a deplorable fact that the Bourbonism which has been dominating our legislative procedure for the past many months has been too blind and stupid to profit by the mistakes of the past. Not all of the fathers were as wise as Washington, Hamilton, and Jefferson. There were amateurs in the art of statecraft in the legislative halls of the Nation in those early days who, filled with the pride of opinion, dared to disregard the counsels of these mighty men, whose wisdom must have been inspired. But our folly far exceeded theirs, for in 1917 and 1918 we not only had the words of Washington, Hamilton, and Jefferson to warn us, but we had the disastrous results which followed the less excusable mistake of those legislators who refused to heed their wisdom in that day.

Repudiating the doctrines of the fathers, disregarding the plainly written language of the Constitution, closing our eyes to the disastrous consequences of the alien and sedition laws of 1798, we passed the speech and press censorship clause of the espionage act and the act amendatory thereof, a far more drastic statute than the old alien and sedition law, and established a bureaucratic tyranny, which deprived the masses of our people of their liberties. Having sown the seed, you seem to be surprised at the harvest. As President Wilson said, in substance, not long since, repression is the seed of revolution. Certainly the Senate was forewarned, for I myself referred to the words of Hamilton, written when the alien and sedition laws of 1798 were pending, which words I have several times since quoted.

Let us not establish tyranny. Energy is a very different thing from violence. If we make no false step, we shall be essentially united, but if we push things to extremes, we shall then give to faction body and solidity.

That paragraph of Hamilton, spoken in 1798, might have warned us in 1918. But it did not warn the Congress of 1798, nor did it warn the men who, in their pride of opinion in 1918, thought that they knew more about the great principles upon which this Government was established than did Alexander Hamilton, who was the chief factor in the writing of that greatest of all governmental documents.

Oh, how richly his prophecy of 1798 was fulfilled. His warning was not heeded by the Congress, and body and solidity were given to faction.

I called attention in May, 1918, to the destructive and disintegrating effects produced by this statute against which he had warned. I called attention to the fact that it almost brought about a dissolution of the Republic, and that out of the discontent and deep sense of injustice which were created by that statute was born the doctrine of nullification and secession, which, growing through the years, at last led this Republic to civil war.

Mr. President, we might have known what was coming. How much revolutionary literature was there, how strong was the radical press, how menacing were the doctrines of anarchy before the enactment of the espionage act! All of this commotion, all of this promotion of those who are spreading the radical literature, all of this growth in lawlessness, have come about while that statute has been in force and while it has been drastically administered.

Of course that is all elementary. Hamilton, Jefferson, and Washington all knew the dangers of free speech. They all knew that liberty might at times become license; but they also knew the greater danger of repressing free discussion.

As the wise old commentator, Cooley, said:

Repression of full and free discussion is dangerous in any government resting upon the will of the people. The people can not fail to believe that they are deprived of rights, and will be certain to become discontented, when their discussion of public measures is sought to be circumscribed by the judgment of others upon their temperance or fairness. They must be left at liberty to speak with the freedom which the magnitude of the supposed wrongs appears in their minds to demand; and if they exceed all the proper bounds of moderation the consolation must be that the evil likely to spring from lively discussion will probably be less and its correction by public sentiment more speedy than if the terrors of the law were brought to bear to prevent the discussion.

Mr. President, if I am mistaken, I am in good company, in the company because I chose it, not because I am fit to be in it because of any abilities which I possess; if I am mistaken, I am mistaken with Jefferson, I am mistaken with Washington, I am mistaken with Hamilton, and being mistaken with them I shall be content.

But, sirs, those men were not mistaken. You disregarded their words in May, 1918, and you enacted a statute which has brought about the very condition which you sought to avoid. Thus do Bourbonism and reaction always defeat their own end.

The remedy for the spirit of discontent and of revolt is not, I say, repression, but reform. If the Congress would now devote itself to the enactment of much-needed corrective and constructive legislation aimed to cure those unfavorable conditions which have been created, aggravated, or new discovered by the war, much of this discontent would disappear.

I am convinced that we need not more repressive but corrective legislation, and that if we restore to our people the liberties which they enjoyed prior to the war, while we move steadily on toward an improvement in social, industrial, and commercial conditions, that the serious unrest and discontent will speedily be dissipated. In the meanwhile I think I can assure the Senate, and, I believe, the American people can feel assured, that any direct incitation to force or violence against individuals or against the Government can without difficulty be taken care of by efficient departments of justice, both State and Federal, under the powerful criminal statutes which have been part of our State and Federal laws for many years.

Mr. President, when we enacted the amendment to the espionage law, in my humble judgment we violated the fundamental principles of our Constitution, and we went directly against the wise counsel of the men who founded, upon the principles of everlasting justice, this great Republic.

We may, sirs, enact this bill into law; we may seek to remove this discontent by repression instead of removing it by the correction of its causes; we may wander farther away from the great principles enunciated by our fathers upon which our Government rests; but as the great Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said in his magnificent speech upon the league of nations, we will come back, we will come back, come back at last, even though it be in sackcloth and ashes, to the faith of our fathers, to a reacceptance and a reaffirmation of those great principles of liberty upon which this Republic is founded, and which, so long as they be not disregarded by members of legislative bodies and by the courts, will be a guaranty that our institutions will live on, increasing in strength and in their beneficent usefulness, not only to the people of our own land but to the peoples of every clime and nation.

Mr. President, I am convinced that the members of the Judiciary Committee never called into their councils such men as those who have written the letters and resolutions which I have read. I do not believe that that committee or the subcommittee ever gave careful consideration to such resolutions as those written by the United Mine Workers of America and the United Shoe Workers of America and other men of like sound judgment. I do not believe that the Judiciary Committee ever called those men into council. I do not believe that they have ever seriously read and considered the petitions which must have come before them, and, if that be so, sirs, if those resolutions and petitions came before that committee and were not fairly considered, I deem it to be the duty of the chairman of that committee or the Senator in charge of the bill to withdraw the bill until the committee has had an opportunity to acquaint itself with the opinion of the masses of America upon the justice or injustice of the legislation which is being proposed.

Mr. President, in these remarks and in my words of yesterday, I have attempted to register my protest against this un-American and destructive legislation. Probably the bill will pass without even a roll call, and probably there will be no record vote. I therefore desire to announce that for myself I wish the RECORD to show, even if there be not a roll call, that I have registered my judgment against this vicious legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Harrison	New	Smoot
Brandegee	Henderson	Newberry	Spencer
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Sterling
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sutherland
Dillingham	Kellogg	Overman	Thomas
Elkins	Kendrick	Page	Trammell
France	Kenyon	Phipps	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	King	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	Kirby	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Gronna	McCumber	Simmons	Williams
Hale	Moses	Smith, Md.
Harris	Nelson	Smith, S. C.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on account of illness.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. EDGE] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll of absentees.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. KEYES and Mr. UNDERWOOD answered to their names when called.

Mr. CURTIS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and Mr. PITTMAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] on account of illness, the absence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] on account of illness in his family, of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] on account of the death of his wife, and of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on official business.

Mr. POMERENE, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. BALL, and Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. GERRY. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The pending question is the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, after the words "United States," insert:

Or the free performance by any of its officers, agents, or employees of his or their public duty or to attempt by force or violence to overthrow the Government of the United States or all government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, at the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who is not now present, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, after the words "United States," insert "or of any State or Territory of the United States."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I question the advisability of inserting such an amendment as that in the bill. I entertain very grave doubt as to whether the Government of the United States has the constitutional power to prevent the advocacy of the overthrow of a State government in this way.

It is true that the United States guarantees to every State a republican form of government, but a State government might be overthrown and another republican form of government instituted in its stead. I suppose, probably, that a soviet government would be a republican form of government. We can not pass upon the particular kind of republican government which would be justifiable under the Constitution. If it is republican in form, the guaranty of the Constitution is met. I do not believe that there is any occasion for the introduction of an amendment of this character. The inhibited effort must be to overthrow the Government of the United States, not the government of the State of New York or of the State of Montana. I do not believe that there has been any occasion that calls for an amendment of this character, and I feel that it will be, in a measure, perilous to the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment may again be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will again be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, after the words "United States," on page 2 line 9, after the words "United States," and on page 2, line 17, after the words "United States" it is proposed to insert the words "or of any State or Territory of the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I merely wish to emphasize the comments of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] in so far as they are applicable to the word "State." I presume the inclusion of the Territorial governments would be a matter within the power of congressional legislation. So it seems to me there should be a separation of the two. I do not think we have any power to legislate with regard to the overthrow of the State governments. The governments of States, it is true, are governments within the territory of the United States, but they are independent and are supposedly capable of taking care of themselves. I presume that a bill for the purpose of preventing treason against the State governments would very readily be rejected as beyond our power, and this is something in the nature of such legislation. I therefore suggest the excision of the words "State or" and the inclusion of the word "Territory" in the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I regret that I have not fully heard what has been said by the Senator from Colorado against the proposed amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will allow me, the objection made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] was that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio transcended our powers of legislation, in that it provided penalties for attempts to overthrow or for advocating the overthrow of State governments. My comment was in harmony with the suggestion of the Senator from Montana in so far as it applied to State governments. I thought Territories, however, should be included.

Mr. POMERENE. I very much regret that I am unable to agree with either of the learned Senators, so far as the constitutionality of the proposed amendment is concerned. It must be borne in mind that under the Federal Constitution we guarantee to the States a republican form of government. We are interested in keeping that pledge good.

Mr. THOMAS. Suppose that an attempt were made to overthrow the republican government that to-day prevails in the State of Colorado by the substitution of another sort of a republican form of government for it; so long as a republican form of government is there, there is no necessity for exercising the constitutional guaranty.

Mr. POMERENE. The amendment does not affect the change of government by orderly processes.

Mr. THOMAS. That is another proposition.

Mr. POMERENE. We realize that there is a plenary method both in the State constitutions and in the Federal Constitution for the amendment of those instruments; but if it is of sufficient importance to make it a penal offense to attempt to overthrow the Federal Government it seems to me that the same reasons will support the proposition that we ought to defend the State governments and prevent their overthrow as a part of our governmental fabric.

I am not very particular about it; but it does seem to me a little strange that we should say, in the first place, that we are going to penalize any effort by force to overthrow the Federal Government; that we are going to penalize the attempt to overthrow all government; but we lose sight of the State governments. I think we are just as much interested in the protection of the State governments as we are in the protection of the Federal Government, and I say that particularly in view of the fact that it is a duty incumbent upon the Federal Government to guarantee to the States a republican form of government. I do not think it is a matter of a great deal of importance, but I think it is simply completing what was in the minds of the framers of this bill. For that reason I submit the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Just a word. The term "all government," which appears more than once in the bill, is sufficiently broad in itself to include State governments. I do not think the reference to "all government" should be here. I question whether we should legislate for all the world upon a subject which may be of universal concern but which seems to me to be unnecessary for the protection of our own Government.

There is no question that disturbance of or interference by violence with State governments are matters of direct concern to the Government of the United States. So is treason; so is the attempt to overthrow the government of great cities like New York or Chicago; but until the State in which the city is located is impotent to enforce its own laws and to maintain its own sovereignty the guaranty of the Government of the United States should not be invoked. I concede that it may be a matter of comparative unimportance, but I do not think that we should legislate upon a subject which might, by making the legislation too inclusive, result in its overthrow at the hands of the courts.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I merely wish to ask the Senator a question in that connection. I do not understand that the words "or of all government" mean all governments. A man may go out on the street or may publish a seditious article without mentioning the United States or the Constitution of the United States and advocate the overthrow of all government.

Mr. THOMAS. I am glad the Senator has mentioned that, because I intended to have stated that the only basis upon which we can legislate regarding "all government" is that it will include our own.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, of course I sympathize with the idea which is sought to be incorporated in the bill—that is, the suppression of attempts to overthrow by force the Government of the United States. I assume that means the Government as it exists, and I assume that the words "or of all government" mean any kind of a government that the United States may have, and do not refer to the various forms of State, municipal, or Territorial government which may exist under the jurisdiction of this country.

If I thought that we had the constitutional authority to adopt the amendment, I should be very glad to vote for it. The question arises suddenly, and I have had no time to give it consideration, but, as it strikes me offhand, I do not think the Government has the constitutional authority to take jurisdiction of the case of an attempt to overthrow a State government by substituting one form of republican government for another. It does not seem to me that we would have authority to make an attempt to overthrow a city government or a town government or a village government a Federal crime. In the interest of law and order I should like to guarantee the maintenance of such orderly government as now exists by law or as may come into existence by the orderly processes provided for by our Constitution; but it seems to me that the burden of proof at least of showing that this proposed amendment comes within the constitutional authority of Congress is upon the proponents of the amendment. I do not think that the mere citation of the provision of the Constitution of the United States that the Federal Government guarantees to each State a republican form of government is sufficient to cover the instances raised by the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Colorado. It seems to me to be a very doubtful, dubious attempt to obtrude the criminal jurisdiction of the United States upon the various States and municipalities of the country.

While I am as much of a federalist and as much of a nationalist, I think, as there may be in the country, I am also a very strong adherent of the theory that we should preserve the rights that the States have reserved to themselves. The State authorities and their militia ordinarily are able to protect themselves in all sorts of local disturbances, riots, and insurrections. They may, through their general assemblies or their executive officials, call upon the Government of the United States for aid if they at any time find themselves unable to protect themselves; but, as I have said, this makes the inhibited act a crime against the United States, which assumes that the United States has jurisdiction of this question. I should like a little more light upon our authority to take that step before voting for the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I came to the conclusion several days ago, after reading the bill, that I would offer this amendment, because I felt that it was necessary in order to perfect the bill. Now, I want to submit this question—a purely hypothetical question—to the Senator for his consideration.

Let us assume, for the sake of the argument, that we had every reason to believe that there was a conspiracy afoot in one of the sovereign States to overthrow that State government, and the matter is up for consideration before the Congress. The Constitution very clearly provides, under Article IV, section 4:

> The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government.

If it is to be overthrown, the government destroyed, and it may be an attempt made to set up a monarchial form of government or a purely soviet form of government or something of that sort, does not the Senator think that under this obligation to guarantee a republican form of government to the State it would be incumbent upon the Congress to adopt means to prevent its overthrow? That might be in the form of furnishing an army or other forces, or it might be in the enactment of legislation which would attempt to penalize acts of this kind, just as the Senate is now attempting to penalize acts which are directed toward the Federal Government itself.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, there can be no question whatever as to the constitutionality of the measure so far as it penalizes an attempt to overthrow the Government of the United States by force. The question the Senator has asked me, if I may say so without giving offense, begs the question. He simply asks me again if I do not think the Congress has authority to do the very thing about which I am expressing a doubt, and does not give me the information for which I have asked—that is, to point where the Congress has the jurisdiction to adopt the amendment he proposes—beyond merely saying that the National Government guarantees to each State a Republican form of government. But, if I may proceed with his idea, if I grasp it, it is that whenever a disturbance occurs within the boundaries of a particular State, you can prosecute those who participate in it under this Federal penal statute for the crime of attempting to overthrow the Government. Now, the Constitution, when it guarantees a Republican form of government, does not guarantee the State against all attempts to overthrow its government except when the governor of the State or the legislature appeals to the United States for aid; and then it is military aid that is required, and not legislative aid.

I still am exceedingly doubtful as to whether we have any jurisdiction over the matter. Would the Senator claim that we had any jurisdiction—I assume not—over the case of an attempt to overthrow a city government?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I will be very frank with the Senator. I have not gone into that question. I recognize that it is a part of the State government; it is an agency created by the State; but I do not intend to go that far by the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know the Senator did not, and he bases his justification of the attempt, so far as he has gone with it, upon the clause of the Constitution that guarantees to the State a republican form of government; but put yourself in the position of the Government district attorney who is trying a man who has been indicted for an attempt to overthrow by force a State government. In order to show, when the constitutionality of the act is questioned in the pleadings in court, that the United States had authority to pass this statute, they have got to prove that the insurrection contemplated depriving the State of a republican form of government. Now, until it is known what government is to be set up if they overthrow the existing one, how is the Department of Justice in any position to prove that the object sought in the disturbance was to deprive the State of a republican form of government? And unless they can prove that, of course the court has no jurisdiction.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut further yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. We, of course, agree—there is not any room for doubt about the fact—that it is the duty of the United States to guarantee this form of government. Now, may I ask the Senator, in what form shall this guaranty be exercised? What methods shall be employed? Of course, we can furnish our Army, but do we not have the same authority to furnish legislative guaranties as well as to furnish military guaranties in order to protect the form of government which we provide for in the Constitution?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why, I will answer the Senator that we certainly have, in my opinion. If the Senator's amendment were to punish any person who shall try by force to overthrow a republican form of government in any State, I would cheerfully vote for his amendment, and the constitutional provision which he cites would be my authority in maintaining its constitutionality; but the Senator must see that the question is, Have we jurisdiction under that constitutional guaranty to adopt this amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The guaranty to which the Senator from Ohio refers goes further than the guaranty of a republican form of government, because the Government of the United States also undertakes to protect the several States against invasion, and, upon the demand of the executive thereof, even against domestic violence; so it may be possible that we are under a kind of remote obligation to take care of State governments against a revolution undertaking to overthrow the State government by force or violence; but it is a very doubtful matter, and the propaganda against which this legislation is aimed is not a propaganda to overthrow the Government of some particular State or of all the States. It is to overthrow the Government of the United States, and until the evil is before us in some form or other why should we imperil this legislation by including a proposition that is, to say the least, doubtful?

Mr. President, the efforts that are being made would be futile if only the overthrow of the government of the State of Maine, for instance, were accomplished. It is not intended to take the States severally and overthrow the governments of the States one by one. The evil that confronts us is the threatened attempt to overthrow the Government of the entire United States. The States are all able themselves, by their own legislation, easily enough to take care of the circulation of such literature intended to overthrow the government of a particular State, and it seems to me we are going outside of the scope of this legislation to introduce an amendment of this character.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I entirely agree with what the Senator has said, and I can not amplify it. It is right to the point. The testimony before the Judiciary Committee and the arguments there were against the using principally of the facilities furnished by the United States Government for the transmission of intelligence by these anarchists and people who were conducting a propaganda to overthrow the Government of the United States. It was to fix it so that they could not prostitute to the cause of a criminal conspiracy the avenues for which we tax the people, for their convenience, to transmit legitimate intelligence and information. It was the utilization of the avenues of interstate commerce by these "reds" and anarchists which we desired to prevent.

There is no doubt that each State can pass laws against attempts to overthrow it, and certainly can pass laws against the transmission of intelligence over such avenues as that State furnishes—its own interstate trolley lines and other means of communication. It was the helplessness of these local authorities to command the great facilities furnished by the United States as an interstate-commerce question, and their lack of ability to prevent them from being taken advantage of by these disseminators of inflammatory literature, that caused the demand for the framing and passage of this legislation.

As I said before, unless further and better advised than I feel at present, I would not vote for this amendment, although, of course, I realize that I would not want my vote to be misconstrued as being in favor of overthrowing State governments or municipal governments simply because I feel that it is doubtful whether we have jurisdiction to adopt this particular amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment:

SEC. —. That every citizen of the United States who directly or indirectly commences or carries on any verbal, written, or printed intercourse or correspondence with any other person or persons, whether citizens or aliens, with the intent, either peaceably or by violence, to overthrow the Government of the United States, or to disintegrate or in any other manner set aside or do away with the Government of the United States, or to do away with all government; or who becomes a member of any organization, association, or society, foreign or domestic, having any such purpose; or who directly or indirectly, publicly or privately, associates himself or herself with any other person or persons having any such purpose; or who, having such intent or purpose, congregates, or who has or permits to be congregated, for him or her, any meeting of other persons the purpose of which is to secure the cooperation of such persons in an attempt, either peaceably or by violence, to overthrow, disintegrate, or in any manner do away with or set aside the Government of the United States, or all government generally, including that of the United States, shall be deemed and held as adhering to the enemies of the United States, giving them aid and comfort; and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than $5,000 for each offense and imprisonment not less than 1 nor more than 10 years, or may, in lieu of such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the judge, be deported permanently to the Island of Guam or to any island in the Philippine Archipelago belonging to the United States which may be set aside by the Government of the United States for the purpose of confining those who are convicted under the alternative punishment provisions of this act.

Mr. President, I indorse very heartily the bill which has been presented here by the committee and which is before the Senate. I introduced a similar bill some time before this one was introduced, having the same purpose, the principal difference being the use of the word "peaceably" in the bill.

We will not get very far, Mr. President, toward punishing anarchistic criminals in this country by using the word "forcibly" only in the bill and leaving out the word "peaceably." I do not know that I could make it plainer than by reading a few short excerpts from the testimony given before the Committee on Education and Labor some time ago, when the steel strike was on, by a personally very attractive young man by the name of Jacob Margolis. He is not a foreigner; he is an American citizen, born in Pittsburgh, as I recall. He takes the greatest pride in the fact that he does not believe in violence or force at all. This bill, if passed, would not reach a man like Margolis. It would not reach any sensible anarchist who is dangerous to this Republic. It will have no bearing on such a case as that. Men who believe in anarchy, men who congregate citizens of this country to talk anarchy to them, will not be affected by this bill as it is, because the bill limits its provisions to forcible overturning of the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator take the position that you can make it a crime for the anarchistic advocates of this country to say to their followers and their friends, "Now, we believe in these doctrines, but there is only one way that you can effectuate them, and that is by going to the polls and electing your people to the legislature or to the Congress"?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that is not the question here. They do not teach any such doctrines as the Senator from Idaho submits in his question. So that the Senator from Idaho may be made familiar with what they do teach, I am going to ask the Senator and other Senators to listen just a moment to the testimony of this man Margolis, who is one of the anarchists in chief in this country. He was being interrogated by one of the members of the committee, and the following occurred:

Senator McKELLAR. Don't you think that this is the best Government in the world for a man to be allowed to live under, for anybody to be allowed to live, where he or she to be——

Mr. MARGOLIS (interrupting). No, sir; I can not think that at all, Senator.

Senator McKELLAR. Don't you think that a man of your most considerable intelligence, do you think that you should be permitted to live under a Government that you despise in your heart?

Mr. MARGOLIS. I think that that is an unfair question, Senator, because it does not state the facts.

Senator McKELLAR. You have said——

Mr. MARGOLIS. I have said that I do not think there is any necessity for government when certain conditions prevailed.

Senator McKELLAR. And those conditions do not prevail in this country?

Mr. MARGOLIS. They do not prevail in this or any other country.

Senator McKELLAR. And, of course, if those conditions do not prevail, then you do not believe in this Government. You said that you only believed in a government when certain conditions prevailed, and they do not prevail in this Government?

Mr. MARGOLIS. I say this: That when certain conditions prevail there will be no necessity for government. However, with those conditions not prevailing, I say we must set about to remedy those conditions; and those conditions are based entirely upon industrial relations, and we must remedy those industrial relations, and when we have remedied those industrial relations we will not have any need for government.

* * * * * * *

Senator McKELLAR. I think that you testified before I came in that you were a lawyer?

Mr. MARGOLIS. Yes, sir.

Senator McKELLAR. And that you have been admitted to practice in the courts of Pennsylvania?

Mr. MARGOLIS. I am admitted to practice in the courts of Pennsylvania.

Senator McKELLAR. Did you take an oath?

Mr. MARGOLIS. I did.

Senator McKELLAR. To support and defend the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. MARGOLIS. I did.

Senator McKELLAR. And do you think that you are supporting and defending the Constitution of the United States when you advocate principles against this Government and all other government?

Mr. MARGOLIS. Senator, I have lived up to my oath to support and maintain the Constitution of the United States, I feel, as honestly and as consistently as any lawyer in Allegheny County whoever took the oath.

Senator McKELLAR. But that does not answer the question.

Mr. MARGOLIS. And, furthermore, I try to make myself clear—apparently I have not—that I do not advocate the overthrow of government. I do not advocate that, I say, but I do say that when certain conditions, based upon our industrial life, are modified, as a consequence of that modification and social arrangement will arise a condition which will obviate the necessity of government.

The CHAIRMAN. And that means a peaceful overthrow?

Here is the point to which I want to call special attention:

Mr. MARGOLIS. I do not advocate violence. I do not believe in violence under any circumstances.

Senator McKELLAR. And the basis of your principle is a peaceful overthrow?

Mr. MARGOLIS. A disappearance of the Government.

Senator McKELLAR. A disappearance of the Government. And if the result of your teachings and your preachings is a disappearance of the United States Government, how do you make that coincide with your oath as an attorney to defend the Constitution of the United States and the Government of the United States?

Mr. MARGOLIS. It is a very simple matter——

Senator MCKELLAR. It is not a simple matter to me. I would like to have you explain it.

Mr. MARGOLIS. I am working along a line to bring about a new industrial arrangement. With a new industrial arrangement a new structure is created, and with the new structure created certain consequences flow from that change. The first one of those consequences is that the Government disappears. While the Government is in existence, while the Constitution is in effect, I will do nothing against that Constitution; I maintain and uphold it; but when the new social arrangements come into being, which makes a government obsolete, I leave it, so to speak, and it is not an attack upon the Government. It is a mere advocacy of a new structure which makes government unnecessary.

Senator MCKELLAR. Is not that arguing around a circle, because what you did—you mean to get rid of this Government by peaceful means, to get rid of the very Government that you have sworn before God and man to uphold and to forever defend?

Mr. MARGOLIS. I can not see that there is any inconsistency in it.

The CHAIRMAN. And you have not sworn before God, have you?

Mr. MARGOLIS. No; I do not believe in God.

The CHAIRMAN. You are an atheist?

Mr. MARGOLIS. I am.

By the way, I will stop there long enough to show how insidious and how harmful this doctrine is. This man is a public lecturer, who goes around throughout the country stirring up by his seditious utterances interest and work against the Government of the United States, and he excuses himself under our constitutional provisions and under our laws by saying that he is not in favor of violence. He was asked by one of the Senators how he happened to have such a belief. He had said that he did not believe in honesty, that he did not believe in truth, that he did not believe in virtue, that he did not believe in government, that he did not believe in God, that he did not believe in the church, that he did not believe in anything that honest and patriotic men believe in in this country, and when he had finished the category—and here is the evidence before you if you will look at it—after he had finished summing up he said, "But I do not believe in violence." Why does not Mr. Margolis believe in violence? It is because the laws on our statute books are so arranged that by saying that he does not believe in violence he can escape the penalty of the law.

I examined him in part myself. I said, "This is very interesting, Mr. Margolis. You do not believe in violence. When you say you do not believe in truth, or virtue, or honesty, or government, or religion, or church, or God, how can it possibly be that you do not believe in violence?"

He said, "I just do not believe in it."

I said, "Suppose a man came into your house and assaulted you in the nighttime. Would you not defend yourself?"

He said, "No, sir."

I said, "Suppose he assaulted your wife in your presence?"

He said, "I would ask him to desist, but I would not use violence against him."

That is the kind of men we are going to let roam free over this country, under the terms of this bill. That is not the purpose of this bill. The purpose of this bill has been heralded over the country as a bill to control the "reds" and to fix their punishment. Let us control them. Let us fix their punishment. We have a legal right to do it. We ought to do it. We ought not to have any makeshift provision like this, and under my amendment it will be done effectually. The truth of the business is that after this bill unamended is passed, Mr. Margolis can go over this country making his speeches just as before. He does not have to change his convictions in the slightest. I have no doubt that he is falsifying about his conviction on violence. But he is making it accord with the laws of the United States, and we apparently are willing to let him do it. That may be so, but I want to vote, and I want to put myself on record as voting, to deal with this kind of man, and not permit him to go around over the country preaching the harmful doctrines that he is preaching. He has a most engaging personality, is splendidly educated, an American citizen, one of the most harmful American citizens, in my humble judgment, in the confines of our country. We are legislating for that kind of people, and the legislation, if in the terms of this bill, would be absolutely harmless.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Tennessee, if Mr. Margolis does not believe in violence at all, did he indicate by what process he was going to accomplish the changes in government which he favors?

Mr. MCKELLAR. He said he was for any kind of unrest; that things like strikes, like labor troubles, all stirred up the country and had a beneficial effect on his ultimate purposes. That was the substance of it. I am not giving his exact words.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But no violence?

Mr. MCKELLAR. No violence. But the effect of it was to lead to the inevitable conclusion that he advocated, to wit, that the time had come when we could set aside all government and substitute anarchy in its place.

I want to read you just a little further from the testimony of this very interesting witness, and I want to say that he is a very intelligent man with a very pleasant personality, one of the most harmful men that we could possibly have in our country.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. Am I right in understanding the Senator's amendment as providing that if a man peaceably seeks to overthrow this Government he comes under the condemnation of the terms of the amendment?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Under the terms of my amendment. I say that it is just as much of a crime against this Government to preach these doctrines of anarchy and sovietism and I. W. W.ism, the overturning or destruction of the Government, as for him to take a gun and undertake by force, or what we call force, to overturn it.

It is more harmful, because it is more insidious; and what we should do at this time, when the whole country is stirred up about it, is to take vigorous action, and we should transport these men to a country where they can practice their own views in their own way; and a subsequent provision of the amendment which I have offered, and another one drawn by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], which I am going to offer in a few moments in his absence, he being ill, provides that men like Margolis can be sent to Guam, or to some island of the Philippines that we may purchase and set aside for that purpose, and let them practice there, with their fellow anarchists, the peculiar views that appeal to them most. We do not want that kind of men in this country, and I for one will never vote to allow them to stay here.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SPENCER. I quite understand the Senator's illustration. Hard cases make bad laws. Would it not be true if the Senator's amendment was adopted that whereas now our form of government, divided into its legislative, executive, and judicial functions, is well established, suppose men made up their minds that the form of government was a failure, and that the legislative branch of it ought to be eliminated, and a commission form of government ought to take its place, and they advocated it as strenuously as you like, would not that be the advocacy of an attempt to overthrow our Government?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Quite the contrary. This is aimed at an attempt peaceably to overthrow all government, and especially the Government of the United States. The illustration of the Senator is not in accordance with the provisions of the amendment.

Mr. SPENCER. Did I not understand the Senator to say that the provisions of his amendment were directed against those who peaceably sought to overthrow this Government?

Mr. MCKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. SPENCER. The very minute you attempt to radically change the form of government as we now have it, and do it by peaceable means, you are attempting to overthrow this Government; and is not that within the province of citizens at any time?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Absolutely; and it will not be hurt in the least by the enactment into law of the amendment that I have suggested. The amendment that I have suggested is aimed at and will include only those men who have it in their hearts to be opposed to all government and to the Government of the United States. It does not apply at all to those who would change our form of government. The wording can not apply to them, but to the men who do not believe in government and who want to disintegrate and to do away with all government. The words are almost precisely the same as they are in the original bill, with the exception that the word "peaceably" is put in there, and that is the only way you are going to get the anarchists of this country. You can not get them when they are declaring in every breath that they are opposed to violence; that they want peaceably to set aside this Government. I say that in a sense is violence.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. MCKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I notice that the Senator provides for deportation to the island of Guam. I should like to inquire of the Senator about what is the population of Guam?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I do not know, but I have put the amendment in the alternative. I was led to suggest the amendment by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who had made some investigation, and who is not here now. I put it in the alternative, "or to some island purchased by the United States," for this particular purpose.

Mr. KENYON. I was wondering what the Senator had against the people of Guam.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have nothing against the people of Guam, but I have more interest in the people of the United States than I have in the people of Guam. If we move the people of Guam out, we will give them a better home somewhere else.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator think he would need a continent instead of an island before he went very far?

Mr. McKELLAR. No, sir; quite the contrary. If I had so little belief in the patriotism of America as to think we needed a continent to send the anarchists of this country to, I would not be much of an American citizen. I deny that we have any such condition in the country. We have a few red-handed anarchists in this country who under our laws are allowed to go as they will, scot free, preaching their infamous doctrines, and they imagine that they amount to a great many; but whenever we pass a law that will effectively deal with the few loud-mouthed, flannel-mouthed anarchists that we have we will have none at all, and no continent will be filled with them, and even a small island like the island of Guam will be sparsely settled with them, because they will come to be very good American citizens as soon as they find that they are going to jail or to Guam if Congress does the right thing. Looking a jail or deportation in the face will cause them to modify or change their foolish views wonderfully.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I understand we are to have the island of Yap under the German treaty. Why not send them there?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will accept that as an amendment if it is put in the alternative.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator another question. I am not a convert to his proposition as yet. How can we deport a man who is a natural-born citizen of the United States?

Mr. McKELLAR. If we can take a citizen of the United States and put him in jail here, we can put him in jail anywhere in the territory of the United States. I think, unquestionably, the Senator would agree to that legal proposition. In other words, if we have the right to confine a man who violates the Federal law in the State of Georgia or in the State of Iowa or in the Hawaiian Islands, as we are doing every day, we have the right to send those men who violate the law to any part of our territory. The Philippine Islands are a part of American territory, and those men can be confined there as well as anywhere else.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator's theory is that we are to send them to another part of our territory?

Mr. McKELLAR. My theory is that we have a right to imprison violators of the law anywhere we please on American territory, whether they are citizens or not.

Mr. KENYON. I am inclined to agree with the Senator on that.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. NUGENT. Do I understand the Senator to contend that the people of this country, by peaceable means, can not endeavor to bring about or bring about as a matter of fact the establishment of a different form of government?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. The Senator certainly did not hear my amendment read or has not heard my argument or he would not ask that question. There is not a thing in the world in that suggestion. It is their belief in no government, it is their determination to bring about the disintegration or the abolition of all government, and especially the Government of the United States.

I want to read this very remarkable anarchist's testimony a little further. At the expense of repeating just a trifle, I read again:

Senator McKELLAR. As I understand you, you do not believe in God?
Mr. MARGOLIS. I do not.
Senator McKELLAR. You do not believe in any churches?
Mr. MARGOLIS. I do not.
Senator McKELLAR. You do not believe in any government?
Mr. MARGOLIS. I do not.
Senator McKELLAR. And you do not believe in anything?
Mr. MARGOLIS. I believe in man.
Senator McKELLAR. You believe in man?
Mr. MARGOLIS. I believe in man.
Senator McKELLAR. And that man is yourself?
Mr. MARGOLIS. Oh, no; in all people.
Senator McKELLAR. You know that the great majority of men do not believe as you do?
Mr. MARGOLIS. That may be all very true.
Senator McKELLAR. Why do you regard it that you are the only one that is correct?
Mr. MARGOLIS. I did not say that.
Senator McKELLAR. There are a few others that believe like you?
Mr. MARGOLIS. Oh, no; I do not mean that at all. I do not take an arrogant position and say that I know it all.
Senator McKELLAR. But you say that you do not believe in God; that you do not believe in religion; that you do not believe in churches; you do not believe in society——
Mr. MARGOLIS (interposing). I do believe in society.
Senator McKELLAR. You do not believe in government?
Mr. MARGOLIS. That is wrong. I do believe in society.
Senator McKELLAR. You do not believe in government?
Mr. MARGOLIS. I do not believe in the necessity of government.
Senator McKELLAR. You do not believe very much for the people to believe in.
Mr. MARGOLIS. I believe in humanity as something which can do a whole lot of things without any interference or supervision, if let alone.
Senator McKELLAR. I do not like to ask a personal question, but have you accumulated any property?
Mr. MARGOLIS. I have not.
Senator McKELLAR. None at all?
Mr. MARGOLIS. No property. I have saved a little money, because I live quite abstemiously and have saved a little money.
Senator McKELLAR. Would you mind saying to what extent?
Mr. MARGOLIS. A few thousand dollars.
Senator PHIPPS. I think it would be rather more enlightening for the committee to know in what form you have saved that money. Did you put it in stock or did you buy Government securities?
Mr. MARGOLIS. I have bought a few shares of bank stock, if the committee wants to know; I really think that is rather privileged.
Senator McKELLAR. It is only in connection with your views.
Mr. MARGOLIS. I think I made a general statement here that I have made a compromise with every human being who realizes that we are dealing with realities; that I have made a compromise, and I take things as they are, and do not take any bitter attitude of things and do not become sour on anything, and as a consequence I take things as they are and am hopeful that we will bring about better conditions in the future. My earnings have been largely put in life insurance, because I have a wife and two children.

That is the wife he declined to defend and said he would not defend if she were attacked.

Senator PHIPPS. That is property.
Mr. MARGOLIS. I call that the saving of money.
Senator McKELLAR. If you do not believe in property, and if you do not believe in properties, anything, why is it that you are willing to buy insurance to lay up property for your wife and children?
Mr. MARGOLIS. Because my wife and children, under this system, if anything should happen, would have something to live on.
Senator McKELLAR. Is not that so with every man and every man's wife and children, and is not that his first duty—to acquire something for the helpless wife and children in untoward years?
Mr. MARGOLIS. I carry out that first duty very scrupulously, but I believe that we can develop a system or system of society where it will not be necessary to do that, but while we have our present society I am going to do everything I can in order to protect my children and my wife if anything should happen to me.

And so on. I read further:

Senator McKELLAR. The other day, in examining Mr. Foster on his little red book, which you probably have seen, on "Syndicalism," the question of whether he believed in truth arose. Do you believe in truth?
Mr. MARGOLIS. If you mean by truth as Spencer defines it, I would say "yes."
Senator McKELLAR. Take "truth" as Webster defines it. Do you believe in that kind of truth?
Mr. MARGOLIS. If you will permit me, Senator, I would like to explain.
Senator McKELLAR. Surely.
Mr. MARGOLIS. Truth is an abstract word. It is an abstraction. If you mean absolute truth, we know nothing about it. We talk about relative truth. Spencer, for instance, defines truth to be the inability to conceive of the negative of a proposition. Whenever I can not conceive of the negative of a proposition, then I call it "truth," but whenever you say to me, "Do I believe in truth?" I can not say "yes," because I do not know what truth you are referring to.
Senator McKELLAR. Do you believe in truth as described in common parlance or in the dictionary by Webster?
Mr. MARGOLIS. I believe in being truthful.
Senator McKELLAR. But you do not believe in truth?
Mr. MARGOLIS. Not as an abstract thing.
Senator McKELLAR. Do you believe in honor?
Mr. MARGOLIS. There is another abstraction.

And so it is all along. He says that he does not believe in any of these things like government, law, religion, honor, virtue, everything that the human heart holds dear in a free country. This man is roaming over our country perhaps at this very hour preaching these insidious doctrines to the ignorant and the guileless people of the country, inoculating them with these anarchistic views. I say we ought to put a stop to it. The only way we can do it is to strike out the words "forcibly or by violence" or agree to my amendment, which, in my judgment, will have the same effect.

I ask for a vote on my amendment, and I should like to have the yeas and nays.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, of course, having urged again and again that the special merit of the pending bill is that it seeks to prevent the overthrow of all government by force or violence, I could not consent to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. It would be strange if we should add it as a distinct and separate section of the bill. The amendment with the inclusion of the word "peaceable" covers the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not, because I do not think the bill covers membership in an anarchistic society.

Mr. STERLING. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. My own view is if a man or woman belongs to a society of anarchists in this country, preaching the doctrine of the abolition of all government, the very fact of membership in that sort of a society ought to be such a crime as to lead the real Americans of the country to put him on an island where he would not do any harm.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Tennessee is in advance of his day. No doubt at the rate we are traveling we will arrive in a short time at the point to which he refers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Dakota will permit me, in answer to that I want to say that I have admired for a long time the doctrine of Americanism as preached by the Senator from Idaho. We talk very much about Americanism in this age. The best act of Americanism that I know anything about is the deportation of the few in our own country who despise the American Government and are constantly preaching against it. I hope the Senator from Idaho will change his mind and join with me in attempting to obtain in this country a pure Americanism, undefiled by the vicious monsters who are going around, peaceably as they say, trying to uproot the Government of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. From my viewpoint I could deport every unconditional ratifier of the treaty under the amendment which the Senator is offering, for I hold such proceedings would finally change and probably destroy our present form of government.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator would not have majority enough for that. I think there are only 15 or 20 "bitter enders."

Mr. STERLING. To advise the peaceable overthrow of the Government of the United States is little more than to advise the overthrow or change in the form of government by means of the ballot; but, so far as that is concerned, we shall have to trust to the good sense and the patriotism of the American people.

As to the other provisions of the amendment of the Senator, in regard to organizations which may favor the overthrow of the Government by force or violence, that question has not escaped the consideration of the Judiciary Committee; and there is now pending before that committee a bill—a very well considered bill, too—aimed at such associations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If there is a bill now before the Senate, and it has been well considered, and, as the Senator has pointed out, it has been well considered by the committee, I do not see any reason why we should take two bites at the cherry. I think the passage of this bill in the form in which it now is will give great courage to the anarchist class.

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator from Tennessee misunderstood me. The bill to which I refer is before the Judiciary Committee and not before the Senate at this time. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota if he expects the bill to which he has referred to be reported out within any reasonable time?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I think the bill will be reported out before a great while.

Mr. President, while I am on the floor, and before the vote is taken on the bill, I wish to submit for the RECORD the following: First, an excerpt from the address of Thomas Erskine in the trial of Thomas Paine defining the meaning of a free press; second, the charge to the jury by Chief Justice Coleridge, then Justice Coleridge, in 1910, in the case of Rex against Aldred; and, third, the Canadian law relative to sedition, and the Canadian law to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of sending seditious matter through them.

In the absence of objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The proposition which I mean to maintain as the basis of the libery of the press, and without which it is an empty sound, is this: That every man, not intending to mislead, but seeking to enlighten others with what his own reason and conscience, however erroneously, have dictated to him as truth, may address himself to the universal reason of a whole nation, either upon the subject of governments in general or upon that of our own particular country; that he may analyze the principles of its constitution, point out its errors and defects, examine and publish its corruptions, warn his fellow citizens against their ruinous consequences, and exert his whole faculties in pointing out the most advantageous changes in establishments which he considers to be radically defective or sliding from their object by abuse. All this every subject of the country has a right to do, if he contemplates only what he thinks would be for its advantage, and but seeks to change the public mind by the convictions which flow from reasonings dictated by conscience.

If, indeed, he writes what he does not think—if, contemplating the misery of others, he wickedly condemns what his own understanding approves—or even admitting his real disgust against the Government or its corruptions, if he calumniates living magistrates, or holds out to individuals that they have a right to run before the public mind in their conduct—that they may oppose by contumacy or force what private reason only disapproves, that they may disobey the law because their judgment condemns it, or resist the public will, because they honestly wish to change it—he is then a criminal upon every principle of English justice, because such a person seeks to disunite individuals from their duty to the whole, and excites to overt acts of misconduct in a part of the community, instead of endeavoring to change, by the impulse of reason, that universal assent which, in this and every country, constitutes the law for all. (Howells State Trials, Vol. XXII, p. 414.)

[Extract from charge to jury by Justice Coleridge in the case of Rex v. Aldred.]

A man may lawfully express his opinion on any public matter, however distasteful, however repugnant to others, if, of course, he avoids defamatory matter, or if he avoids anything that can be characterized either as a blasphemous or as an obscene libel. Matters of state, matters of policy, matters even of morals—all these are open to him. He may state his opinion freely, he may buttress it by argument, he may try to persuade others to share his views. Courts and juries are not the judges in such matters. For instance, if he thinks that either a despotism, or an oligarchy, or a republic, or even no government at all is the best way of conducting human affairs, he is at perfect liberty to say so. He may assail politicians, he may attack governments, he may warn the executive of the day against taking a particular course, or he may remonstrate with the executive of the day for not taking a particular course; he may seek to show that rebellions, insurrections, outrages, assassinations, and such like, are the natural, the deplorable, the inevitable outcome of the policy which he is combating. All that is allowed, because all that is innocuous; but, on the other hand, if he makes use of language calculated to advocate or to incite others to public disorders, to wit, rebellions, insurrections, assassinations, outrages, or any physical force or violence of any kind, then, whatever his motives, whatever his intentions, there would be evidence on which a jury might, on which I should think a jury ought, and on which a jury would decide that he was guilty of a seditious publication.

(1) Any person who prints, publishes, edits, issues, circulates, sells, or offers for sale or distribution any book, newspaper, periodical, pamphlet, picture, paper, circular, card, letter, writing, print, publication, or document of any kind, in which is taught, advocated, advised, or defended, or who shall in any manner teach, advocate, or advise or defend the use, without authority of law, of force, violence, terrorism, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, as a means of accomplishing any governmental, industrial, or economic change, or otherwise, shall be guilty of an offense and liable to imprisonment for not more than 20 years.

(2) Any person who circulates or attempts to circulate or distribute any book, newspaper, periodical, pamphlet, picture, paper, circular, card, letter, writing, print, publication, or document of any kind, as described in this section by mailing the same or causing the same to be mailed or posted in any post office, letter box, or other mail receptacle in Canada, shall be guilty of an offense, and shall be liable to imprisonment for not more than 20 years.

(3) Any person who imports into Canada from any other country, or attempts to import by or through any means whatsoever, any book, newspaper, periodical, pamphlet, picture, paper, circular, card, letter, writing, print, publication, or document of any kind as described in this section, shall be guilty of an offense and shall be liable to imprisonment for not more than 20 years.

(4) It shall be the duty of every person in the employment of His Majesty in respect of His Government of Canada, either in the post office department or in any other department, to seize and take possession of any book, newspaper, periodical, pamphlet, picture, paper, circular, card, letter, writing, print, publication, or document, as mentioned in the last preceding section, upon discovery of the same in the post office mails of Canada or in or upon any station, wharf, yard, car, truck, motor, or other vehicle, steamboat, or other vessel upon which the same may be found and when so seized and taken, without delay to transmit the same, together with the envelopes, coverings, and wrappings attached thereto, to the chief commissioner of Dominion police, or to the commissioner of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am very sure that, however reprehensible may be the inculcation of the doctrine preached by Mr. Margolis, there is no power in the Congress of the United States to prevent either the utterance or the circulation of sentiments of that character. I think they serve well to define the limits of the liberty of speech and of the press. In my opinion the amendment tendered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is clearly in violation of the first amendment to the Constitution, not only in that respect but also in the respect that it interferes with the right of assemblage, also guaranteed by that constitutional amendment.

I do not share in the apprehensions of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that we are approaching or that we ever shall approach or arrive at the state of public mind when repressive legislation of that character shall be enacted; but if we ever do arrive at it the Supreme Court of the United States will very promptly, in my judgment, dispose of it. However, I take this occasion to say that I have not observed, either through the public press or through any expressions in the Halls of Congress or through any legislation that has been enacted by Congress or which has received its favorable consideration, any weakening of the attachment of the people of the United States to the right of free speech and of the freedom of the press. I have not discovered that there is any fear whatever of any real encroachment upon that fundamental right of our people nor any growth or tendency in that direction.

As to the effort to prohibit the change in our form of government or to overthrow our present form of government and substitute for it some other form of government by peaceful means—which, of course, means by lawful means—I am perfectly sure, upon reflection, the Senator from Tennessee will recognize it is not only impossible to prevent the inculcation of sentiments of that character, but that it would be unwise to attempt to do so in any way, for if there is anything that we prize among all the liberties that we enjoy it is the right to advocate and to urge the change in our form of government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In just a moment. Mr. President, the Declaration of Independence spoke of that as a fundamental right. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Montana, I think, misunderstands or misjudges the amendment which I have offered. The Senator says it would never do to put on our statute books a provision that we could not peaceably change our form of government. This amendment has nothing to do with that. The proposition in my amendment is that if a man peaceably or forcibly undertakes to overthrow the Government, the crime is the overthrow of the Government; and whether he does it peaceably or whether he does it by force is immaterial when he is engaged in the commission of a crime. For instance, it is analogous in a way, though not exactly, to the crime of murder. You can forcibly stick a knife into a man's body and kill him, or you can take a pistol or a gun and forcibly kill him with that; but you might also so arrange that he might kill himself by permitting him to pour poison into his own coffee and kill him, and that would be just as much a crime under our law. I desire to apply that same principle to treason and sedition in this country. I say it is just as much a crime to overthrow the Government peaceably as it is by force.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not misunderstand the Senator. I followed him very carefully; and I still have the same conclusion concerning the amendment which he has offered that I had before his explanation. I dare say that you might kill a man by telling the truth about him; you might tell such unpleasant things about him that he would go into a decline. We have heard of people who have died from joy and who have died from grief.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would the Senator say that if I left a poison on the Senator's table, leading him to believe that it was a medicine and would be helpful to him, and the Senator took it and died as the result, that that would be a forcible killing, or would that be a perfectly peaceable killing? Would it not be a crime just the same; and yet would there be the slightest force about it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Such a killing would be very properly described in an indictment as having been accomplished by force and arms.

Mr. McKELLAR. It might be; but it would be a misnomer and a misuse of terms.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have two other amendments I desire to offer, one on behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness. They are companion pieces to the amendment which has just been voted upon, and as it is apparent from the vote just taken that the Senate is opposed to the amendments, I shall not detain the Senate by discussing them; but I should like to offer them, so that the RECORD may be complete. First, on behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was to add, at the end of the bill, the following:

SEC. 6. That upon the decree of deportation being entered the person shall be delivered to the United States marshal, together with the transcript of judgment and decree to be furnished by the clerk of the court under seal of the court. The marshal shall then forthwith transport said convicted defendant or defendants to the island of Guam by the most direct and convenient route and deliver him or them to the official representing the United States on said island, and shall also deliver the certified copy of decree to such official in control of said island, who shall enter same upon his records, and said official shall then have jurisdiction of any future proceedings necessary in each case. And the said official shall, upon receiving any such person or persons, make a record of such transaction and shall proceed to such measures in the way of registration, thumb prints, Bertillon measurements, or such other means as he may deem necessary to permanently identify such person as a deported person. The said person or persons shall then be confined in such place or places as the official in charge of the island shall direct.

SEC. 7. That at any time after 30 days from said order of confinement any person so deported shall have the privilege of filing a petition addressed to the said authority in the island of Guam for permission to be allowed the liberty of the island, and said official shall, in his discretion, issue a parole to said petitioner allowing him the liberty of the island upon such terms and conditions as said official shall determine, but under no such case shall said petitioner be allowed to leave the island.

SEC. 8. That any person or persons who shall aid or assist any deported person or persons to leave said island, or any boat or vessel that shall take any such person as a passenger or otherwise, without the order of the authorities in control of the said island for the United States, shall be guilty of felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $5,000 or be imprisoned not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the said authorities.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now offer the other amendment referred to by me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was to add as a new section at the end of the bill the following:

That every person who disbelieves in or who is opposed to all organized government, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching such disbelief or opposition to all organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally of the Government of the United States, or any other organized government, because of his or their official character, shall be deemed guilty of a felony and shall be punished by a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment of not less than five years for each separate offense, or in lieu of such punishment may be, by order of the court, confined to the island of Guam as hereinafter provided.

That any person who unlawfully aids or assists in the commission of any such offense as hereinabove described, or connives or conspires with any person or persons to allow, procure, or permit the commission of any such offense shall, upon conviction, be guilty of a felony and shall be punished as hereinbefore prescribed for the principal offense.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not intend to call for a yea-and-nay vote on the bill, as there is not a quorum present, but I desire a viva voce vote upon it.

The question being put, the bill was passed.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the consideration of the unfinished business be resumed.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 12, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 10, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we bless Thee for the splendid opportunities afforded in life, for the development of all that is best in us, in the struggle for existence, the overcoming of evil, the unraveling of the mysteries which environ us; to think, to will, to do, achieve, and keep ourselves unspotted from the world; and thus develop to symmetrical proportions all the faculties of mind and soul, which Thou hast bestowed upon us, to perfection—the goal of life—until we all come unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ—the acme of manhood, the paragon of perfection; and all praise shall be Thine, our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and it is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Aswell	Fuller, Mass.	Kettner	Riddick

Esch	Kennedy, R. I.	Rhodes

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-seven Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

VICTOR L. BERGER.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Victor L. Berger, at the special session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, presented his credentials as a Representative-elect to said Congress from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin; and

Whereas on November 10, 1919, the House of Representatives, by a vote of 311 to 1 adopted a resolution declaring that "Victor L. Berger is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin or to hold a seat therein as such Representative," by reason of the fact that he had violated a law of the United States, and having previously taken an oath as a Member of Congress to support the Constitution of the United States, had given aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States and for other good and sufficient reasons; and

Whereas the said Victor L. Berger now presents his credentials to fill the vacancy caused by his own ineligibility; and

Whereas the same facts exist now which the House determined made the said Victor L. Berger ineligible to a seat in said House as a Representative from said district: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That by reason of the facts herein stated and by reason of the action of the House heretofore taken, the said Victor L. Berger is hereby declared not entitled to a seat in the Sixty-sixth Congress as a Representative from the said fifth district of the State of Wisconsin, and the House declines to permit him to take the oath and qualify as such Representative.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that this matter may be disposed of within the hour for which I have been recognized, and immediately before the expiration of the hour it is my purpose to move the previous question. I shall be glad to yield one-half of my time to any Member of the House who may be opposed to the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take up much of the time of the House. On the opening day of the special session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, in accordance with the precedents of the House, objection was made to the swearing in of Victor L. Berger, a Representative-elect from the fifth district of the State of Wisconsin, and again, in accordance with the precedents of the House, the matter was referred to a special committee to investigate his right to a seat. That committee conducted an exhaustive investigation and reported to the House that they had found as a matter of fact that the said Victor L. Berger had violated a law of the United States and also that, having previously taken an oath as a Member of Congress to support the Constitution of the United States, he had given aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States during the war, and therefore was ineligible under the provisions of section 3 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States to membership in this House. The House of Representatives, on November 10, 1919, upon the recommendation of the committee, passed a resolution, which is incorporated in the resolution which is now before the House, declaring that Victor L. Berger was not entitled to a seat in this House. Since the adoption of the resolution of exclusion by the House on November 10 nothing has changed, except that the same man has been voted for by the electors of the fifth district of the State of Wisconsin to fill the vacancy in the same Congress caused by his own ineligibility. He himself has publicly stated that he would again, under the same circumstances, do exactly what he did during the war, only that he would go further than he then went.

Mr. Speaker, in closing this opening statement I desire again to make perfectly clear to this House and to the people of the country that Victor L. Berger has not been excluded and it is not proposed to exclude him from this House because he is a member of the Socialist Party.

That fact is proven by the record of the House itself. This same Victor L. Berger was elected in 1910 as a Socialist Member of Congress, and on the convening of Congress in 1911 no objection was made to his taking his seat. In 1914 and again in 1916 Meyer London was elected a Member of this House as a Socialist from the State of New York, and neither time was the slightest objection made to his being seated. No objection is raised to Victor L. Berger now because he is a member of the Socialist Party or because of his political or economic views. Objection has been made and is now being made because in 1911 he took a solemn oath as a Member of Congress to support the Constitution of the United States and to defend it against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and then when war was declared he deliberately gave aid and comfort to the enemies of his country.

There is just one other point I desire to make perfectly clear. It is said that the people of the fifth district of the State of Wisconsin have a right to choose anyone they see fit as a Member of Congress and to have him seated. With that proposition I take serious issue. The people of that district have a right to vote for anyone they see fit, but they, in common with the Members of this House and in common with all the people of this country, are bound by the Constitution of the United States, and if they persist in electing a man whom the House has found is ineligible under that Constitution, they can not expect to have him seated. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I trust this resolution will be adopted. [Applause.] I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois. [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GRIFFIN. To make a parliamentary inquiry. I have an amendment to the proposed resolution in the form of a substitute, and I desire to ask at what time I may be able to introduce it?

The SPEAKER. It depends upon whether the previous question is ordered or not. If the previous question is ordered, the gentleman can not introduce it at all.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I may introduce it, however, by obtaining the recognition of the Chair, I presume?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will pass upon that question when it arises. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is not an enviable task that I am now performing, and yet my feeling as to right and justice in the matter is so strong that I should feel that I were a coward did I not express very briefly the views which I hold. And whatever else I may be, I hope that, in fact, I never will be a coward. [Applause.]

Mr. Berger has been elected anew to this House by a majority of those who voted in his district at the special election, and to me the question is whether we shall maintain inviolate the representative form of government, where people who desire changes in the fundamental or other laws of the land shall have the right to be represented on the floor of this House when they control a majority of the votes in a congressional district.

I do not share the views of Mr. Berger, but I am willing to meet his views in an argument before the people rather than to say that we shall deny him the opportunity to be heard when selected by this people in the legal form, and invite them, in effect, to resort to violence. Mr. Berger, I suppose, believes that there should be fundamental changes in our form of government. He believes, I suppose, that many things which were done concerning the war were wrong. Has it come to the point that a man who believes certain things can not be heard? His people, his constituents, desire him to represent them. Is it our duty to say to his constituents, "You shall not select one man"? Then, we might quite as well say, "You may not select another." It is not our duty to select a Representative from this congressional district. That is the duty of the people back at home. Gentlemen, we can not take the attitude of refusing to permit the voice of the people of a district to be heard by their own selection with safety to the future of the country. If Mr. Berger believed that the Constitution should be abolished and a new Constitution written in its place, and his people selected him to present those views in the legal body where they could be considered, his people have that right. And when we propose to meet argument by force we are losing our strength in the matter. We can argue these questions before the people.

Let me say that, in my judgment, the times are somewhat critical all over the world. New governments are being raised everywhere. New ideas are being inculcated throughout the various countries of the world. We can only meet these insidious arguments by openly arguing the questions before the people, and unless the people believe that one who thinks the other way has the right to be heard when he properly presents himself, we only add to the discontent and danger.

I am not afraid of the continuance of a representative democratic government in this country. I am not afraid to trust to the final judgment of the people. I am perfectly willing that any constituency shall have the right to select practically whom it pleases to espouse their cause. I am willing to answer their contentions before the people.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. YATES. I want to know if you think we ought to admit to this House a disloyal man? [Applause.] I do not think you do.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, after all, the question of what is a disloyal man is not to be determined by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], my colleague, or myself. You may have the power to do it, but you will not be wise in exercising that power. The Constitution under its amendment gives authority to exclude a person for giving aid or comfort to the enemy. I do not think that that provision contemplated anything which Mr. Berger has done or sought to do. Because he may not have believed in the war—I do not know what his views are upon the subject—that is no reason why. In all history the men who stand out very largely in the parliaments of the world are those who opposed the wars in which their countries were engaged. Under the form of government, would anyone say in the House now that the war is still legally in existence; that we can not favor a peace? It is idle to talk such stuff.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Chair took out of my time, however, the time otherwise occupied.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair did that, the gentleman is recognized for another minute. The Chair was not aware of it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I bow to the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE]. [Applause.]

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, under the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has immediately preceded me, if the people of the fifth district of Wisconsin chose to elect some one 19 years old and send him here, the House of Representatives must seat such person because he is chosen [applause], despite the fact that the Constitution of the United States expressly provides that a man must be, among other qualifications, 25 years of age.

Under the same argument, if the people of the fifth district of the State of Wisconsin shall choose a murderer or a felon in prison and elect him, no matter how odious he may be, he being their choice, the House of Representatives must accept him. [Applause.] And therefore, under the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], although, after four months of patient day and night hearings, making up a record of 3,000 printed pages, every word of which I and others of you have read, your committee of 11 ascertained and recommended, and this House, on November 10 last, by a vote of 311 to 1, judicially determined under your oaths that this man Berger, in the time of his country's woe, was a traitor to this country. [Applause.]

Nevertheless, because he has constituents un-American enough that they approve his infamy [applause], you must allow to sit in your company one who, at the time the Nation's destiny was at stake, struck in the interest of the Central Empires treacherously against the flag that protected him. [Applause.]

The question before us is simple. Fortunately for our ease of mind, if there be any gentleman present who needs a precedent rather than only a mind and a conscience and an Americanism for his guide, there is a precedent. In the seventies, from the State of South Carolina, a Republican man was elected Congressman to the House of Representatives, which was overwhelmingly Republican. He came here bearing a perfect certificate of election. He presented it. No objection was then known to exist against that man's qualifications. His name was B. F. Whittemore. He was sworn in. He sat as a Member. But during that session he was charged with having sold for money West Point and Annapolis appointments. The matter being brought to the attention of some Member of the House, a resolution of investigation of that charge was introduced, and a reference thereof made to the elections committee. Witnesses were summoned and the matter was prima facie proved. But, to avoid a vote upon the resolution of expulsion, Whittemore resigned.

During that same Congress the governor of the State of South Carolina called a special election. The people of that district had knowledge then—as the people of the fifth district of Wisconsin had knowledge at the time of the recent special election at which Berger was a candidate and was elected—that Whittemore was an unfit person to be elected to the Congress. But they chose to tell the Congress of the United States that they would send Mr. Whittemore back and thereby instruct the House of Representatives to seat him, despite his disqualification and unfitness, and thus compel the House to sit in the company of a man who resigned rather than be by the House judicially convicted of infamy. Upon Whittemore presenting his credentials, just as Berger has done this day, a resolution, in practically verbatim terms with that which my friend and colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] has now tendered, was introduced, and a vote came up, and Whittemore was by that Congress, made up of a vast majority of his party, overwhelmingly rejected at the door. [Applause.]

There is your precedent, perfect. Stronger indeed is this man Berger's case than Whittemore's case as to the reason why you should now adopt this resolution of exclusion, because in Berger's case, during the last session of the present Congress, after four months of painstaking, patient hearings, in which such latitude as was perhaps never permitted in any committee of the House in recent Congresses was allowed for the bringing in of every tenet of the political party to which Berger belonged and the introduction of every writing and speech he made since he landed in America in 1868 down to this time, and every argument that could be made or thought of by able and ingenious counsel, our committee presented its report, and you, sitting as judges, by your vote in this present Congress, convicted Berger of disloyalty, and found judicially that he was guilty of the violation of the third section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, and that automatically disqualifies him from sitting in the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EAGLE. I do.

Mr. REAVIS. If the issue is closed by an election, and that issue is concluded, what is the value of the provision of the Constitution that we shall be the sole judges of the eligibility or the right to membership in this body when that judgment can only be exercised on the man elected? [Applause.]

Mr. EAGLE. The gentleman's inquiry is an axiom.

Mr. REAVIS. Let me ask it in another way. Congress has the right to pass judgment on the eligibility of its Members?

Mr. EAGLE. Yes; under the Constitution, my friend.

Mr. REAVIS. Yes. We can only pass that judgment on the man elected by his constituents?

Mr. EAGLE. Yes. That is clearly the case.

Mr. REAVIS. Under the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if we are precluded by that election, how can we pass judgment? [Applause.]

Mr. EAGLE. That is unanswerable.

Mr. Speaker, the record of 3,000 pages in the Berger case in the last session of the present Congress is before you. It shows a beginning and a continuing purpose, plan, and conduct on the part of Berger from the time this country entered into war with Germany on April 6, 1917, until the armistice was signed, to discourage recruiting, to discourage enlistments in the Army and Navy, to cripple the efficiency of this country, to weaken the country's morale, to help Germany, and to injure America. You judicially ascertained, stated, voted, determined, forever settled that fact.

Having settled and determined that fact, it follows that you have judicially ascertained that under the third section of the fourteenth amendment, which provides that any man having previously taken the oath of office to support the Constitution of the United States and having thereafter been guilty of disloyalty and treason, can not again sit in the House. Mr. Berger is ineligible, and you can not without violating your oath of office permit him now to sit here. [Applause.]

The House of Representatives will not thus be denying representation to the fifth district of Wisconsin—it will only thus inform them that the man they have elected and sent here is a traitor unworthy to sit in this House where loyal men sit who honor the Constitution and the institutions of the United States and the flag which to us is a sacred emblem. [Applause.]

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to yield the remaining 10 minutes allotted to the opponents of the resolution to Mr. Berger.

Mr. HICKS. I object.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to be permitted to yield 10 minutes to Mr. Berger. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. SNELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. DALLINGER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD].

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have never been accused of cowardice either in war or in peace. I am opposed to this resolution. I do not think we have any right as a representative body to decide that a duly elected candidate in a fair and free election shall not represent a certain constituency. I am opposed to the resolution on another ground. I do not believe in repressive legislation. Let me tell you how it operated in my own district. In 1918 we had three candidates for Congress, a Republican, a Democrat, and a Socialist. I happened to be the Democratic nominee. The Socialist candidate, Solon T. Klotz, polled 2,006 votes. After Eugene Debs was convicted and sent to the penitentiary, a year later, we had another election in that congressional district. Solon T. Klotz was a candidate for mayor. There were in that case three candidates on the ticket, and Klotz polled 15,242 votes. When you sent Eugene Debs to the penitentiary you made more socialists than all the soap-box agitators could make from Maine to California. I remember during our Civil War Clement L. Vallandigham, of Dayton, Ohio, made a speech denouncing the war. He was arrested by Gen. Burnside, in command of the Department of Cincinnati, 40 miles away from Dayton. He was tried by a court-martial and sentenced to be imprisoned in Fort Warren, near Boston, during the war. The record of the proceedings of that court-martial was sent to Abraham Lincoln through his Secretary of War, and he set aside the verdict of that court-martial. What was his ground for setting it aside? He said you could not convict men for ideas, only for overt acts. Abraham Lincoln did not have a single-track mind. He believed that ideas were the evangels of civilization. Then Vallandigham was sent through the lines to the South by Gen. Burnside. I was in Kentucky when he went through the lines. He went over to the Bahama Islands on a Confederate cruiser, and from there to Canada. In 1863—the same year—he ran for governor of Ohio from Canada. He polled a very large vote by citizens at home, but the soldier vote beat him by over 90,000 votes.

Free speech and a free press are sacredly guarded and guaranteed by the Federal Constitution. This provision was fully debated by the great statesmen of the Constitutional Convention before adoption. Thomas Jefferson, the father of real democracy, said in defense of this vital guaranty in the Constitution that error is not dangerous where truth is free to combat it. During the entire four years' war, 1861 to 1865, the fiercest and most desperate the world had ever witnessed, no citizen of the Republic was sent to the penitentiary on account of his ideas or principles or convictions.

We read daily of the arrest of unruly citizens who, it is alleged, are seeking to overthrow the Government. I do not for one moment believe it is in the power of any class of agitators to overthrow this Government. I have full faith in the patriotism, the love of country, and the love of home of a vast majority to scotch in its inception any move in that direction. But Abraham Lincoln, the patriot saint of real democracy, in a speech made on the floor of this historic Chamber January 12, 1848, said on this question:

> Any people anywhere, being inclined and having the power, have the right to rise up and shake off the existing Government and form a new one that suits them better. This is a most valuable and sacred right, a right which we hope and believe is to liberate the world. Nor is this right confined to cases in which the whole people of an existing government may choose to exercise it.

In the same speech Lincoln denounced our war with Mexico as an unjust war in the most sweeping and denunciatory language. I quote from Lincoln:

> I more than suspect already that he—President Polk—is deeply conscious of being in the wrong; that he feels the blood of Abel is crying to heaven against him; that he ordered Gen. Taylor into the midst of a peaceful Mexican settlement purposely to bring on a war; that originally having some strong motive—what I will not stop to give my opinion concerning—to involve the two countries in a war, and trusting to escape scrutiny by fixing the public gaze upon the exceeding brightness of military glory—that attractive rainbow that rises in showers of blood; that serpent's eye that charms to destroy—he plunged into it, and has swept on and on till, disappointed in his calculation of the ease with which Mexico might be subdued, he now finds himself he knows not where.

Lincoln charged President Polk with carrying the country into an unjustifiable and unjust war. Of course, we must all concede that were Lincoln on earth to-day with such an utterance he would now be serving a sentence in the penitentiary along with Eugene Debs.

Let me not be misunderstood. I do not believe in Victor Berger's principles. I believe, and have so acted throughout this whole World War, that it is the patriotic and imperative duty to support the Government when the war is on. I voted for every measure to promote and carry on the war after the declaration of war. I have full faith in the patriotism, courage, and fidelity of the American people, and I do not believe that all the wild, soap-box orators from Maine to California can destroy or even impair the vitality or sovereignty of this great free Government. I believe with Jefferson and Lincoln that error is not dangerous when truth is left free to combat it. [Applause.]

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes have been used on each side.

Mr. DALLINGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KLECZKA]. [Applause.]

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I can not accept the logic of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that by refusing to seat Victor Berger the House will disfranchise those who voted for him. [Applause.]

The Constitution of the United States provides what the qualifications of Members of this House must be. The disqualification and ineligibility of Berger was known to every voter of his district. It was proclaimed through the press, from the public platform, from the billboards, through the mail, and through every means of advertising and every agency of knowledge communication. Everyone voting in that election knew what the issue was. And yet, with a full knowledge of Berger's disqualification and a keen appreciation of the results of that disqualification, they defiantly and contumaciously cast their votes for Victor Berger. The Supreme Court of Wisconsin declared that a vote cast for a candidate known to be disqualified is null and void. When they cast their votes for Victor Berger, whom they knew to be ineligible, they were aware of the fact that their votes were null and void. They, therefore, disfranchised themselves by their voluntary and defiant action. [Applause.]

Are we going to listen to the voice of those who defied the Constitution and held in scorn and contempt the laws of the land? Are we going to place a premium on defiance of law and order? Are we to give more weight to the rebellious and defiant action of those who by their votes approved Berger's seditious statements and treacherous conduct than we are to the judgment and decrees of the supreme court of a sovereign State?

The precedent cited by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE] disposes of the contention that the proposed action of the House is unprecedented. Even if there was no precedent for the action contemplated by the pending resolution, surely the present is a most opportune time and the facts in this case most compelling to create a precedent. [Applause.]

This House, on the 10th day of November last, pronounced its solemn judgment of Berger's disqualification and ineligibility. The Elections Committee, after a full, exhaustive, and deliberative hearing, found Victor Berger guilty of giving aid and comfort to the enemy of the United States. Courageously and with a due regard for the oath which every Member of this House took to support the Constitution of the United States, this House sustained the findings of that committee and excluded Berger from membership. Is Berger less guilty to-day than he was on November 10?

Because this House patriotically and faithfully upheld the organic law of the land and the honor of this House, Victor Berger brands the Members of this body as corrupt and servile agents of the capitalists. The spectacle of November 10 last is still clear in every Member's mind's eye. Accorded the privilege of this floor, he heaped abuse upon organized government and constituted authority; he hurled defiance at law and order and insulted the membership of this House. To what extremes must the Constitution be reviled and this House insulted before we call a halt? Berger knew when he again became a candidate that he could not be seated in this House. He only added insult to the injury which he has done to the country. By his action he has thrown down the gauntlet to this House. In the name of the heroes living, in the name of that splendid band of militant Americans who are members of the American Legion and whom Berger with scornful hate calls "the cat's-paws of the capitalists," in the name of the martyred dead who sleep in the fields of Flanders and France we will accept that challenge. [Applause.]

Nothing has transpired between the day that Berger was excluded and this day that would warrant any modification or reversal of the judgment of this body. His conduct and his utterances since that day have but furnished additional evidence that fortifies and strengthens the verdict of this House. Since his expulsion he has declared on every public occasion that he would repeat his treasonable statements and actions, only he would make them "much stronger."

Since his expulsion he has but grown more rebellious and more defiant of governmental authority. He publicly and repeatedly declared that "if the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin elected a horse thief or a polygamist as its representative," it was of no concern to this House, and that this body would be compelled to seat such an elected representative. That is Victor Berger's conception of representative government. But these declarations are in harmony with his perverted philosophy. He has never said one commendable thing about this land of freedom and opportunity. He never saw anything noble in American institutions and in American ideals. He prates about constitutional rights and in the same breath condemns and reviles the Constitution as "a scrap of paper."

Who ever heard of a man duly convicted after a full and fair hearing, going about the country and condemning and reviling the tribunal that passed the judgment of conviction, and then appearing before that same tribunal which he villified, and obtained another hearing of his case? To grant another hearing to this man would be to impugn the patriotism and question the judgment of this House, so solemnly pronounced in this case on November 10 last. To seat this man would be to condone and approve his treasonable conduct and seditious declarations; it would mean that this House has compromised with disloyalty and sedition. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent, Mr. SHERWOOD, Mr. KLECZKA, and Mr. GRIFFIN had leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT].

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I was the only Member who voted to seat Mr. Berger when this matter was up before, and my views are already in the RECORD. I desire to say now that I am more firmly convinced than ever that Mr. Berger is entitled to his seat. It seems to me highly unfair to jump on Mr. Berger, who is here helpless and alone. He is called a traitor to his face and he is denied the opportunity to speak in his own defense. Judge Landis, who decided judicially that he was not prejudiced against Mr. Berger, is reported by the Chicago Tribune to have said that he was sorry the law did not permit him to order Victor Berger stood against a wall and shot.

Mr. Berger, in my judgment, is a high-minded and honorable gentleman. [Laughter.] You may laugh and scoff, gentlemen, but I know Victor Berger. No man can devote his whole life and fortune to the great cause of endeavoring to better the condition of the toiling millions, stand by his principles like a rock of Gibraltar, regardless of personal consequences, without being morally great. I do not agree with Mr. Berger politically, I do not agree with his economic theories, but I hope that I am big enough to recognize the purity of his character and motives.

Victor Berger's name will stand in the future as that of a martyr to a great cause—the rights of free speech, free press, and representative government. History has always justified such men and history will justify Victor Berger. The people of his district, who know him best, have already justified him. They have spoken in no uncertain tones, and the old maxim is that the voice of the people is the supreme law. You may say that Victor Berger is a traitor, but if you do, you have got to say that there are 25,000 traitors in the fifth district of Wisconsin.

A MEMBER. There are.

Mr. VOIGT. There are not. The people of the fifth district of Wisconsin are just as loyal and just as patriotic as the people of any district in this country. [Applause.] They may have different views from the people in other districts as to what constitutes patriotism in a given situation, and they are entitled to their views. You can look up the war activities of that district and you will find less law-breaking than in probably 99 per cent of the districts of the country. You will find that they responded to every call of the Government.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. According to that theory, if that is the test to be applied, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Judas Iscariot was treasurer of the Twelve Apostles up to the time he committed the one offense. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. VOIGT. That was a long time ago. [Laughter.] Mr. Berger, as I understand it, is what is known as a mild socialist. [Laughter.] You may laugh again and laugh some more. Mr. Berger is called by the socialists of this country a mild socialist, no matter what you may think about it. The socialists of this country know more about socialism than the Members of this House. Mr. Berger was threatened with ejection and abused at a convention of the Socialist Party in Chicago last September because he would not stand for any radical doctrines. The men who opposed him there, and who withdrew to form a party of their own, knew what Victor Berger stood for.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. No; I can not yield. Mr. Berger has at no time advocated a violation of law. It is charged here that he stands for revolution. Why, gentlemen, when Mr. Berger talks about revolution he means a peaceable, economic revolution; he does not refer to force. You must give Mr. Berger credit for having time and again in his paper, The Milwaukee Leader, advocated compliance with the law. You evidently do not give him credit for that, but it is a fact that he has said time and again that any changes, economically or politically, which he advocates must be brought about peaceably, through the ballot box.

The Constitution of this country guarantees Mr. Berger the right of free speech. If that means anything it means that he should have the right to explain his position on the economic and political questions facing the people of this country. It is said that he is opposed to war. I grant him the right to be opposed to war, as much as I grant the right to a man to favor war. If a man does not believe in war he has the absolute right to express his views. I am not afraid that this country is going to the dogs because Mr. Berger or any other man expresses his opinions. Not only is he entitled to be heard, but the people are entitled to hear him. If you are going to bottle up every man who has something to say which is out of harmony with regular doctrine, the intellectual world must come to a standstill. I have implicit faith in the good sense of the American people. If they find anything good in Mr. Berger's message they have a right to accept it; if not they will reject it.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. No; I can not yield. Let me say in conclusion you are not only doing an injustice in denying Mr. Berger a seat in this House, but you are playing exceedingly bad politics. You are making a million or two socialist votes by your action. I prophesy that the next national election will show the folly of your course in evicting Mr. Berger from this House. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman's objection is characteristic of most of the House at present.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I do not know how many people object to Mr. Berger being heard.

Mr. BLANTON. I do, and I am going to continue to object.

Mr. SISSON. I want to ask if it would be in order to make a motion to give Mr. Berger an opportunity to be heard, say, for 30 or 40 minutes?

The SPEAKER. He can be allowed time only by unanimous consent, not being a Member of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. And I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit another parliamentary inquiry. Does Mr. Berger occupy the same position and status as a man would who is having a contest over his election?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SISSON. I want to be heard upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Would he have the right——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not stated any point of order.

Mr. SISSON. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Berger is entitled to be heard. I do not believe that this House will put itself in the attitude before the country of not giving a man an opportunity to be heard, however anxious every Member of the House might be to come to a vote.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman cite any precedent for a person who is not a Member of the House being heard, except by the unanimous consent of the House?

Mr. SISSON. I am insisting that by motion——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman cite any precedent?

Mr. SISSON. I am not prepared to cite a precedent now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may take his time to look up a precedent, and if he can find one the Chair will be very glad to hear him. In the absence of a precedent, the Chair thinks that a person not a Member can only speak by unanimous consent.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall take but a moment. The only argument that has been made on behalf of Mr. Berger's claim to a seat in the House is that an election having been held in the fifth district of Wisconsin, and it having been claimed that Mr. Berger received a majority of the votes cast at that election, that fact is not only very persuasive but practically compels favorable action on the part of the House in the matter of seating him. Unfortunately for the gentlemen who make that argument and for the argument it runs counter to the fundamental law of the land, the Constitution of the United States. It runs counter to the oath that we have taken to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution limits those who are eligible to the honor of a seat in this House. It provides that they must be citizens, that they must be above a certain age, and that they must possess certain qualifications. Section 3 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution provides:

SEC. 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as a Member of Congress or as an officer of the United States or as a member of any State legislature or as an executive or judicial officer of any State to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof.

This House, through one of its committees, has heretofore examined the record of Mr. Berger. That record was placed before the House. That record as placed before the House and the arguments made in support of it satisfied every Member of this House then present, save one, that Victor Berger had been guilty of a violation of a law of the Union, that he had given aid and comfort to the enemies of the country, and that therefore he was not eligible to a seat in this House. It follows, therefore, that notwithstanding what any people may have since done in his behalf, in an election or elsewhere, under the Constitution of the United States, under our oath to support that Constitution, in view of and consistent with the action we have heretofore taken, we can not seat him as a Member of this body. [Applause.]

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I simply ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, in bringing this debate to a close, I simply want to cite one other illustration of the utter fallacy of the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in regard to the right of a constituency to choose anyone they see fit and to have him seated by this House. Let us suppose that Mr. Berger was still an Austrian subject. According to the logic of the gentleman from Illinois, we would have to seat him, because the people of that district chose to elect him. The Constitution, however, expressly provides that no person shall be a Member of this House who shall not have attained to the age of 25 years, or who has not been a citizen for seven years, or——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I can not yield.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman ought not to falsify my statements.

Mr. DALLINGER. Who was not a resident of the State at the time of his election, and the Constitution also says, as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has again pointed out, that no person who has previously taken an oath as a Member of Congress to support the Constitution of the United States, which Mr. Berger did in 1911, and who subsequently gave aid and comfort to its enemies, shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress. This prohibition is in the Constitution, to support which every Member of this House has taken a solemn oath. Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why any Member should change his vote. Mr. Berger is just as much unfit and ineligible to membership in this House to-day as he was on November 10, and I trust that the Members of this House will be true to their oaths of office and vote for the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DALLINGER. And on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 330, nays 6, answered "present" 1, not voting 91, as follows:

YEAS—330.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I just came out of a sick bed and I was entering the Hall when my name was called——

The SPEAKER. The Chair must ask the gentleman if he was present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. BLACKMON. I desire to vote "aye," but I had just walked in the Hall when my name was called, and then the next name——

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman hear it called?

Mr. BLACKMON. I just came in the door and it was too late to answer, but I was in the Hall.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman hear his name called?

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes, sir; I just walked in the door, but I did not have an opportunity to cast my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hardly thinks the gentleman qualifies. The question is that the gentleman must answer affirmatively if he was present and listening when his name was called.

Mr. BLACKMON. I was not in time to vote. I was present and perhaps I do not qualify.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was not in time to vote——

Mr. BLACKMON. My name was called as I came in the door, and the next name——

The SPEAKER. The Chair fears the gentleman is not entitled to vote.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman suggests that he came in the door from the lobby and heard his name called, but he could not answer in time.

The SPEAKER. Why could not he answer? The Chair could not hear why he could not answer.

Mr. GALLIVAN. He says the next name was called following his. I do not think the Chair heard that. The next name after his was called.

Mr. BLACKMON. I could not afford to shout my name when I was coming in the door.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If he did not answer then, he can not answer now.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of little importance. I did not care to pull off a Wild West stunt out there at the door, and so I do not think I am qualified. It is all right.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The principal question is if a man is here in the House and refused to answer when his name was called twice, can he then come up and vote?

Mr. BLACKMON. I would have voted "yea" had I been in the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the gentleman qualifies.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues from New Jersey, Mr. BACHARACH and Mr. BROWNING, are unavoidably absent. They request me to say that if they were present they would vote "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, Mr. CALDWELL, and that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by my colleague, Mr. STEELE, who is unavoidably absent on account of illness in his family, to say that if he were here he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. VOIGT, now have leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. VOIGT, may have leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman could print the speech of Mr. Berger under it, and I object.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HARRISON, is absent on account of illness. I am authorized to say that if he were here he would vote "yea" on the resolution which has just been adopted.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. RHODES, who is ill and was unable to be here yesterday or to-day, may be excused, and to state that if he were here he would have voted for the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. RHODES, may be excused from attendance on yesterday and to-day on account of illness. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan, is detained in Detroit on account of illness, and I am authorized to say that if he were present he would have voted in the affirmative on this resolution.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks on the Berger matter, and to say that if leave is granted I shall extend only my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

On motion of Mr. DALLINGER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture have leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture have leave to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11578, the Post Office appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the committee resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11578, the Post Office appropriation bill, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11578, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee adjourned last evening the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] had consumed 53 minutes. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] has 90 minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama has asked me to take charge of the time in his temporary absence, and I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall not detain you long. The postal employees have made the handling of the mails the one activity of the Government that all will concede has rivaled any achievement of private business. Yet I think the postal employees are the worst paid of any employees of the Government. I am speaking now only of the conditions that exist in my own section of the country, because I am not familiar with them in other sections. Almost every day brings to the department the resignation of a postmaster or a rural carrier or a city letter carrier from my district; and to show you how little competition there is for these places, I have now upon my desk three or four cases of long-established post offices where the department is unable to procure a postmaster at all. Recently it appeared that an office paying between $800 and $1,000 would have to be abolished because there was nobody who would accept the position. This is the seventh year in which I have served as a Member of Congress, and in all that time there has not been in my district a single contest for the appointment of a rural carrier. There has never been more than one man wanting the same job, and nearly every mail brings a resignation. The work is hard, the roads are not overly good, and therefore at the present rate of compensation it is almost impossible to keep carriers at all.

Going back again to fourth-class postmasters, it is almost impossible in some communities to get anyone to serve. Under the present arrangement, when they must pay rent and for light and fuel and are allowed practically nothing for clerk hire, it is almost, if not quite, impossible to have some communities served at all, and many men are now serving as postmasters who want to quit if somebody can be found to take their places. This is especially true of some of the communities where fourth-class post offices are compelled to act as central accounting offices. Men handling more funds and being responsible for more supplies of money value than the cashier of an ordinary bank are making net salaries sometimes of less than $40 a month. We can not maintain the service at its present high standard unless some change is made.

In my particular section of the State we have a very few star-route carriers, but in other sections of the State men have gone into bankruptcy trying to fulfill contracts entered into with the Government when conditions were wholly different. I had a letter yesterday from a man who has a contract to carry the mail. He has lived up to it so far, but in order to do that at all he has been compelled to mortgage the house in which he lives to raise a sufficient fund to fulfill the contract which he entered into with the Government.

This class of postal employees—the fourth-class postmasters, the central accounting offices, and rural carriers, and the star-route carriers—ought to be taken care of more generously than they are in this bill, or have been in the past. Ordinarily I am not an advocate of raising everybody's salary. I have not been at all filled with that enthusiasm over raising the salaries of generals of the Army or admirals of the Navy that so agitated some Members on the floor of the House. I have not been in sympathy with the propaganda that if you do not raise the pay of these high Army officers immediately they will resign and that the service would become demoralized. I think the man who owes everything to his country for his education and then threatens to quit unless you raise his pay immediately might quit the service for the benefit of the service. [Laughter.]

But I do know that these postal employees who labor under these disadvantages I have been telling you about are entitled to some kind of an increase.

Take a rural carrier who goes out of my town, who has 29 and some odd miles of muddy reads to travel six days in the week and has to pay for the upkeep of his team and conveyance as all do. There is not a man living that would take that contract if it were not for the fact that it is a Government contract; but because he is willing to serve his Government he ought not to be penalized, he ought to be paid a living wage. His is not an isolated case; all or nearly all are similarly situated. When these sections of the bill are reached, dealing with this class of employees, I hope that something may be done that will make their services rendered to the Government not performed at an actual loss. They are entitled to live and rear their families in comfort.

If I am not mistaken, and I do not believe I am, there is not a rural carrier serving in my State now under present conditions whose salary is not more than half consumed by the cost of the equipage with which he serves the Government. It strikes me that it is as unanswerable to require him to furnish a buggy and a horse or two horses or a car in order to deliver the mail on a rural route as it would be to require the postal clerk to own the car that transports the mail on the railroad. The rural carrier is serving the public, and he ought to have the equipment with which he serves the public furnished him. I hope some provision will be made to take care of that situation in the bill.

I have often heretofore called attention to the inadequate pay of postal employees. I am pleased to note from year to year some advances in pay have been granted. May we not now cease to discharge this debt we owe them on the installment plan. Let us pay it at once by giving to all these patriotic and loyal postal employees a living wage. They deserve it; we should do it.

The reason for not doing full justice to them in this measure is that we wait on the joint committee's report. We know what that committee ought to report. Why not anticipate it and bring relief to these long-suffering employees now? For one I am in favor of doing it. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we have now before the Sixty-sixth Congress for consideration the second regular supply measure to take care of the needs of our Government. Our great majority party on the floor of the House having charge of this great legislation has present exactly 13 Members.

Mr. PAIGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not now. If the gentleman wants to correct me I will yield.

Mr. PAIGE. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that his party has 10 Members present and 2 boys. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and of the 10, 6 are Texans, and there is also the gentleman from Tennessee, the gentleman from Alabama, and the gentleman from New York. But there are exactly 13 majority Members present of the great party which has made so many promises to the people about taking care of the interests of the people, now on the floor for the consideration of the second great supply bill. The people are finding out that you are not here, just like they will find out that there are 13 of the majority here now.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I can not yield now. Yes; I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. BLACK. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not his intention to go to his office as soon as he gets through with his speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer specifically that it is not.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman said that he wanted to occupy his time now because he wanted to go to his office.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I said I wanted to fill two engagements with two constituents.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; but I understood that was to be in the gentleman's office.

Mr. BLANTON. No; because my constituents are waiting for me out in the hall.

Mr. BLACK. Well, with that modification, it is all right.

Mr. BLANTON. My colleague knows that I am here all the time when business is being transacted, except when my constituents call me out, and then I am out only a few minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield now. I want to state what I intended to say. The people of this country are not going to stand for this kind of representation by the Republican Party, and if you Republican colleagues of mine expect to remain in charge of the business of this country you had better stay here and take care of the business, because the people will find out that you are not here.

Now, I want to say that the same emergency conditions that exist in the district of my colleague [Mr. PARRISH] exist in mine. One of the greatest oil fields in the United States is in my district and the district of my colleague [Mr. PARRISH]. What is known as the Big Ranger oil fields is in my district. There is one well there which has flowed as much as 12,600 barrels a day in my district. For over six months I have been calling the attention of the House to the abnormal conditions that exist there calling for immediate remedial legislation. I called the attention of my colleague [Mr. BLACK], who is a member of the Post Office Committee, to that fact. He promised me that when the bill was brought in he was going to take care of these conditions, and I am glad to say that he has taken care of them, and I think after the passage of this bill these good people who have suffered so many inconveniences, some having had their mail sent to another place 30 miles distant in order to get it, will no longer have to do so.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. I hope when the gentleman goes out into the hall to consult with his constituents he will take note of the large number of Republicans out there also consulting with their constituents.

Mr. BLANTON. Out in the hall?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know how many are out there now?

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, I will leave that for the gentleman to observe when he goes out.

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell you where they are, a great many of them—no; I will not tell the gentleman, because it might be humiliating.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I have a few remarks that I desire to make upon this bill.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a short question?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not refuse to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROSE. I would like to know whether or not the gentleman ever noticed conditions two years ago like those that he notices to-day?

Mr. BLANTON. And that was one of the reasons that put us out of power, because the gentleman will remember that every time this House then found only a few Democrats here in charge of the business the distinguished present Chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], rose in his place and publicly called attention to the fact. It was the people of the country who administered punishment to us for not staying here and taking care of the business of the people, and they are going to do the same to you Republicans in the next election, because they have found out that you do just like everyone else. You Republicans do not stay here and take care of the business of the people after they have reposed their confidence in you.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does not the gentleman think that the people, after having seen those who represent them in Congress on the Republican side, will be better pleased if they stay away? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, they want them here.

Mr. CARAWAY. For what purpose?

Mr. BLANTON. They have voted to send them here, to stay here and attend to business, and they expect them to do so.

Mr. CARAWAY. But when they find out that they have made a mistake, does the gentleman not think they will be willing to have them stay away?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; if they find they have made a mistake. They swap horses themselves once in a while—the Democrats do.

Mr. CARAWAY. But I am talking about the gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the Republicans swap horses. They change about frequently. I want to say here that I believe the only safeguard on God's green earth to the people of this country is the fact that every two years they have the right to change their Representatives. It is their only safeguard, and they are not tied to us for six years. Every two years they have the right to change, and if you think the people are ever going to be green enough to change that law you are mistaken. That is one right that they are going to hold to and to hold to carefully.

But coming back to this bill, I am glad that it provides for these emergency cases. An oil town with 10,000 people in it needs its mail just like people in any other town of 10,000, and to be compelled to have a fourth-class postmaster in a town of that kind is ridiculous, because no one could be found anywhere in the United States who would assume the responsibility.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. How long have these conditions existed in Texas—these developments?

Mr. BLANTON. A little over a year. These emergencies have been growing.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. PARRISH says a year and a half.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean these emergency cases. They have existed for the past year, where towns such as he has mentioned have grown up.

Mr. STEENERSON. He says a year and a half.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the oil has been there for a year and a half, but the crowded towns have not been there such as he mentioned.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Under the existing law the Postmaster General can take care of them if such conditions exist for a year, and we have cut that down to three months. The condition has existed for a year, the gentleman says. Has the Postmaster General done anything?

Mr. BLANTON. Where the four quarters have shown the required receipts; yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. He has?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to make any lengthy speech on this bill, because there are really no points of controversy in the committee. I hardly think there will be any contest on the items of appropriation. Also I think there is a general agreement on the few items of legislation that are contained in the bill. Really the most important item of legislation in the bill is section 2, which provides that the temporary salary increases of February, 1919, and November, 1919, shall be continued for the next fiscal year. We are all, of course, familiar with the fact that we now have a postal commission composed of five Members of the House and five Members of the Senate, that is investigating the whole question of postal salaries, with a view of recommending legislation, looking to a permanent readjustment of the pay of postmasters, postal clerks, rural carriers, letter carriers, railway mail clerks, and all the other postal employees.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman tell the House just how soon that commission is expected to report?

Mr. BLACK. I will say to my colleague from Texas I do not have the honor of being a member of the commission, but it is my impression and understanding that the commission will probably report by the 1st of March. They are still carrying on some investigations, and are compiling the questionnaires and the data that they have gathered, with a view of making recommendations to Congress, and that will probably be not later than the 1st of March.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman know whether the committee contemplates taking up those recommendations independent of any action in this bill, supplementing such action as may be taken by the House on this bill?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; that is the contemplation. It is contemplated that this commission will recommend legislation. Of course, that legislation will have to take its turn in the House. It is uncertain just when it will be taken up, but it is very probable that it will be taken up in the House before the 1st of July.

But it is not at all certain it will be enacted and put into law before the 1st of July, and therefore the committee thought it would be wise to put into this bill the assurance that the temporary increases would be continued, so that the postal employees might not rest uneasy on that score and so that it might not go to the country that the Post Office appropriation bill had passed the House without containing the present salary level. So that was the real reason for putting these temporary provisions into the bill at this time. Now, we hear a good deal said in the magazines and papers at the present time about budget legislation. We have already passed a budget bill in the House, and I dare say that the Senate will also pass a bill on that subject, and a law of that kind will therefore be enacted during the present session, and I hope that a great many economies will result from the passage of the law and that it will meet the full expectation of its advocates; but, as to the Postal Service, I doubt if it works any substantial economy, because, be it said to the credit of our able Postmaster General and his assistants, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads rarely finds it necessary to revise downward any estimate that the Post Office Department makes. Of course, a great deal of that is due to the long and settled organization of the department, business machinery which it has already built up, but it is no exaggeration to say that a great deal of the credit is due to Postmaster General Burleson and the very able men with whom he has surrounded himself. Now, in the case of this bill which we are now considering the estimates of the department were based on the basic salaries, as under the law they should have been, and the total amount of the estimates submitted to the committee was, in round numbers, I believe, about $390,000,000. The present bill carries $461,000,000, or a difference of about $70,000,000 over the department estimates. Now, the reason for that is, as I have stated, the committee has decided to continue these temporary salary increases, and they will amount to about $70,000,000 for the next fiscal year. I think from every consideration that the postal employees merit a continuance of these increases. From any standard we may view the matter they are entitled to have it done. Now, one of the criticisms that we hear quite frequently as to our present industrial conditions is that the productive value of labor has gone down—that labor does not produce what it used to do. Well, there is one thing we can definitely say and confidently assert, and that is that the productive value of the labor of postal employees has been fully maintained throughout the war. The chairman of the committee [Mr. STEENERSON] yesterday in his very comprehensive statement made mention of the fact that in the months of September, October, and November, 1919, there was an increase of 25 per cent in the postal revenues over the corresponding months of 1918, excluding the war-revenue portion of the law. Now, what does that mean? Of course, it does not necessarily mean that the amount of the mail as to weight has increased 25 per cent, because first-class mail matter is of lighter weight than second-class, and probably second-class matter lighter than some fourth-class matter, but it does mean that the volume of the mail has grown very substantially and in a greater proportion than the increase in the number of postal employees, and therefore the only fair deduction that you can make is that the postal employees are performing a larger amount of labor than formerly. In other words, they have responded splendidly to the needs of the situation.

Now, it is a sound rule and one that will undoubtedly work a solution of a great many of our economic ills that with increased production we will have better standards of living. That is to say, there must be a larger production. Of course, you can arbitrarily increase the salary of one class of employees; that is, you can increase one class much greater than similar classes, and you might by that method raise the standard of living of that particular class of employees, but the mass of the people, the great mass of the world's population, can only have a better standard of living by increasing the production of the world. There can be no controversy as to that proposition. Therefore I say these postal employees merit and deserve consideration at the hands of Congress, because notwithstanding the distracting things that have taken place during the war, notwithstanding the unrest of the country——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to remind the gentleman from Texas that he has used 10 minutes.

Mr. BLACK. I will use five minutes more, if the Chair will permit. I say, notwithstanding the unrest and the propaganda and distracting things which have taken place, the fact remains that the postal employees, something like 300,000 of them, have gone on in the face of those disconcerting circumstances and have handled a larger volume of mail, much larger than they handled before the war, and have handled it very efficiently. Now, that is one reason why these salaries are fully justified. Another reason is that even if you grant that labor has remained upon the same basis of production, if a man is working the same number of hours as he did in 1914 and is producing no more nor no less, he would undoubtedly be entitled to a wage increase because of economic conditions which exist. What is the situation that faces us? By reason of the practical doubling of the circulating medium of the country, what do we find? We find the man who owned a piece of property—a house and lot, we will say—in 1914, then worth $3,000, notwithstanding he may not have added anything at all in the way of improvements on his property since then—maybe he has not painted it or has not repapered it or anything of that kind—finds that he owns a place now worth $6,000. We find that the man owning a horse worth $150 in 1914 owns a horse now worth $300.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. In a moment. We find the man who owned a 100-acre farm, for instance, in my section of Texas, or in your section of Kansas, or in yours of Maryland, or in the State of New York—a man who owned a hundred acres of land, we will say, that was worth $10,000, or $100 an acre, in 1914, notwithstanding the soil may not now be as fertile, notwithstanding it may have had to yield crops that may have decreased its fertility, we find a farm worth $20,000 by reason of these changed conditions. Now I will yield.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I was going to ask the gentleman whether he observed the statement in the papers a few days ago from one of the departments that the dollar to-day was only worth 47 cents in comparison with six years ago?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; and I think that is about right. Perhaps the situation is not that bad, but certainly there has been a great decline in the purchasing power of the dollar.

Now, the point I am making is this, that every man who is fortunate enough to own a commodity or a piece of property has seen the value of that doubled by the workings of economic law. Of course, if he owns a bond or some definite evidence of indebtedness, it has not increased. But the laboring man, so far as his labor is concerned, finds he has the same productive capacity as before, and certainly not double what it was before, therefore the only way he can meet this situation is to have his wages increased so as to meet this rise in value.

Now, a good many of us thought—I admit I was one who thought it—that when the war closed this abnormal situation would go back to normal or nearly so. But I have become convinced that the only way we could bring prices of commodities and property back to normal would be by a radical method of deflation of the currency, and that would absolutely paralyze the business of the country. It can not possibly be done. And therefore the real problem of statesmanship at this time, and the real problem that faces the business of the country, is to see to it that wherever employees have not received a comparable increase of wages to the increased cost of living, that they do receive it. That is the only fair and the only wise thing to do. And so, of course, under these circumstances, the least that we can do is to continue these temporary increases until the Postal Commission makes its report. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I really do not think it is necessary to use 30 minutes in discussing this bill. Everybody seems to be for every item in it, and there is not much satisfaction in discussing anything on which everybody is agreed. There is real fun in making a speech when we are trying to convince everybody else that they are wrong. Since everybody is right on this question, anything I may say can not have very much interest for those who are here.

But I wish to say one thing, and that is that the marvelous growth of the Post Office Department in the last year or two is such that no matter how much vision those who are in control may have, it seems almost impossible to keep pace with the facilities necessary to conduct the business as it ought to be conducted.

The growth of the Post Office Department is far beyond the imagination of any man, and it continues to grow so fast that no matter how comprehensive the facilities may be that are employed to meet the present needs, before they are ready for use they have become obsolete.

And how you can conduct a business of this magnitude and keep pace with its growth and have the facilities up to date with which to give the people the kind of service they expect is far beyond my knowledge or the knowledge of any man who has had anything to do with it. Only a little over a year and a half ago we enacted a law to make a 3-cent postage rate. That additional cent was intended to help to pay the cost of the war. It was not intended that the revenues from that source should go into the treasury of the Post Office Department or used in the transaction of postal business. Seventy millions of dollars a year was collected as the result of that increased postage, and when the war was over the law was repealed, and to-day we are on the 2-cent postage basis again. And yet, on the 2-cent postage basis the revenues of the department have increased about 25 per cent over what they were on the 3-cent basis.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. I would like to ask the gentleman what proportion of the revenues is brought in by the first-class mail?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not remember what it is now, but it used to be about 68 per cent.

Mr. STEENERSON. If the gentleman will yield, I think he inadvertently made a misstatement there about the amount of revenue last year and this year. He will recall that it was 25 per cent over what the second-class rate a year ago would have produced and 7 per cent over the 3-cent rate.

Mr. MADDEN. That may be true, but I wish to call particular attention to my own city, for example. There, if that may be classed as typical of what is going on in the department work everywhere throughout the United States, the statement I have made is rather under the fact than over the fact. Last month, for example, the receipts in the Chicago post office were $4,178,000, which is 24.2 per cent greater than for the same month the year before, when 3-cent postage was in vogue, and 41 per cent over what they were the same month a year ago if the 2-cent stamp had been in vogue. So that as a matter of fact the statement I have made is not over, but rather under the facts.

Now, we have during the last year or two increased temporarily the compensation of the men in the Postal Service, and the increase has amounted, as near as I can recall, to about 37 per cent over what the basic salary fixed in 1907 was, while the average increased cost of living has been about 78 per cent. The last increase we made, under what is known as House joint resolution 151, in November last year, averaged about 12½ per cent, and the increases that were made prior to that time averaged about 25 per cent. So that the increased compensation granted to men in the Postal Service has by no means kept pace with the increased cost of living. But it was fortunate for the Postal Service that the Congress had sufficient vision to make these increases as a war measure, for had the Congress not done that we would have had no Postal Service, as it was impossible to get men to serve in the Postal Service at any price. In the city of Detroit alone, where they have only about 1,400 men, the turnover in a single year was more than 3,500. So that it may be said that two and one-half times the number of people in the service in that office had gone out and come in in a single year. In the city of Akron the same may be said to be true. And when I was in Chicago in September, sitting on the commission which is now in session for the purpose of revising the postal salaries and reclassifying the work, we found that they were obliged to take in 1,100 men from the streets, that were not taken from any classified list, and that out of those 1,100 men some would work an hour or two, some a day or two, and some a week or two, but none of the 1,100 or any other part of these extra men ever became qualified for the Postal Service. And the result was that on account of the onerous conditions under which the department was compelled to work during all the period of the war and since the war, they have not had the standard of intelligence among the incoming employees that is requisite for the proper conduct of the department. The men who are in this service must be educated if they are qualified to do the work. They must pass the civil-service examination before entering the service. They must be qualified before entering the service for the work they are called upon to do. The work of a clerk in the Postal Service is not like the work of an ordinary clerk in a department, for the postal clerk must be especially qualified. It takes him at least 10 years in a great office, working every night, before he is qualified for a day job.

So he works under conditions far more difficult than those of the men called into the Government service for clerical employment in various other branches of the Government.

They are also called upon to devote at least two hours every day of their own time, when they are off duty, to the consideration of problems with which they must be familiar in order properly to conduct the service that they are called upon to perform. They are required to study what is known as the scheme work; that is to say, they must understand just when and how to dispatch the letter so that it may get to the first train for delivery to its destination. That involves the learning of 3,000 post offices in the sections for which they are called upon to distribute. It may involve a study of the post offices of a whole State, and they must understand the box into which every letter that comes for any post office among the 3,000 is to go for earliest dispatch. They are not given the time during their working hours to make these studies. They must make these studies at home, and while everybody else in the Government service is permitted to go home when he completes his day's work and do what he pleases with his time off, these men, after going home, are compelled to devote at least two hours every day to the task of qualifying themselves for the work they are required to do when on duty. They are required to be on duty 10 hours every day, during which time they are called upon to work 8 hours, and in addition to that they are called upon to give these other 2 hours of their time. In addition to that they are required to take an examination every 30 days and are compelled in the examination to prove themselves qualified by passing at a standard of excellence equal to 99 per cent out of 100.

And so, you see, a man does not get an opportunity to become rusty in the Post Office Service. If he ever gets rusty, out he goes. And so I say that when we paid these men this additional compensation we did not do the men so much of a service as we did the Government, because we encouraged these men to hope for better things some time, and the last resolution passed by the Congress under which we gave them this small additional compensation in November has done more to facilitate the transaction of the postal business throughout the country than anything else we ever did.

These men, before the passage of that resolution, were downcast, disheartened, discouraged. They had lost hope. They feared that nothing was ever to be done for them. Yet their patriotism prompted them to attend to the business of the service. Although it is provided by law that the hours of service shall be only 8 in every 24, yet these men frequently were called upon to work 16 hours a day. They did it, and they did it without a murmur. They did it because it was necessary, because qualified men could not be had.

And as we go through the country taking testimony on the difficulties that surround the men who are engaged in this great service we wonder at the patriotism which they have displayed in every hour of every day throughout the whole period of the war. They were exempt from the military service under the selective-draft law, but they were not content to remain in the Postal Service. Wherever they could secure relief from the Postal Service they demanded that relief, and they went into the military service, and they came back here to join the force of their fellows again.

I am thankful to realize that we had the foresight while we were passing the draft law to provide that every man who had been in the Postal Service prior to the war and who had left it for the purpose of going into the war should find his place waiting for him on his return; not the place that he left, at the wages that he then received, but the place that he would have occupied, with the wages then applying to that place, at the period of his return. And I believe it is only fair to say that the Postmaster General has lived up literally to the provisions of the law and has reinstated every man that proved himself qualified and who rendered service to his country during the war.

There are many other things that ought to be done for these men in addition to the increase of the compensation which we have temporarily allowed them, and these things are being considered carefully now by the Postal Commission. The Postal Commission hopes to be able to make their report to the House and Senate within the next 60 days, and it is my earnest hope that when this report comes it will be of such a nature as to justify the appointment of the commission, for it is the belief of every man on that commission that the Postal Service ought to be made as popular as it is possible to make the service throughout the country.

The Postal Service is the people's service, the one great service in which all the people of the United States are interested, the one service that they look forward to every day. They look to see the man in gray coming toward their home every morning with a letter from their loved ones, here, there, and everywhere. These men in gray are the outposts of the Postal Service. They are the men who are in the front, the pickets, so to speak. The clerks, while doing just as patriotic service as the carriers, are not as well known to the people. The people think the Postal Service consists of letter carriers, and letter carriers solely. But it is not true. The letter carrier is the last word in the Postal Service in the delivery of mail. We drop a letter in a box; we go away and leave it; we give it no further consideration. We expect by some means or other that it will be delivered to our friend the next day. Our friends drop a letter in a box and go away and leave it, and expect that we will receive it the next morning. It is true that we do and they do. But the delivery of the letter is the last link in the chain, the last part in the transaction, for after the letter is dropped into the box some one in gray comes along shortly afterwards, quietly, and takes it out, puts it into his bag, puts it on his shoulder, and carries it to the post office, and there puts it on the distribution table, and a clerk dispatches the letter thus carried along through this distribution scheme that I have attempted to describe, and later on the letters are tied in packages, and still later on they are put into a wagon and transferred to the railroad station, put on a railroad train, and there we find in the silent hours of the night these faithful men, who are known as railway mail clerks, distributing this mail as they stand in the aisles of these railway mail trains, facing all the dangers of travel, many of them losing their lives, others being crippled for life as the result of their service and their distribution of the mail through the various towns through which the trains run as we sleep and give the matter no thought.

Then, again, the letter reaches its destination. It is carried from the railway station to the post office, perhaps a fourth-class post office, where the postmaster gets from $250 to not to exceed $1,000 a year for the work. The mail is distributed to the people in the neighborhood. If it is a village, it is a third-class post office. If it is in a city, it may be a second-class post office. If it is in a great metropolitan center, it is a first-class post office. There we find this great army of loyal, patriotic men and women working for the amelioration of conditions that are to be corrected throughout the country and delivering us the mail carrying information, messengers of love, condolence, and hope into every home.

We want to popularize the Postal Service. The men in the ranks want to popularize it, and they have done more by their loyalty and patriotism and industry and intelligence to make the Postal Service popular than has ever been done by any man who may have been in charge of the service at the top. Not that the men at the top are not necessary. They are; but the time has come when men can not be appointed to the places at the top because of political influence. The time has come when men must be appointed from the bottom to the top on account of their qualifications, experience, and knowledge, and if we are to perpetuate the popularity of the Postal Service as it has existed, and as I hope it will exist in the future, we must have a body of expert men from the bottom rung to the top rung of the ladder, and there is only one way in which you can get them. That is to put them in at the bottom and let them qualify for the higher places, and then qualify for still higher places as they go up and up, until we have chosen men who have grown up in the service and know every activity in it for every place of any importance. Then you will have an institution speaking for the American people, entering every home in the land—an institution made up of patriotic, loyal men who hold their places on merit and not through influence. I thank the gentleman now occupying the position of Postmaster General for the inauguration of a system that makes what I have already said partially true, for under his recommendation the fourth-class postmasters are appointed as the result of examination, and third-class postmasters, too; but the time is coming when second-class postmasters and first-class postmasters must be appointed from the ranks of the service, from men who are qualified by knowledge and experience to conduct this great business enterprise, for that is what it is. And not only shall they be qualified and eligible to appointment as second and first class postmasters but to all the great executive branches of the Postal Service in Washington, from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General up to the Postmaster General himself. Then the people may hope to see an enterprise conducted along economical, scientific business lines, managed by men who are trained in a work as to which they have expert knowledge, and then and then only can we hope to perpetuate the Post Office Department as a people's institution and manage it systematically and economically.

In days gone by we have given the Postmaster General authority to name what are known as accounting officers, one in every county; so that to-day instead of having 53,000 reports of transactions coming from 53,000 postmasters to the office of the Postmaster General we have only 3,000, one for each county. But even that system must be reformed, for it is not fair to make third and fourth class postmasters accounting officers. In this bill we have given to the Postmaster General the authority to name only second and first class post offices as accounting offices. Those offices have clerks, they have executive officers, they can qualify to do the work, and under this authority it will be possible for the Postmaster General to reduce still further the number of accounting offices and the number of accounts in this great department here in this city.

We are progressing slowly toward the stage of perfection. The progress must be slow, because the Congress has been jealous of its prerogatives. The Congress has hesitated to give to the Postmaster General authority which any great administrative officer ought to have. Some people have refused to give it because the Postmaster General is Mr. Burleson. Some have refused to give it because it is the Postmaster General, regardless of the personality of the man. I am one of those who believe that, no matter what a man's name may be or what his politics, the administrative officer of a great department like the Post Office Department ought, if we expect efficient management from him, to be given the right to determine questions of policy, and he ought to be given discretionary power in great matters of business such as he has to deal with here; and until we give that discretionary power to the Postmaster General we will still be handicapped by having in many instances to pay a dollar and a half for seventy-five cents worth of work.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman whether he has thought over the question of the crowded condition of the post offices in the country, especially in the large cities. In our city of Baltimore we have efficiency, but it is very difficult to keep up the efficiency in the crowded conditions which have resulted from the establishment of the parcel post and the great increase of business.

Mr. MADDEN. As I said in the beginning of my statement, the marvelous growth of the business of the department makes me wonder how any man, no matter what vision he may have, can see the needs of the Postal Service and supply the machinery with which to conduct that service; because just about the time we get what we think is the most efficient machinery that can be had we find that it is obsolete on account of the continued growth of the service.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In counties where there are only fourth-class postmasters, where is the accounting office going to be?

Mr. MADDEN. In such cases they will have to take in more than one county, and send the accounting to the place where they have a first or second class post office.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Suppose they have a great, big county?

Mr. MADDEN. There will be some cases of that kind, but in order to obviate the difficulty existing under the present system there must be greater latitude given to the Postmaster General, and he must be given the right to name men in first and second class post offices as accounting officers.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What I had in mind when I asked the question was the building occupied by the post office.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I had in mind. Take Chicago. We have no post office worthy of the name. We started in 1912 with a post office that was adequate to supply the needs at that time. Our revenues were then $12,000,000 a year. To-day our revenues are $40,000,000 a year, and we remain in the same office.

Take Boston; I think that post office is the shame of the century. It is not fit for a dog to live in, to say nothing of men working in it. It is an outrage. The same is true of St. Paul and of many other places. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DONOVAN].

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is naught that I can say that would add to what has already been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who has preceded me and who has in a masterly manner described to the House the situation which exists in this great country of ours relative to its postal needs. To me it would be like painting the lily or filling the cup already full for anyone to add or embellish what he has so well said. I regard the gentleman from Illinois as the valedictorian in presenting the case on postal matters to the House. I did not rise to pay him a personal tribute, but in simple justice I pay him this courtesy for his fidelity to the Postal Service and as a most useful member of the committee, and particularly do I concur in his opinion and declared hope that the entire postal system will soon be operated by men trained and developed from the ranks. I subscribe to all that he has said in toto. Such a reform in the system, I am aware, would be by some regarded as revolutionary from a political or partisan standpoint, but the postal system transcends partisanship or politics; it is tremendous in its scope and its ramifications and is a gigantic problem which concerns the entire citizenry of the Nation.

The gentleman from Illinois has called it the people's institution. I designate it the people's university. It is more than an institution; it is more than a college, with its intricate branches and subdivisions, some of which are the Railway Mail Service inspectors, clerks, carriers, auditors, and administrative officers. Gentlemen, it is a most instructive university, of which every American citizen is a student, the teaching staff being the operatives and the Postmaster General and his assistants the faculty.

It needs no compelling argument to realize that this great army of 300,000 loyal, efficient, and patriotic Americans are deserving of the advantages proposed in the bill under consideration. You and I have both known many of our public and high school comrades who have entered the Postal Service.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to add one thing: That in our investigation of the New England postal needs it was a revelation to find that nearly every man in the service was a college man.

Mr. DONOVAN. I am not at all surprised at that statement. I was born and reared in New England and speak particularly from observation and knowledge in regard to my former schoolmates in Connecticut, many of whom, upon completing their high-school course, entered the Postal Service. I have a country home in that State near my native city and during vacation periods frequently meet schoolmates of my boyhood days, many of whom have given 25 to 30 of the best years of their lives in unselfish service to the Government. Many are aged in a marked degree in comparison with other boyhood schoolmates who were no more talented than those who entered the Postal Service, but who affiliated their talents and energies with less exacting, time consuming, and laborious employment. The Post Office Department demanded recruits equipped with high educational and physical prowess, and these recruits entered the service, proud of the distinction of being chosen by their Government for a position of responsibility and trust. They had hoped that by fidelity to that trust the Government would reward them. Soon, however, age with its attendant cares crept upon them, and in most instances having families to support, their hope of reward was dimmed by the Government's delay in showing by commensurate compensation its appreciation of the great service rendered by them.

The Postal System is in its very nature a monopoly. It has no competitors. The men and women in the service become trained specialists, and those who remain in the service until middle life find no other market where they can sell their talents and skill, and are thereby foreclosed from taking up other activities which would give them more leisure and greater compensation.

It is reassuring to note that this bill is more generous than any yet proposed and I heartily support it and urge its enactment into law, with the confident hope that the day is not far distant when the postal employee who epitomizes the ideal American public servant will be fully compensated for his or her efficient and loyal service to the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I was particularly gratified with the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. I know that he has been a constant student on postal matters and a great friend of the postal employees. I know it is largely through his influence and work that salaries have been increased and that these men are now or will shortly be paid sufficient remuneration upon which to live. I am particularly gratified with the fact that Baltimore has such a splendid service, such a fine personnel, both in its clerks, its letter carriers, and the entire force of that city. My great wonderment is the fact that they are able to carry on the work as efficiently as they do in the face of the crowded condition of our post office. Many of our men are crowded into a basement, working with a poor light, mostly artificial light, endeavoring to carry on the postal work of the city that has grown to tremendous proportions, now having something over 700,000 inhabitants.

Since the Postal Service has been inaugurated and the work of the postal department has grown so enormously, it seems to me that Congress should undertake to get enlarged accommodations throughout the country. I know that in many of the post offices a great deal of space has been sacrificed to architectural effect. We might have had more light if we had had less architecture, and the result is that now we have very crowded conditions, and that obtains throughout the land.

I rise particularly to call attention of the House to the fact that if the other cities are crowded as Baltimore is crowded in its postal building, then certainly something should be done to enlarge the facilities for carrying on this work. I would like to see post offices constructed or enlarged throughout the country along the same line that a business man would enlarge his business buildings. We do not find the business interests of the country trying to carry on a tremendously increased business in a small structure, but we find them enlarging their business buildings, so that they may carry on the enlarged business, and that should be the case with the Post Office Department. I think we should undertake the construction of new postal buildings wherever they are necessary. For myself I should like to see the buildings for separate cities considered in separate bills, so that each city could go before the committee and present its necessities and then have the House act upon those bills. Something must be done. It is not just, it is not fair, it is not reasonable to expect these men to carry on this great work in the crowded conditions we find everywhere, using the artificial light that must be used.

I hope this Congress will take up the subject and force it to a conclusion, so that we may soon find ourselves with better facilities for carrying on this tremendous work, which means something to practically everyone in the land, rich or poor, for everyone enjoys the postal facilities of the country. The post office is their pride, it is the one thing they need every day, and it is the one thing which should be equipped to the very highest point of efficiency. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield those 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE].

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to the statements made by members of this committee who have in charge one of the great agencies of the Government. What has been said has been instructive and interesting. It is not my purpose, however, to speak on this subject, but I desire to address myself to a subject entirely foreign to it. I hesitate to do so, however, if there be any member of the committee or of the House who wishes to discuss the bill itself in the time that is allotted to me. If no one does, I shall proceed with what I had intended to say.

Mr. Chairman, to all lovers of America the fires of patriotism that swept our country in 1917 will never cease to be a source of unbounded pride and satisfaction. Many had despaired of the existence of such love of country as would carry and sustain us through a great war. As a Nation we had long lived a life of luxury and self-indulgence, as the result of the rapidly expanding wealth and the accumulation of the good things of life. More than 50 years had elapsed since the close of the last great war, and its grim and desperate features were familiar by personal experience to but few outside the ranks of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Confederate Veterans. Not a few feared that in the extremities of a great war we might prove what the Germans, and even the people of some other European nations, thought we would prove, a Nation of shopkeepers and dollar lovers, physically and spiritually too poor to sustain a great and noble cause. They thought we might justify the prophetic forecast of the poet—

> Ill fares the land to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates and men decay.

Happily, however, when the call to war came on the 6th of April, 1917, these fears were not realized—the people sprung to the defense of their country in the most spontaneous and gratifying way. Patriots in every walk of life strove to do what each individually could do to further the cause of our country. Doubtless we shall never again witness such an inspiring and generous unanimity in a great cause as that which existed throughout America in 1917 and 1918. There was a passion for sacrifice for country which was shared by rich and poor, by youth and age, by men, women, and children. The rich gave of their time and their wealth; the poor of whatever they had; and both joined in raising millions for the Red Cross and other beneficent organizations for the relief of our men in the camps and field. Age contributed the value of experience and foresight; youth—best of all—gave its brawn and muscle, sacrificed some of its best years, and many gave the supreme gift of all—life itself—to the great cause. Men gave all the masculine attributes to the national purpose—power, courage, sacrifice, and all the manly virtues—women contributed all the sweetness and sacrifice which is the crowning feature of their character, the service at home, in the camp, in the field—everywhere—whereby the brave soldiers might be kept in touch with the comforts of civil life, and braced up in heart and hope for the complete discomforts and dire dangers of a soldier's life.

As a people we took a sort of grim pleasure in submitting ourselves to the unaccustomed restrictions, conservation orders of food administrations, fuel administrations, railway administrations, war trade boards, shipping boards, press censorships, unappetizing things to eat and drink, high prices for food and clothes, because we felt that we were doing something for our country. Such was the "spirit of 1917."

Congress regretfully voted on April 6, 1917, that the state of war with Germany existed, and the country emphatically sustained Congress. A logical sequence to the declaration of war was the passage of the selective-draft law, which was even a greater strain upon the heartstrings of Congress than the fateful declaration itself, and again the country sustained Congress. Then came the trying days of the draft, when the boys were being taken from their employments and their homes, and it was wonderful how the country passed through that stormy period. The finest thing of all, however, was the soldiers—the officers and men. There were all manner of unaccustomed discomforts at the camps—unfurnished and windowless barracks, cold and rain, severe drills day after day, often undersupply of clothing, and other shortcomings due to inexperience and newness of everything. In many camps they were short of guns even for drilling purposes. These conditions were bad for both officers and men. But through it all, while we knew that these shortcomings existed, the men displayed a splendid fortitude. They were gradually being drilled into a magnificent army. Those who came in slouching and careless in action soon became erect, of fine bearing, quick and snappy soldiers. The change was marvelous.

Soon the eyes of the American people turned to France. First, Gen. Pershing, with a small force of Americans, saluted at the grave of the early friend of America and reported in the historic four words, "Lafayette, we are here!"

Followed thousands upon thousands of brave American soldiers, crossing the broad and tempestuous Atlantic, often in great discomfort. Enormous landing places, great ports in themselves, were constructed in France. Railways, telegraph lines, great hospitals, and vast camps were constructed. Before the end more than 2,000,000 of gallant American soldiers were in France, making good the declaration of their commander in chief at the tomb of Lafayette. This vast army was transported through seas swarming with the deadly and destructive submarines and explosive mines of Germany; and yet, due to the vigilance and skill of the magnificent American Navy, not a single soldier was lost through those dreaded and destructive agencies of the enemy who was on an American ship and convoyed by the American Navy. This wonderful testimony to the efficiency of our Navy, not yet fully understood and appreciated, will constitute one of the most impressive and gratifying pages of history of the war when that history is fully written.

As our splendid Army, evolved from the ranks of a free people not given to military exploits of conquest and close organization, was on the ground in Europe earlier than had been anticipated, so it also appeared on the field of battle sooner than was anticipated by the enemy or even by our allies. With rare magnanimity Gen. Pershing first permitted units of our Army to fill out the decimated armies of Great Britain and France, thus strengthening the allies' line, "with its back to the wall," as the gallant British general, Haig, had termed the situation, defending the approaches to Calais and Paris.

With what anxiety did the Nation at home contemplate the earlier entrances of American troops into the bloody conflict? We had great confidence in them, but we fully realized that modern war had perfected the methods of human destruction and that it was all new to our brave boys. Our hopes and prayers were with them. When the news came of their splendid courage and effective participation in the battle at Cantigny and later at Chateau-Thierry, where the last and greatest German onslaught to Paris and the sea was effectually stemmed by American soldiers and marines, and we realized that our men had had their "baptism of fire" and had come out with distinguished honor, a wave of happiness and pride swept across the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to distant Alaska, and to our islands in the seas. Rapidly following, came Belleau Wood, St. Mihiel, and the long and terrible battle of the Argonne Forest. Many other battles were fought, and everywhere our gallant officers and men maintained a high place for courage and achievement, and in every action of the hundreds in which from first to last they engaged, never once did they fail to uphold the splendid traditions of the American Army, builded on gallant deeds stretching from the War of the Revolution, through the Mexican War, accentuated in the hundreds of battles of the Civil War, and closing at Appamattox, through the Spanish War and the Philippine Insurrection, down to the present day.

All honor to the American soldiers and sailors, from the general and admiral commanding down through the various grades to the humblest private in the ranks and the sailors on the decks and the stoker in the fire rooms of our dreadnaughts and submarine chasers—every one of the 4,000,000 men—whether they succeeded in their universal desire to go overseas or not. Each one showed his patriotic wish to serve his country and his fellow men, even though it might cost that which all men most value—life itself. Every branch of American society was embraced in this modern crusade—every calling and every profession. The farmer deserted his fields, the blacksmith his forge, the lawyer his briefs, the merchant his store, the engineer his instruments of precision. These men so recently engaged in peaceful occupations soon found themselves in entirely new conditions and in various divisions of the military service. How splendidly did they play their parts in whatever branch of the service they found themselves, whether that service was upon the solid earth, upon the rolling seas, or in the unstable air; whether in the Infantry, the Cavalry, the Artillery, the Tank Service, or whatever remained on the ground; whether on battleship, cruiser, torpedo-boat destroyer, or submarine on the water; or whether in observation balloons along the battle line or in airplanes sailing over the enemy armies, fighting his airplanes and noting the disposition and movement of his troops.

Among all the 4,000,000 brave Americans who offered themselves, if need be, for the great sacrifice, the members of no profession responded more freely or placed themselves more absolutely at the disposal of their country than did those of the medical profession. We might not go beyond the truth to say that in proportion to their numbers, and because of the highly essential nature of the services which they could render their country, they volunteered with greater freedom and with less regard to their personal fortunes and individual interests than the members of any others of the learned or scientific professions. Personally I knew dozens—perhaps hundreds—of instances where members of their noble profession left valuable and lucrative practice and—what is still more dear to the masculine heart—beautiful and loving wives and children for the hard labor in rude hospitals, in camps, and adjacent to hard-contested battle fields, for compensation so small as to but poorly sustain their families, who had before enjoyed most comfortable and well-provided homes. They are worthy of all honor. How many lives of our brave boys they have saved; how many through their skillful ministrations have been brought back to physical fitness, of value to themselves and to society. Never should we for a moment forget their splendid and brave assistants, of frailer physique but of the same stout and devoted hearts, the female nurses. All these noble and splendid conservers of human capacity for the physical work of life and of life itself should be held by all Americans in eternal respect, honor, and love. The little five-pointed metal star which henceforth they are entitled to wear, like the small copper button of the veterans of the Civil War, should carry with it a peculiar significance, entitling its wearer to the salute which honors brave deeds and service to country—if not the physical salute, then the salute in mind and spirit which honors and reveres the defenders of America.

Here in Congress, my colleagues, let us who represent all these brave soldiers, who represent the fathers and mothers and the wives who consented to their going and bade them farewell with God's blessing, never forget their services to the country. We owe them a duty to remember them in our legislation. Let us not permit ourselves in the pressure of general legislation, which all of us feel from day to day, to forget to do them justice, particularly those who suffer from wounds or disease. Let us not permit the requirements of form and red tape to prevent them from receiving the consideration and benefits which Congress really desires that they shall have. Our plans for these brave men have not in all cases worked out as well as we had hoped they would.

Let us revise and amend these laws wherever needed, always keeping in mind the duty that the American people and the American Congress owe to the heroes who braved death for their country on land, on sea, and in the air—at Cantigny, at Chateau-Thierry, at St. Mihiel, at Belleau Wood, and a hundred other battle fields. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER].

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to confine my remarks to this Post Office appropriation bill. That field has been thoroughly covered by gentlemen who preceded me. In working on this appropriation bill, beginning some time prior to the time when the committee held its hearings, and comparing the appropriations of this bill with the expenditures of the Post Office in previous years, I pursued my investigations to the total national expenditures from the foundation of our Government to the present time, ending with our current expenditures, revenues, and the status of our bonded indebtedness.

This Post Office appropriation bill carries appropriations for the fiscal year of 1921, which commences July 1 next. The total amount of this bill is $461,728,368, which is more for this one department of government than it took in the early nineties to pay for all the activities of the Government. In 1892 the total expenditures of the Government were only $445,382,293, an amount less than the amount we authorize in this bill for the Post Office Department alone for the fiscal year 1921.

When we go back to the beginning of our Government and follow the growth of the national expenditures to the present time, it is apparent that the growth of national expenditures is out of all proportion to our growth in either population or wealth. In Washington's administration, from September 2, 1789, to December 31, 1791, a period of over two years, the total national expenditures were $3,797,436.78. His second term was more expensive; the highest annual expenditures were $10,435,069.65 in 1795. The highest annual expenditures during the administration of John Adams were $11,989,739.92 in 1800. In Jefferson's administration the highest annual expenditures were $16,764,584.20 in 1808.

During the Madison administration we had the War of 1812. The highest annual expenditures during that war were $39,190,520.36 in 1813, a little over $22,000,000 more than the highest annual expenditures during the previous administration. Our school histories lead us to believe that the War of 1812 was a great war, but it is evident that war then did not cost so much as it does now.

Coming on down through the administrations of Monroe, John Q. Adams, Jackson, Van Buren, and Harrison and Tyler we find the annual expenditures varying from $12,000,000 during the administration of Tyler to $39,000,000 during Van Buren's administration. The Mexican War occurred during Polk's administration. This was another great war, according to our school histories. The highest annual expenditures during this administration were $59,451,177.65 in 1847, or $20,000,000 more than the high-water mark of the Van Buren administration.

I do not want to weary the House with these figures, so I will hasten. The highest annual expenditures prior to the Civil War were $83,751,511.57 in 1859. During the Civil War the expenditures increased greatly. The highest were for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, when they were $1,897,674,224.09. Then they decreased rapidly. The lowest annual expenditures since the Civil War were for 1869, and the amount for that year was $321,490,597.75. It will be interesting to note in passing that this sum is almost four times more than the highest annual expenditures before the Civil War.

From 1875 to 1889 the national expenditures exceeded the $400,000,000 mark but once. Since 1889 there has been a constant increase until the three years preceding our entrance into the World War—1914, 1915, and 1916—the annual expenditures for each of those years exceeded the billion-dollar mark.

The annual expenditures during the World War, according to the figures given to me in a letter from the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, were as follows:

1919	18,514,000,000.00

Now, let us come down to the problem we have before us for the next fiscal year, for which Congress must authorize appropriations prior to June 30 next. I submit here for the RECORD in parallel columns the total expenditures of each department for the fiscal year 1916, the year before the war, and what the administration asks for the fiscal year 1921, the year after the war. At any rate, we hope the war will be legally ended by the 1st of next July.

	Expenditures for fiscal year 1916.	Administration estimates for fiscal year 1921.
Legislative	$13,848,037.16	$19,844,934.95
Executive proper	395,949.11	2,221,224.00
State Department	6,444,594.11	12,920,609.91
Treasury Department	121,308,214.33	1,674,233,922.85
Independent bureaus and offices	7,221,833.24	508,749,449.59
District of Columbia	18,633,853.15	23,285,316.03
War Department	166,853,552.23	1,208,901,505.92
Navy Department	155,883,194.66	580,674,130.80
Interior Department	201,658,832.61	294,370,826.81
Post Office Department	313,499,162.80	398,837,543.00
Department of Agriculture	28,031,540.33	72,568,102.00
Department of Commerce	11,493,722.17	33,705,038.49
Department of Labor	3,531,144.47	8,974,574.00
Department of Justice	10,602,453.28	17,946,471.35
Panama Canal	17,503,728.07	18,245,391.00
Adjustment of miscellaneous accounts	1,016,310.50
Total	1,072,894,093.23	4,855,410,031.62

Comparing the figures in these columns is most interesting. Every Government activity shows an increase. Some of the increases are astounding. Most of these increases can and will be reduced, with the exception of the Post Office Department. This department is the only department of Government that pays for itself. The increase in this department represents the natural growth of business of that department and the increases to the employees made necessary by the increased cost of living. The salary increases were not estimated by the department, which accounts for the committee's increase over the department's estimate.

I call your attention to the increase for the Treasury Department. This includes over a billion dollars for interest on our national debt and for benefits to the soldiers and sailors through the War Risk Insurance Bureau. These amounts can not and will not be reduced.

Now I call your attention to the astounding increase asked for by the War Department. The year prior to the war we spent for the Army $166,853,552.23. For next year they ask $1,208,901,505.92, about eight times the highest amount expended before the war and more than it cost to operate every activity of the Government before the war. I do not want to discuss the league of nations at this time, but permit me to make this observation in passing. Last summer when it appeared that the league would be forced through the Senate just as it came from the secret peace conference at Paris the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff, with the knowledge and approval of the President undoubtedly, appeared before the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate and proposed a military program which, among other things, provided for a peace-time standing army of 576,000 men. Knowing that such a standing army could not be raised and maintained in time of peace by voluntary enlistments, the program further provided for conscription in time of peace to keep up this standing army and for authority to send the Army to any part of the world where mandates might be assumed or police required. After it became evident that the league could not pass the Senate without strong American reservations, Gen. Pershing last fall appeared before the House Military Affairs Committee and testified that in his judgment a standing Army of 250,000 men would be sufficient. If this appropriation for the War Department can be cut down in the same proportion, a material saving can be made on this one item alone.

The Navy is a little more modest. The year before the war the Navy cost $155,883,194.66. The amount asked for next year is $580,674,130.80. As I am going to place this table in the RECORD, Members can for themselves make comparisons of the other departments and bureaus.

The total amount expended for the year prior to the war was $1,072,894,093.23. The amount demanded by the administration for next year, which does not include salary increases to Government employees and other items heretofore called to the attention of Congress, such as deficiencies on war contracts, railroads, good roads, and so forth, is $4,865,410,031.62.

Mr. MADDEN. There is about a billion to be added.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman is correct in his statement; so that the amount is more nearly $6,000,000,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And the interest on the public debt besides.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The interest on the public debt is included in the increase provided for the Treasury Department, to which I called the attention of the House a moment ago.

Mr. MADDEN. On which the interest is $1,017,000,000. And there was $75,000,000 in the last year's Post Office bill for good roads, and at least $400,000,000 will have to be paid to the railroads, which are not included in the estimates, and $250,000,000 increased compensation.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I thank the gentleman for his statement, because I know he speaks with authority on this subject.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The national debt, according to the Secretary of the Treasury, was $971,562,590 on June 30, 1916. On June 30, 1919, it was $25,484,506,160.05. By next June 30, by the same authority, the debt will be $26,516,506,160.05.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will permit, if bonds had been issued to cover the deficit of $3,050,000,000, it would amount to about $30,000,000,000.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Right here let me state that it is my understanding that there are about $23,000,000,000 of the debt in bonds—war bonds—and that the rest of the debt of $3,000,000,000 is in Treasury certificates, which are renewed every six months. Is the deficit to which the gentleman refers in the Treasury certificates?

Mr. MADDEN. There is a $3,000,000,000 deficit that is covered by the certificates. And, further, we have contract adjustments due to the unfinished and unadjudicated contracts for the war which will probably involve over two or three billion dollars more.

Mr. RAMSEYER. According to the Treasury Department, the cost of the war was $32,000,000,000. But I know that that does not include many things that have not yet been paid for, and which will have to be paid for; and there is no doubt in my mind that the war has cost considerably more than $32,000,000,000.

To pay the annual interest on the national debt will require the raising of revenues of over $1,000,000,000. For a number of years to come the interest on the national debt will be about the same as the total annual expenditures before the war.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure the collocation of figures here is of interest to men who want to make value of them. But what idea has the gentleman of giving value to the country by putting all these figures in the RECORD?

Mr. RAMSEYER. The Members here not only have the right to know, and should know, but the people also have a right to know what is the status of our national finances.

Mr. BLANTON. I was trying to gather whether it was the gentleman's idea that we should profit by these figures by beginning a sure-enough bona fide course of economy here.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is something about which I shall have something to say before I conclude. We have had preaching enough about economy. It is easy to preach economy. I am sure the gentleman will join me with acts and deeds of economy.

The credits established by the Secretary of the Treasury in favor of foreign Governments since April 6, 1917, were at the close of the business day of October 24, 1919, as follows:

Belgium	$343,445,000.00
Cuba	10,000,000.00
Czechoslovakia	55,330,000.00
France	3,047,974,777.24
Great Britain	4,277,000,000.00
Greece	$48,236,629.05
Italy	1,620,922,872.99
Liberia	5,000,000.00
Roumania	25,000,000.00
Russia	187,729,750.00
Serbia	26,780,465.56
Total	9,647,419,494.84

It will be observed that the 11 foreign Governments to which we made loans during the war owe us nearly $10,000,000,000. For these loans we hold from the 11 foreign Governments demand certificates of indebtedness which bear interest equivalent to the rate of 5 per cent per annum, but arrangements have been made with these Governments by the Treasury Department to provide for the funding of the interest on these obligations for the next three years. In other words, these Governments will pay us no interest during the next three years, amounting to over $400,000,000 annually. During this period this interest will be paid by the American taxpayer. In a letter to me the Treasury Department explains this arrangement as follows:

> In view of the present derangement of the foreign exchanges, it would add to the difficulties of the situation and would not be to the advantage of the United States to require cash payment of interest.

Whether these foreign loans will ever be paid back is problematical. Some of them will be, undoubtedly, and I hope all. It is a fact that we have been urged to cancel them. I will never consent to that. While in France last spring I was reliably informed that certain of the European nations urged before the peace conference that we should assume a proportionate part of the allied war debts incurred before our entrance into the war. We will pay the debt we made and no more. Our Government has even been approached to guarantee the German indemnity to the allied nations. On this point the following Paris dispatch carried in our metropolitan press December 31, 1919, is significant:

> Discussing the loan, Alexander Ribot asked Premier Clemenceau reguarding guaranteeing of the German indemnity by the Allies. The premier replied, "That can not be taken up now because of the situation in Washington."

We must attend to it that the "situation" in Washington remains unchanged on this subject.

REVENUES TO MEET EXPENDITURES.

From 1866 to 1910 practically all the revenues to meet national expenditures were raised by indirect taxation, chiefly from customs duties and from internal revenue. These indirect taxes were paid by the people in a manner that did not call to their especial attention when and how much they contributed to the support of their National Government. However, with direct taxes in vogue since 1910, and especially during the World War, it is very different. The taxpayer knows when and how much he contributes to the maintenance of the National Government, and most naturally he will be inclined to hold to a stricter account the public servants who are intrusted with the expenditure of the public funds.

As an illustration of the transition from indirect taxation to direct taxation, I quote Mr. Good, of Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in his report on the national budget system:

> For the fiscal year 1909 the total ordinary receipts aggregated $603,589,489.84, of which $300,711,933.95 came from customs duties, $246,212,643.59 came from internal revenue, and the balance was received from the sale of public lands and other miscellaneous items, whereas for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the total receipts from customs amounted to $184,457,867.39, while the internal revenue, including income taxes and corporation and excess-profits taxes, amounted to $3,839,950,612.05.
> It is thus seen that in the future by far the greater part of the revenue required for conducting the public business must come from direct taxes. This, coupled with the further fact that the ordinary expenses for running the Government will in the future probably exceed $4,000,000,000 a year, will cause the public to take a much greater interest than heretofore in appropriations by Congress. The political issues of the future will not be centered around the tariff but rather around the problems of economy as reflected in the appropriations made by Congress. If this is true, Congress must place itself in a position where it can meet these problems in the most efficient way. The soundest and most approved methods of business transactions must be adopted by Congress if it is to perform well and efficiently the duties which this new condition creates.

Prior to the World War during nearly every fiscal year there was a surplus of receipts over the expenditures. To be more specific, from 1866 to 1917, inclusive, the receipts exceeded the expenditures for each year with the exception of 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, 1905, 1908, 1909, 1915, and 1917. The total amount by which the expenditures exceeded the receipts for the 11 years just named is $443,766,744.70. For the 52 fiscal years, 1866 to 1917, inclusive, the receipts exceeded the expenditures in 41 years, the total of such excesses for that period being $2,591,453,184.16.

The total receipts of the National Government during the war (not including moneys received from the sale of bonds) for each fiscal year ending June 30 were as follows:

1917	$1,452,302,345.80
1918	4,003,022,472.42
1920 (estimated, including sales of war property)	6,203,000,000.00

It is estimated by experts of the Treasury Department and in Congress that for some years to come our national expenditures annually will not be less than $4,000,000,000, and possibly as high as $5,000,000,000. This is on the assumption, of course, that the world will settle down soon on a peace basis. It is generally conceded by gentlemen in a position to know that we can not greatly increase the total revenue receipts by indirect taxation over what they were before the war, and especially in 1910, when we collected $333,683,445 from customs duties alone, the highest ever collected in any one year from that source. So one thing is quite certain, that by far the greater portion of the revenues to be raised hereafter must be raised by direct taxation.

I have sought an opportunity to make this statement so that all who are interested in our national finances can get a clearer grasp of this very important and vital subject. Congress enacts laws to raise the revenues and makes appropriations authorizing the expenditure of moneys in the Treasury; but the administration, through the various executive departments, spends the money. Because of the greatly enlarged expenditures for the Government in the future it behooves Congress to keep a closer check on the spending departments of the Government. Most of the money to be expended in the future will come directly from the pockets of the people; and the people will hold every public official to the strictest economy, and very justly so.

The people will cheerfully pay the interest and principal on the national debt incurred in winning the World War. They will gladly pay for any generous provisions and benefits to the soldiers, sailors, and marines who made possible the winning of the war. They will not murmur because they are taxed to maintain any legitimate Government enterprise. But hereafter economy must be the watchword. Waste, extravagance, useless offices, and questionable ventures must be eliminated by the National Government. On the other hand, to meet the necessary annual expenditures of the Government and to pay off the national debt, it will be necessary for the people as a whole to practice economy in their daily life and to produce more. A nation in debt, as an individual in debt, can get out from under the debt only by working and saving. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks I submit the following:

Total annual expenditures by the United States Government from Sept. 2, 1789, to June 30, 1920.

Administration	Total expenditures.
George Washington—

Mr. BLACK. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has six minutes remaining and the gentleman from Minnesota four minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yesterday the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], in his usual energetic manner, called attention to the fact that he desired legislation in regard to these unusual conditions due to the oil developments of Texas. He criticized the Republican side of the House, because he said there were only 13 or 14 of them who were here when this item of legislation, in which he was interested, was pending, and intimated that the party was deserving of criticism. But it seems to me the gentleman had no grievance. He stated himself that these conditions in Texas arose a year ago, and the other gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH] said they arose a year and a half ago. So that for nearly a year, or, anyway, nine months, before the Republicans got control of the House of Representatives these conditions existed in Texas and no attempt at legislation was made. The Post Office appropriation act was not finally adopted until the 28th of February. It seems to me that they could, if these conditions were so critical, have attended to it then, as they controlled the Congress. The first the present chairman of the Post Office Committee heard of this was in October last, when we had under consideration a conference report on House joint resolution 151, when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] criticized the committee, and stated that he had called the attention of the department to it, and the department had requested legislation of the Post Office Committee. I felt that it was an unfounded statement at the time so far as the committee was concerned. I believed the gentleman was mistaken as to which committee he referred, because, it being an emergency, it was the usual course, if it was requested at all, to request it from the Appropriation Committee, and therefore I felt that the Post Office Committee was not derelict in any way. But I wrote to the Postmaster General, and I will have the answer read in a few minutes. I want to quote these words from it. It is dated November 12, 1919, and it says:

> In compliance with your request for advice as to the situation in the post office referred to by Mr. BLANTON, I wish to say that while I do not know the name of the office in question the departmental records fail to indicate the necessity for legislation to provide for payment in excess of the present maximum rate of $1,000 per annum to postmasters at offices of the fourth class. The difficulty experienced by the department in securing postmasters has been negligible, and while there have been a considerable number of resignations at the smaller offices, this condition is to be expected, and no serious difficulty has been experienced in filling vacancies thus caused.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I send this letter, with memorandum, to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., November 12, 1919.

Hon. HALVOR STEENERSON,
Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Referring to your letter of the 25th ultimo, and my reply of October 29, regarding statements by Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON during the debate on House joint resolution 151 on October 24 relative to the provision of law limiting the compensation of postmasters at offices of the fourth class to $1,000, exclusive of money-order fees, I wish to say that the departmental files fail to show that your committee has ever been requested to consider legislation so amending the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 600; ch. 142), as to provide for advancement of an office from the fourth to a higher class prior to the expiration of one year in the lower grade. The statute referred to has been amended several times in recent years so as to provide increased compensation within the maximum of $1,000 allowable to postmasters at offices of that class, but the provision for reclassifying such an office, which involves a readjustment of the postmaster's salary, has invariably restricted such advancement to the showing made by the office for "four consecutive quarters."

With reference to the Congressman's statement to the effect that he had been advised by Mr. Ellsworth, of this department, that the attention of your committee has been called to this matter, I am inclosing for your information memorandums submitted to me by Mr. Ellsworth, superintendent of the Division of Post Office Service, and Mr. W. S. Ryan, assistant superintendent of that division, covering interviews with the Congressman as accurately as is possible from memory.

In compliance with your request for advice as to the situation in the post office referred to by Mr. BLANTON, I wish to say that, while I do not know the name of the office in question, the departmental records fail to indicate the necessity for legislation to provide for payment in excess of the present maximum rate of $1,000 per annum to postmasters at offices of the fourth class. The difficulty experienced by the department in securing postmasters has been negligible, and, while there have been a considerable number of resignations at the smaller offices, this condition is to be expected, and no serious difficulty has been experienced in filling vacancies thus caused.

You will appreciate the fact that the resignation of a postmaster at a small office, such as those of the fourth class, is not in any respect a serious matter and does not tend to materially impair the service.

The records show that the department has been very liberal in the matter of allowances out of the appropriation for unusual conditions for quarters and employment of clerical assistance at offices in the Texas oil fields, and it is my opinion that the service in that section has been and is at this time as good as could reasonably be expected, in view of the phenomenal conditions and the almost insurmountable difficulties encountered in the delivery of the mails as a result of the transient nature of the population of the towns in the oil belt.

Very truly, yours,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, October 28, 1919.

Memorandum.

Statements by Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON during the debate on H. J. Res. 151, on the 24th instant, are surprising. It is no doubt obvious that I would not advise a Congressman that legislation to provide for increasing the compensation of postmasters at offices of the fourth class had been requested of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. So far as I know, such legislation has never been contemplated by the department, nor has it ever been considered necessary to the proper administration of the Postal Service. It is a fact that in a very few isolated cases, where unusual conditions exist, such as is the case at this time with reference to perhaps two or three fourth-class post offices in the Texas oil fields, postmasters at such offices are required for a few months to perform a higher grade of service than is as a rule expected of postmasters of fourth-class offices. However, under the law an office of the fourth class may be advanced to the third, second, or first class if the receipts for four consecutive quarters warrant such advancement, and it has been the experience of the department that fourth-class offices which for a few months are burdened with extra duties on account of some unusual business activity are as a rule more than compensated for this hardship by the salary paid after the advancement of the office, as the business frequently declines shortly after such advancement, with the result that the postmaster during his second year of service is not required to perform duties commensurate with the salary paid. Nitro, W. Va., is a case in point, and several other similar ones could be cited.

Congressman BLANTON has been advised by me that the appropriation for unusual conditions could not be used to augment the compensation of a postmaster at an office of the fourth class, inasmuch as the law specifically limits the salary at such an office to $1,000 per annum. The Congressman has been further advised that this appropriation was available for the employment of clerical assistance and rental of quarters at such offices, and this, as our records will show, has been done in every instance where the facts justified such action. In fact, with particular reference to the offices in the district represented by Mr. BLANTON, the files will show that the department has been very liberal in the matter of allowances, large sums having frequently been authorized by telegram on the request of the postmaster, without waiting to have an investigation made to determine the necessity for the expenditure of the amount requested.

The Congressman's statement relative to his efforts to secure aid from the department is astonishing. While he does not mention the number of visits made, the fact of having "worn out three pairs of shoes" in traveling to and from the department would indicate numerous calls. I would not attempt to hazard a guess as to the number of visits made to the department by Mr. BLANTON, but I think it is safe to say that he has not called at my office more than six times during the past six months. The files will show that he has written numerous letters concerning conditions at various offices in his district, and each communication received from him has been given very prompt and careful attention.

G. D. ELLSWORTH, Superintendent.

During the reading the following occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Can not we read the balance of that?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that out of the regular time the balance of the letter may be read.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Has not all time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] has one minute remaining.

Mr. BLACK. I promised to yield that one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. STEENERSON. All right. We will print it in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state it can not be done in the committee, the time for general debate having been fixed by the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the balance of the letter be also printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this whole controversy is based upon numerous requests I made of the Post Office Department to furnish proper service to the oil-belt offices in my district and to the people of Desdemona, Tex., which grew from a little town of about 100 people to a town of approximately 20,000 people in a very few months. You could hardly get a man to act as a fourth-class postmaster for a first-class office. As soon as I can get the time I will place the real facts connected with this matter before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated for the service of the Post Office Department, in conformity with the act of July 2, 1836, as follows:

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HUTCHINSON, for 10 days, on account of important business;

To Mr. ROWAN, for five days, on account of the sickness of his son;

To Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan (at the request of Mr. SCOTT), for three days, on account of illness;

To Mr. RHODES (at the request of Mr. DYER), for two days, on account of illness; and

To Mr. JOHNSON of Washington (at the request of Mr. HADLEY), for the day, on account of illness.

LANDING OF THE PILGRIMS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks for the immediate consideration of the House concurrent resolution which he sends to the desk. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the time in which the joint special committee shall report, which committee was appointed under the provisions of the resolution (H. Con. Res. 14) of the present Congress authorizing the appointment of a joint special committee to confer with the officials of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and others relative to the participation by the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims, be, and the same is hereby, extended until March 1, 1920.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] if this is the third or fourth or fifth extension?

Mr. WALSH. I will state to the gentleman that this is the third extension, and I feel very much humiliated to be compelled to ask the extension. But two distinguished Members of the other branch who are very busy Members have been absent, and the committee has been unable to convene and consider a report. We have been unable to get the views of all the Members, and it was felt that if we could have this present postponement the recommendation of the committee would be made long before the date fixed. I have made it sufficiently remote so as to provide for any further contingency that might arise.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman does not think that he will have to ask for any further extension of time?

Mr. WALSH. I am glad to say that I do not think it will be necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a division.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division is demanded.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 1.
So the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 12, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:
1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the average number of employees of the Navy Department receiving the increased compensation at the rate of $240 per annum during the first four months of the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 588); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.
2. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a petition received from the inspectors and clerks of the Steamboat-Inspection Service at Cleveland, Ohio (H. Doc. No. 589); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.
3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of State for contingent expenses and for foreign intercourse, fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 590); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11239) granting an increase of pension to Marguerite Murphy, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:
By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: A bill (H. R. 11633) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of public buildings at Providence, R. I., for use as a quarantine station; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
By Mr. VARE: A bill (H. R. 11634) providing for the appraisement of the value, the purchase of, and the operation of the pneumatic mail-tube properties in the city of Philadelphia and other cities where such equipment is now located; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.
By Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 11635) for the erection of a public building in Blairsville, Indiana County, State of Pennsylvania, and appropriating money therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
Also, a bill (H. R. 11636) for the erection of a public building in Kittanning, county seat of Armstrong County, Pa., and appropriating money therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
By Mr. BOWERS: A bill (H. R. 11637) authorizing the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Keyser, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
Also, a bill (H. R. 11638) authorizing the acquisition of a site at Berkeley Springs, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 11639) to provide for the promotion of the senior major general on the active list of the United States Army, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
By Mr. WATSON: A bill (H. R. 11640) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the cemetery at Barren Hill, Montgomery County, Pa., one brass cannon; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 11641) to prevent deceit and profiteering that result from the unrevealed presence of substitutes for virgin wool in woven fabrics purporting to contain wool and in garments or articles of apparel made therefrom manufactured in any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or transported or intended to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce, and providing penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.
By Mr. CLASSON: A bill (H. R. 11642) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate the claim of any member of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians against the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.
By Mr. VARE: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 44) directing the retention of the pneumatic mail tube equipment in the Philadelphia and other post offices, pending legislation affecting same in Congress; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:
By Mr. ALMON: A bill (H. R. 11643) granting a pension to Harriette Skelton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. BOWERS: A bill (H. R. 11644) for the relief of the heirs of John M. Corley; to the Committee on War Claims.
By Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 11645) granting a pension to Sarah B. Jewett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. DALE: A bill (H. R. 11646) granting a pension to Carrie E. Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
Also, a bill (H. R. 11647) granting an increase of pension to William H. Willey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. DENT: A bill (H. R. 11648) granting an increase of pension to John E. Coogle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. FESS: A bill (H. R. 11649) granting an increase of pension to Ellis Henthorn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 11650) granting a pension to Gladys R. B. Scheib; to the Committee on Pensions.
Also, a bill (H. R. 11651) granting a pension to Lucy J. Sheldon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. GREEN of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 11652) granting an increase of pension to Philander S. Groesbeck; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 11653) granting a pension to Luke C. Monroe; to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 11654) granting an increase of pension to Marsh Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 11655) granting an increase of pension to John S. Jamison; to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. LEHLBACH: A bill (H. R. 11656) for the relief of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J.; to the Committee on Claims.
By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 11657) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Lemuel C. Canfield; to the Committee on War Claims.
By Mr. RICKETTS: A bill (H. R. 11658) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Lenz; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:
785. By Mr. DALLINGER: Petition of the executive committee of the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, indorsing House bill 11126, to save daylight in the first zone; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.
786. By Mr. ESCH: Petition of Rev. H. F. Fox and 34 other citizens of Urbana, Ohio, urging such legislation as will reduce the high cost of living; to the Committee on Agriculture.
787. By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: Petition of members of the faculty of the veterinary division of the Michigan Agricultural College, in favor of reorganization of the Army Veterinary Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
788. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of S. J. McDonough, of Baltimore, Md., indorsing Mason resolution to establish consulates in Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.
789. Also, petition of the P. Dougherty Co., of Baltimore, Md., indorsing the Husted amendment to House bill 7124; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
790. Also, petition of National Central Bank and National Bank of Baltimore, Md., indorsing the Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.
791. Also, petition of J. E. Kessler, of Relay, Md., and Sparrow Point Lodge, No. 63, of Baltimore, Md., protesting against passage of Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

792. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, advocating consular reforms; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

793. By Mr. RAKER: Petition from the San Francisco Council, Friends of Irish Freedom, indorsing the Mason resolution establishing diplomatic relations with the Irish Republic; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

794. Also, copy of telegram from the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, indorsing the Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

795. Also, petition of National Industrial Conference Board, transmitting resolutions relative to legislation regarding railroad strikes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

796. Also, petition of San Francisco Council, Friends of Irish Freedom, indorsing the Mason resolution to establish diplomatic relations with the Irish Republic; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we have not built a social order that can stand alone. Apart from Thy continued grace and favor we may not hope to perpetuate the institutions that have brought happiness and freedom to the millions of Thy children. We seek day by day Thy continued favor and grace that we may continue upon the path upon which we have committed ourselves, and that we may so work together with God that the largest prosperity and the finest and divinest peace may come to the people. We ask Thy blessing in this divine endeavor. For Christ's sake. Amen.

JAMES D. PHELAN, a Senator from the State of California, appeared in his seat to-day.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

THE VETO POWER.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Post of this morning.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE POWER TO VETO PEACE.

"The Constitution provides a way to enact laws despite the veto of the President. But there is no way to make a treaty against the veto of the President. If there should be in the White House a President who did not wish to make peace after his treaty had been changed by the Senate, it might happen that the United States would be unable to reach a state of peace, except on terms laid down by a single individual and in defiance of Congress. There might be a President so wedded to his own plan, so entangled by promises to foreign Governments, or so jealous of the rights of the Senate that he would refuse to exchange ratifications of a peace treaty if the Senate had made reservations in behalf of this Nation. The reservations might be desirable and warmly approved by the people, but such a President could say, 'I do not accept the action of the Senate as the will of the people, and I refuse to approve of the Senate's work.' He would be within his constitutional powers, and could not be compelled to exchange ratifications of the treaty.

"By a two-thirds vote Congress can repass a bill over a President's veto, and it becomes law. The same provision should be made in case of a treaty after it has been approved by the Senate by the required two-thirds vote. Having reached that stage, it should not be pigeonholed by the President, and he should not have the power to pigeonhole it. If he should refuse to proceed with exchange of ratifications, Congress should have power to make the treaty effective by a two-thirds vote, as in case of a vetoed bill. A treaty is a law, and so far as it affects American citizens it is nothing but a law. Congress can abrogate a treaty by passing a law, with or without the President's consent, and this has been done several times. If a treaty and a law are in conflict, the Supreme Court takes the last expression as the law, whether it be the treaty or a simple act of Congress.

"It is conceivable that a President of the United States might be elected who would misuse his power to pigeonhole a peace treaty, and thus keep the Nation in a state of war. A treaty is a contract between nations, and usually a peace treaty is a complicated bargain, the making of which required confidential exchanges between the parties, often leading to the making of secret pledges which must be kept from the knowledge of the people. In such a case the completed draft is apt to conceal as much as it reveals. It is also apt to be obscure, ambiguous, or even purposely misleading on important matters which have been disposed of secretly or which are to be handled privately by the Governments in a manner which would arouse antagonism or even war if known to the people. In that case the Senate would demand information and would not obtain it, or it would learn something indirectly which would cause it to make amendments or reservations for the sake of national security.

"Quite conceivably, amendments or reservations to a peace treaty would seem to be simple on their face and obviously unobjectionable, and yet they might vitally affect the pledges or commitments which a President had made privately to foreign Governments. The ambiguous language of a treaty might be so changed that instead of permitting a President to fulfill secret pledges it would disrupt the entire series of private understandings which has shaped the treaty. He would then be faced with the alternative of breaking his private agreements with foreign Governments or pigeonholing the treaty, notwithstanding his previous advocacy of it. He would possibly be able to convince some of his countrymen that the Senate's alterations had nullified the treaty, in which case he would have specious grounds for refusing to proceed with ratification; but, on the other hand, the people would probably insist upon ratification because of their anxiety to terminate the war. A stubborn President, however, could go to the end of his term without exchanging ratifications, notwithstanding the clamor of the people. Thus he could prove to foreign Governments his own personal good faith in endeavoring to secure ratification by the United States of a treaty with all its private implications and understandings unaffected by reservations or amendments.

"The present controversy over the treaty of Versailles has been valuable in bringing out the defect in the treaty-making power which is herein described. The truth is that the treaty-making power is not equally divided between the President and the Senate, since the President has an absolute veto. This lacuna should not be permitted to exist, for the reason that peace is usually reached by means of treaties, and it is unwise to leave to one man the power to continue a state of war against the will of the people and Congress.

"Congress can declare war with or without the President's consent, but it can not make peace by treaty without the President's consent. Surely if the Constitution makers found it desirable to empower Congress to overrule the President in making war, it would seem desirable that Congress should have power to overrule him in making peace by a treaty which he himself would have submitted."

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Ball	Harrison	Moses	Smith, Md.
Borah	Henderson	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Hitchcock	New	Smoot
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newberry	Spencer
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sterling
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Overman	Sutherland
Colt	Kenyon	Page	Thomas
Culberson	Keyes	Phelan	Trammell
Curtis	King	Phipps	Underwood
Dial	Kirby	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lenroot	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Lodge	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	McCormick	Sheppard	Warren
Gerry	McCumber	Sherman
Hale	McKellar	Simmons

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] are absent on official business.

I was also requested to announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are detained on official business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent on official business.

Mr. GERRY. The senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are absent on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] are detained on account of illness in their families.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1726) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. WALSH of Montana conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE LODGE RESERVATIONS.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in a letter from President Lowell to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], printed in the RECORD a few days ago, there was advanced a new conception of the significance or at least of the operation of article 10 of the covenant of the league of nations. I never heard it advanced upon the floor of the Senate, and I do not believe that it was ever before presented for our consideration. It is set out only in outline in the letter, but, as I gather the idea, it is that article 10 does not obligate the United States or any member of the league of nations to go immediately to the aid of any other member whose territory has been invaded. It is argued that the obligation does not arise until after the termination of a successful war, whereupon all the other nations of the earth, being members of the league, are obligated to see that neither the territorial integrity nor political independence of the defeated nation is disturbed. In other words, Mr. President, it is as was done in the case of the Berlin conference after the close of the Russo-Turkish War. Turkey had been overwhelmed and was at the mercy of Russia, but the European nations stepped in and prevented her from appropriating the Turkish territory, as she desired to do and she was in a situation to do.

To illustrate the application of this idea to a case which might easily arise, let us assume that things went from bad to worse between this country and Mexico and we deemed it necessary to go into Mexico for the protection of the rights of our citizens and to insure a stable government in that country. We publish to the world, as we did in the case of the Spanish-American War, that we have no purpose whatever to interfere with the political independence nor to disturb in any manner the territorial integrity of Mexico. We are simply going in to straighten out matters and then we shall retire. The argument is that under article 10 no nation would be justified immediately in making war upon us to restrain us from doing so, but after we had gone in and had reasonably met the purpose for which we did go in, the other nations of the world would then prevent us from appropriating any of the territory of Mexico or interfering with the political independence of that country.

The idea, Mr. President, was, in fact, elaborated in an article written by the Hon. George Rublee, which was published some time ago, as I am told, in The New Republic. He asserts that it is the idea of article 10 which was prevalent in Europe at the time the covenant was adopted and which still obtains there. If so, it is most important that in the further consideration of the subject this idea should be borne in mind by Senators. Accordingly I offer for the RECORD the article to which I have referred, and I ask that it may be printed therein.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LODGE RESERVATIONS.

"In some way or other the peace treaty will come again before the Senate, and there will be a final effort to secure ratification.

"Two things are clear. First, the sentiment of the country and even of the Senate is in favor of ratification; secondly, in the existing political situation the treaty can not be ratified without reservations. The present deadlock results from the inability of the 81 Senators who voted for ratification to agree upon the character of reservations which should be adopted.

"A speedy compromise and agreement is what the country wants. Perhaps it is too much to hope that the Senators will put aside the partisan ill will and passion which has governed their consideration of the treaty up to the present time. We must put our trust in public opinion to compel a settlement which is not determined by the irrelevant desire to humiliate and discredit President Wilson.

"Public opinion, however, needs information. It is confused by the dispute about the meaning and effect of the covenant of the league of nations. Eminent Republican politicians have declared that it creates a supergovernment which is authorized to command this country, if it joins, in disregard of the limitations of the Constitution. This is denied. But the arguments on both sides have been so general, have dealt so little with the specific provisions and necessary working of the covenant that the public is not in a position to judge as to the merits of the contradictory assertions. Americans want to be sure that they know exactly what they are promising to do. Hence there is substantial popular support for reservations which will make this unmistakably clear.

"It will be useful to recall the obligations relating to war contained in the covenant. These are four in number: (1) The agreement to submit disputes either to arbitration or to inquiry and not to resort to war until three months after the award by the arbitrators or the report by the council. (2) The agreement not to resort to war against a member of the league which complies with an award by arbitrators. It should be borne in mind that there is no obligation to submit disputes to arbitration. Only such disputes are to be arbitrated as the members recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration. But any dispute which is not submitted to arbitration must be submitted for investigation and report by the council. (3) The agreement not to go to war with any party to a dispute which complies with a report unanimously agreed to by the members of the council other than the representatives of the parties to the dispute. (4) The agreement to apply the economic boycott against any member of the league which resorts to war in disregard of any of the foregoing covenants. There is also the much-debated article 10, in which the members of the league undertake to respect and preserve, as against external aggression, the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. For reasons which will be given presently it seems clear that article 10 is not a promise to defend any member of the league against war by another State, but a promise to see that it shall not lose territory or political independence as a result of such a war.

"The covenant does not bind the members to employ military or naval force. In case of resort to war in violation of the agreements mentioned above it is the duty of the council to make recommendations as to the contribution of military or naval forces to be used to protect the covenants of the league. But the members do not agree to comply with the recommendations. Neither the council nor the assembly is authorized to bind members of the league to any course of action. They are empowered only to propose, advise, or recommend action. Each member of the league is free to decide whether it will adopt or reject the proposals, advice, or recommendations. In considering the covenant it is most important to keep this in mind.

"In the dispute over the provisions of the covenant the controversy is mainly as to whether they express the meaning which both sides agree that they ought to have. Everybody agrees that Congress must be free to exercise its constitutional powers in all cases, and especially to decide, in accordance with its judgment applied to the circumstances existing at the time, whether the army or navy shall be used. It is agreed that the Monroe doctrine should be outside of the sphere of action of the league, and that the league should not pass on domestic questions. Everybody agrees that the United States should be able to withdraw from the league on two years' notice and should decide for itself whether its international obligations and its obligations under the covenant have been fulfilled. Reservations covering these points are no longer opposed.

"The Lodge reservations, however, must be revised. Their tone is arrogant and offensive. Some of them make radical changes in the treaty which would upset the machinery for its execution, would be unacceptable to the other signatories, are not demanded by public opinion, and are not necessary for the protection of this country. Others should in substance be adopted because they make clear questions which either have been in dispute or do not touch a vital part of the treaty, and because a controversy which has cut so deep as this one can not be settled without compromise. But in their present form these reservations are so pervaded by latent hostility to the idea of cooperation among nations, by suspicion and selfish reluctance, that it is open to question whether our participation in the treaty on such a footing, even if accepted by the other nations, would be a benefit.

"The following analysis is an attempt to indicate the portions of the Lodge reservations which could be agreed to for the sake of securing ratification and to give reasons why the rest should be rejected.

"The preamble or first reservation is most objectionable. It requires the acceptance of the reservations by an exchange of notes by at least three of the four principal powers—Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan. This requirement is bad manners, because, if we ask any of the signatories for an express acceptance, we should ask all. It is embarrassing to the powers to whom we put the demand and would almost certainly lead to delay and confusion by the reopening of negotiations. It is unnecessary because omission to object to the reservations would operate as an acceptance.

"The second reservation concerning the right of withdrawal from the league is interpretative and should be adopted. It should be altered, however, by providing that the notice of withdrawal shall be given not by a concurrent resolution of Congress, but by a joint resolution, in order that the President may retain his constitutional veto power.

"The third reservation relates to article 10 of the covenant of the league of nations containing the undertaking to preserve, as against external aggression, the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. The reservation goes too far and should be modified. It refuses to assume any obligation under article 10, and by specific reference to the employment of military and naval forces it seems to imply that the only method of preserving the territorial integrity or political independence of a member of the league is by the use of armed force. Other methods are diplomatic action and economic pressure. Americans generally have a feeling of responsibility for the protection of the weaker nations which they have helped to liberate and set on their feet; and they would be willing to use diplomatic influence, or even economic pressure, for this purpose in cases where they might not be prepared to send American soldiers and sailors overseas to fight.

"The uneasiness over article 10 is due to the impression that it might require the United States to send troops to any part of the world to defend a member of the league against attack by another State. This is a mistake arising from failure to perceive the true function of article 10 in the covenant. It is not part of the machinery to prevent wars. That machinery is contained in articles 12, 13, 15, and 16. What article 10 secures is that wars which occur in spite of these other provisions shall not result in loss of territory or political independence by any member of the league. This becomes clear when one considers what would necessarily happen under the covenant in case of war.

"Let us suppose, for example, an attack by Roumania against Hungary without previous submission of the dispute to arbitration or to inquiry by the council. Under article 16 Roumania would ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league, each of which would be bound immediately to subject Roumania to the economic boycott. It would also be the duty of the council to recommend to the several Governments what effective military or naval forces the members of the league should severally contribute. The members of the league would further be bound mutually to support one another in the financial and economic measures taken, and to afford passage through their territory to the forces of the league. All this action of the league would take place under article 16 and not under article 10. In case the dispute had been submitted to arbitration, and Hungary had complied with the award of the arbitrators, if Roumania should then attack Hungary, the same results would follow. So also if the dispute had been submitted to inquiry, and Roumania should attack, notwithstanding the compliance of Hungary with the recommendations of a report unanimously agreed to by the members of the council.

"In none of the foregoing instances would there be recourse to article 10. Now, notice what would happen in case of an inquiry by the council if the report of the council were not unanimously agreed to. In that event the members of the league, under article 16, reserve to themselves the right to take such action as they shall consider necessary for the maintenance of right and justice. War between Roumania and Hungary would be permitted and the other members of the league would be free to go in or stay out. Such liberty of action is entirely inconsistent with the view that article 10 imposes an obligation to defend members of the league against attack. The covenant, however, by article 10 does not allow even a permitted war to result in impairment of territorial integrity or of political independence. It requires the members of the league to seek, through the agency of the council, to agree upon a course of action which will prevent such a result.

"The preceding exposition shows that article 10 has far less importance in its practical bearing than is generally supposed, and that in the actual working of the league it will seldom be invoked. Fears which have been aroused would be dispelled by an interpretative reservation declaring that the United States assumes no obligation to employ its military or naval forces or to use economic pressure to preserve the territorial integrity and existing political independence of any member of the league unless Congress so provides.

"The fourth reservation requiring the assent of Congress for the acceptance of any mandate by the United States is interpretative and should be accepted.

"The fifth reservation relating to domestic questions is objectionable both in substance and in form and should be revised. It not only reserves to the United States exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction but also declares that all political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs 'are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or the assembly, or any agency thereof, or to the decision or recommendation of any other power.' The wording, not to mention its prolixity and the defiant tone, is so broad as to enable the United States to withdraw from the jurisdiction of the league almost every dispute which it may have. We shall not have many disputes which we could not fairly claim to involve a political question relating in part to our internal affairs. Among the examples given of the questions so reserved are commerce, which, if of an international character, is certainly not a domestic question, and the suppression of traffic in women and children and in opium and other dangerous drugs. Senator LODGE wants to forbid the agencies of the league to recommend to the United States cooperation in a world-wide plan for the suppression of traffic in women and children, in opium, or other dangerous drugs. This is absurd. The covenant makes the rules of international law the test of whether a question is domestic. If the Senate will not trust the council of the league to apply international law correctly, it ought at least to indicate a standard according to which the United States will decide. The reservation should go no further than to withdraw from the sphere of action of the league questions which the United States decides are, by international law, solely within its domestic jurisdiction.

"The sixth reservation is interpretative and, in substance, should be accepted. It is verbose and unduly self-important, and by its tone is likely to offend South American countries. No reason is apparent why a simple statement that the United States understands and declares that the Monroe doctrine is not within the sphere of action of the league would not answer the purpose.

"It is not necessary to declare that the United States will not submit domestic questions or the Monroe doctrine to arbitration, because, as pointed out above, the members of the league are bound to submit to arbitration only such disputes as they recognize to be suitable for arbitration. The horror with which Republican Senators regard the possibility that the council may assume to investigate and report on disputes involving an American domestic question or the Monroe doctrine evidences an extraordinary change of view with regard to national policy. It is not as generally known as it should be that in 1914, on the initiative of Secretary of State Bryan, the United States made treaties for the advancement of peace with nearly a score of States, including Great Britain, France, and Italy. All these treaties provide that disputes of every nature whatsoever shall, when diplomatic methods of adjustment have failed, be referred for investigation and report to a permanent international commission, and that the parties shall not declare war or begin hostilities during such investigation and before the report is submitted. A year is allowed for the international commission to complete its investigation and report. The Senate ratified all these treaties without opposition. They are now in force and are part of the supreme law of the land. Domestic questions and the Monroe doctrine are not excluded from their operation. The United States is, therefore, bound to submit for investigation and report by a body of which a majority are not to be American citizens any dispute over a domestic question or the Monroe doctrine that we may have with Great Britain, France, Italy, or the other countries which are parties to the Bryan treaties. The Bryan treaties are mentioned only to show the unreality of the issues which Senator LODGE has raised.

"The seventh reservation withholds the assent of the United States to the articles of the treaty relating to Shantung. American opinion regards the transfer of German rights in Shantung to Japan as one of the chief wrongs of the treaty. On the other hand, the country is not prepared to oust Japan by force. The general feeling is that if this reservation would make it impossible for the other powers to accept our ratification it should be dropped. Much, therefore, depends upon the knowledge which the administration must have regarding the attitude of the other powers. If the reservation is not fatal, its adoption might go a long way toward securing a satisfactory compromise in other respects.

"The eighth reservation ought to have much more careful examination than it has received and should be modified. It retains in Congress complete control over the extent of the participation of the United States in the commissions and other international bodies created to carry out the peace treaty and over the appointment of Americans on these bodies and on the committees of the league of nations, and it empowers Congress to define their powers and duties. There are very serious objections to these provisions. It is proper for Congress to provide by law for the appointment of the representatives of the United States in the assembly and the council of the league, and possibly of the American representatives on the international bodies which are to carry out the peace treaty. But it is not right to leave to the future discretion of Congress the decision as to whether the United States will participate at all in the bodies which are to execute the treaty and those which are to act for the league of nations. This is work which can not wait, and the other nations are entitled to know at once whether America is to cooperate with them or not. Congress also should not define the powers and duties of the American representatives. Their powers and duties are defined by the treaty. If the American representatives were governed by a different law prescribing different duties from those of their colleagues, the resulting confusion might render their presence more embarrassing than useful. Finally, the reservation might be construed so as to require appointments to the staff of the secretariat of the league to be approved by the Senate. This, at least, should be changed. The staff of the secretariat will have no political duties. They will represent, not the countries of which they are citizens, but the league of nations. They will be experts in international law, economics, finance, geography, etc. Their duty will be to gather and make available information for the use of the council and the assembly. The covenant provides that the secretaries and the staff of the secretariat shall be appointed by the secretary general (Sir Eric Drummond), with the approval of the council. Experts who serve the United States Government are appointed by the heads of departments without the approval of the Senate. The Senate should leave the selection of American experts for the secretariat to the secretary general and the council, who will know best the requirements of the work.

"The ninth reservation declares the understanding of the United States to be that the reparation commission will regulate or interfere with exports from the United States to Germany or from Germany to the United States only when Congress has approved. The clearest feature of this provision is that it is self-regarding. The reparation commission has no express power to regulate imports and exports to and from Germany. But as Germany agrees to effectuate its findings, the meaning of the reservation probably is that the reparation commission is not to adopt, without the approval of Congress, any finding which would require German legislation affecting trade with the United States. This would be a cumbrous method of working, which might make serious trouble. The reservation should not be accepted unless it must be to secure ratification.

"The tenth reservation provides that the United States shall not be obligated to contribute any expenses incurred under the treaty until an appropriation therefor shall have been made by Congress. Of all the reservations, this is perhaps the pettiest and most humiliating for this country. The richest nation, the one least damaged by the war, is the only one to haggle about the expense of carrying out the treaty. If this reservation is not rejected entirely, as it should be, at least the secretariat of the league of nations should be excepted from its operation. The covenant provides that the expense of the secretariat shall be borne by the members of the league in accordance with the apportionment of the expenses of the International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union, of which the United States is a member. Under this scheme each member pays a fixed proportion of the total expense. If, however, the United States enters into no agreement and will contribute only what Congress chooses to appropriate, the plans of the secretariat can not be settled until Congress has made its appropriation. By niggardly appropriations Congress, which can not judge intelligently what the work of the secretariat should be, could cripple this agency, upon which the council and assembly must depend for information and expert advice.

"The eleventh reservation concerning the reduction of armaments should not be accepted. Article 8 of the covenant charges the council with the duty of formulating plans for the reduction of national armaments for the consideration of the several Governments, and provides that after these plans shall have been adopted, limits of armaments therein fixed shall not be exceeded without the concurrence of the council. Senator LODGE proposes to reserve the right to increase the armaments without the consent of the council whenever the United States is threatened with invasion or engaged in war. The United States is less exposed than any other of the great nations to the danger of invasion or attack. Reduction of armaments, the surest safeguard against war, is possibly the greatest present need of the world. The continuance of competition in armaments will put an intolerable burden on every people, would perpetuate militarism, and would certainly lead again to war. The only hope of getting reduction lies in a general agreement binding on all nations alike. Let us do nothing now to lessen the chance of such an agreement. This reservation is not necessary for our protection. The members of the league are not bound to adopt the plans which the council will formulate. When these plans are presented we shall know more about the value of the league than we do now. If it should then be deemed necessary, we can require the covenant to be amended as a condition of our adoption of the plan.

"The twelfth reservation providing that Congress may permit the nationals of a covenant-breaking state residing in the United States to continue their relations with the nationals of the United States is harmless. Probably it expresses the interpretation which would be given to the covenant; in any case the departure from its terms is negligible.

"The thirteenth reservation relates to the system created by the treaty for the payment of prewar debts and for the adjustment of the proceeds of enemy property. It is vaguely worded and its application is not clear, but as it relates to matters of minor importance, and as any power may decline to participate in the system by giving six months' notice, it can be accepted for the sake of securing an agreement to ratify.

"For the same reason the fourteenth reservation concerning the international labor organization can be accepted. It withholds the assent of the United States to the provisions creating the international labor organization unless Congress shall hereafter make provision for representation therein. This organization is only authorized to make recommendations for legislation, which may be rejected, and to collect and distribute information on labor, so that it is hard to understand the reason for refusing to accept the provisions of the treaty. The adoption of the reservations would doubtless deeply disappoint the best elements of American labor. But after the Senate has enjoyed the satisfaction of showing its power, labor will probably be able to bring to bear sufficient influence to induce Congress to provide for American representation on satisfactory terms.

"The fifteenth reservation relates to the six votes in the assembly of the league of the British Empire and its self-governing dominions. The latter part, providing in substance that in case of any dispute between the United States and any part of the British Empire, none of the six votes shall be cast, is interpretative and should be adopted. But the first part, providing that the United States 'assumes no obligation to be bound by any election, decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in which any members of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire in the aggregate have cast more than one vote,' should be rejected.

"In the first place, the self-governing dominions would not permit Great Britain to accept this provision. They rightfully feel that they have earned a voice in the league, and would regard the attempt to exclude them as an affront. In the second place, the provision is not necessary for our protection.

The whole outcry against the six votes is based upon a misconstruction of the covenant, which has misled many who are unfamiliar with its provisions, and which on the part of its leading opponents seems willful.

"Let us first consider the council, where the British Empire now has but one vote. It can not secure another without the consent of the American representative. The assembly may from time to time select the temporary members of the council, but it can do so only by unanimous agreement. The council, with the approval of a majority of the assembly, may name additional members of the league, whose representatives shall always be members of the council. But the council must be unanimous. It is therefore not possible for a self-governing dominion, colony, or part of the British Empire to have representation on the council unless the American representative assents.

"Now, as to the assembly: Except in regard to matters of procedure, the assembly can not make a decision, report, or finding without the concurrence of the representatives of the members of the league represented on the council. The United States has exactly the same protection against any unfavorable action by the assembly as it would have if the matter were before the council instead of the assembly. It is true that a new member may be admitted to the league by two-thirds of the assembly. In elections (but in no other case) the six votes confer unequal power. But has America anything to fear from the election of new members? The American view is that the league should embrace all civilized nations.

"The unreality of the objection to the six votes is seen when one recalls that Cuba, Haiti, Guatemala, Nicarâgua, and Panama will be members of the league, and that in fact it is likely that the United States will have more influence over the votes of these States than Great Britain will be able to exercise over the votes of Australia, Canada, and the other dominions.

"The covenant of the league is not perfect. Nobody contends that it is. But if we do not take it and use it in the trust that custom and experience will enable the world to so develop it so that in time there may be a saner management of international relationships, what is the alternative? The alternative is the 'balance of power' breaking down inevitably in disaster, in which, as recent experience proves, the United States will share."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 11368) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution extending the time until March 1, 1920, within which the joint special committee shall report relative to the participation of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDGE, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 134) to readmit Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten to the status and privileges of a citizen of the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. LENROOT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2956) to amend sections 4874 and 4875 of the Revised Statutes, and to provide a compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 371) thereon.

WITNESS FEES IN FEDERAL COURTS.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3681) to amend section 848, chapter 16, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to witness fees. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by him. Is there any objection?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if no objection is made to the present consideration of the bill, I shall not take up the time of the Senate in making a statement in reference to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator from Minnesota state the purpose of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I will state the purpose of the bill. Under existing law witnesses in United States courts are only entitled to a dollar and a half a day for attending court and 5 cents per mile in going and coming. Under present conditions it is exceedingly difficult to get witnesses to attend; they avoid doing so because it costs them much more than a dollar and a half a day for their board. They oftentimes have to pay as much as a dollar and a half for a single meal. The bill proposes to increase the payment for the attendance of such witnesses to $3 a day, the same as is paid in the case of jurors. That is the only change of existing law proposed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota permit an inquiry?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is there any time limitation in the bill or is it proposed to be a perpetual policy, so far as this Congress may enforce a perpetual policy?

Mr. NELSON. If the bill is passed, it becomes the law in reference to the fees of such witnesses.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that the Senator from Minnesota assigns as a reason for the passage of the measure the high prices now existing, would it not be proper to fix a time limit in the bill?

Mr. NELSON. I do not think under ordinary conditions $3 a day is too high for witness fees. We have been paying jurymen that sum, and I do not know why a witness should not have that much per diem for attendance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Minnesota will permit me, I think I can throw some light on this subject. I introduced this bill at the instance of the officials of the Federal court in Nebraska. The States west of Nebraska are operating under a statute which enables them to pay $3 a day for witnesses while the courts in States east of Montana are only permitted to pay $1.50 a day. That statute was enacted, I think, in 1856, very many years ago, when the dollar had an entirely different value from what it now has and when expenses were very much less. Jurors are now paid $3 a day for attendance. If a man is called as a juror in the same court he gets $3 a day, while the witness called in the same case only gets $1.50.

The experience of the Federal courts—at least that is true in my section of the country—is that it is a hardship for witnesses to attend court. The result is that when men ascertain the fact of this hardship, as they do from those who have had experience, they often suppress the fact that they have information which might make them witnesses. It is a serious hardship to bring a man, as is sometimes done, a hundred miles to a court in Omaha or in Lincoln, keep him there for a number of days, and only allow him $1.50 a day, when his actual cost of living during that time at some of the hotels is several times that amount.

The Federal officials are asking for this legislation; it is not being asked for by any class of individuals, for witnesses, necessarily, come from all classes of people and from various classes of people at different times. However, the Federal officials in order to promote court proceedings are asking that the old law, which was enacted more than two generations ago, be so changed as to make it less of a hardship for witnesses to attend court when called there. I believe the bill is an important measure and should be passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 848 of chapter 16, Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended by striking out the words "one dollar and fifty cents" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "three dollars," so the same shall read:

"For each day's attendance in court, or before any officer, pursuant to law, $3, and 5 cents a mile for going from his place of residence to the place of trial or hearing, and 5 cents a mile for returning. When a witness is subpœnaed in more than one cause between the same parties, at the same court, only one travel fee and one per diem compensation shall be allowed for attendance. Both shall be taxed in the case first disposed of, after which the per diem attendance fee alone shall be taxed in the other cases in the order in which they are disposed of.

"When a witness is detained in prison for want of security for his appearance he shall be entitled, in addition to this subsistence, to a compensation of $1 a day."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURT AT LAURINBURG, N. C.

Mr. OVERMAN. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (S. 3696) to change the time for holding court in Laurinburg, eastern district of North Carolina, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. The bill only affects the time of holding a district court in my State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act establishing terms of the district court in the city of Laurinburg, N. C., on the last Monday in September and March be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That terms of the district court for the eastern district of North Carolina shall hereafter be held in the city of Laurinburg on Monday before the last Monday in March and September instead of on the last Monday in September and March, as provided for in the original bill creating the terms of court at Laurinburg."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LITERACY TEST OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. STERLING. In the absence of the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3566) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," approved February 5, 1917. I call the attention of the Senator from New York to the bill.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from South Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," approved February 5, 1917, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Provided further, That an alien who can not read may, if otherwise admissible, be admitted if, within five years after this act becomes law, a citizen of the United States who has served in the military or naval forces of the United States during the war with the Imperial German Government requests that such alien be admitted, and, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, marries such alien at a United States immigration station."

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to permit an alien who proposes to marry an honorably discharged soldier of the United States to come here and marry that soldier, provided the alien can pass every test save only the literacy test. I have been prompted to introduce the bill by the fact that a soldier of Italian birth who had lived in this country for 10 years, who fought in our Army in Europe and was wounded, went back to visit his own home in Italy, returned to America, where he was discharged, and then sent back to Italy for the girl he proposed to marry. She arrived here and passed every test save the literacy test, but she can not under the law be allowed to enter this country to marry him, and must accordingly go back to Italy. He can go back to Italy on the same ship with her and marry her there and bring her back to this country on the next ship. We have passed here several bills permitting the restoration of citizenship to American women who have married German noblemen, and it seems to me we ought to permit the literacy test to be waived in cases such as I have outlined.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall not object to the bill, but I think the title should be amended so as to read, "A bill to encourage matrimony abroad."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand the only difference between the law after this bill passes, if it does pass, and the law now is that the marriage may take place here instead of in Italy?

Mr. CALDER. Yes; rather than to require an American soldier to go back to Italy.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, if the American soldier should return to Italy he would be permitted to marry the woman and bring her here notwithstanding the fact that she is unable to pass the test?

Mr. CALDER. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. I certainly do not desire to enforce that kind of a trip in these hard times.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL BUILDING AT ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. SPENCER. I am authorized by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 484) to provide for the erection of a Federal office building on the site acquired for the Subtreasury in St. Louis, Mo., and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in carrying out that provision in the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stats., p. 886), which authorized the construction of a building for the United States Subtreasury and other governmental offices in St. Louis, Mo., upon the site theretofore acquired for that purpose, the Secretary of the Treasury may have said building so constructed as to omit accommodations for the Subtreasury.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the Senator from Missouri, if it will not disturb the harmony of passing these bills quickly? Does the bill require an additional appropriation?

Mr. SPENCER. It does not. I was about to make a statement concerning it. Congress in 1910 authorized the purchase of a tract of land, which has been bought and paid for. In 1913 Congress authorized the erection of a building and an appropriation was made. The Secretary of the Treasury has come to the conclusion that in the construction of that building he can do without the use of that building for the Subtreasury, and he desires the authority of Congress in erecting the building to eliminate the provision for the Subtreasury. That is all that this bill, which has passed the House, proposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 3697) for the relief of Archie B. and Gladys B. Darling (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3698) conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim of the owners of the derrick Century against the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 3699) to amend section 177 of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3700) authorizing and directing the Secretary of State to examine and settle the claim of the Wales Island Packing Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3701) granting an increase of pension to Minerva C. McMillan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 3702) to regulate the issuance of stock by corporations engaged in interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. GERRY:

A bill (S. 3703) granting an increase of pension to Edward S. Stimpson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 3704) granting a pension to Amanda M. Chase (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3705) for the relief of George W. Stinebaker; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. WALSH of Montana submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I present a number of amendments to House bill 3184, the so-called water-power bill, which I should like to have printed and lie on the table to be called up at the appropriate time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WALSH of Montana submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the construction and improvement of the road through the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in Montana, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the construction of a bridge across Two Medicine Creek, on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in Montana, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILROADS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during the debate a few days ago on the Cummins railroad bill the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] put into the RECORD some statements in regard to the railroad land grants. It is claimed by Mr. Baldwin, who has written to me, and who had a great deal to do with the railroad grants, that the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Oregon was inaccurate and did a grave injustice to those who were connected with the grants. He has sent me a statement and asked that, in justice, it be inserted in the RECORD. I have submitted it to the Senator from Oregon, and he has consented that it go in the RECORD. I think that it should be submitted and placed in the RECORD as a reply to the statement made by the Senator from Oregon, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the statement referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"The remarks of Senator CHAMBERLAIN, of Oregon, in the Senate on Friday, December 19, 1919, contain so many mistakes of fact and so many half truths that they do not correctly represent the subject of land grants to railroads. The Senator himself is probably an unconscious victim of this misrepresentation, because his speech consists largely of quotations from a publication called 'Encyclopedia of American Government.'

"The most casual reading of this encyclopedia article will show that it was hastily and carelessly compiled and that, so far as the Government land grants are concerned, it entirely omits consideration of the essential features. These features are the conditions and circumstances which led to the making of these land grants.

"What were the lands worth; that is, what value did the Government part with, and what exactions did the Government make from the companies to whom the grants were made?

"The first important Government land grant in aid of the construction of railroads was in 1850, which was a grant of 2,500,000 acres in Illinois to aid in the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad. The father of this measure was Stephen A. Douglas. Prior to 1850 there were no Government land grants, and a reading of the encyclopedia article quoted by Senator CHAMBERLAIN will show how insignificant were the money contributions prior to 1850. The fact is that in almost every case the States either owned the roads or were financially interested in them. The State of Michigan, for instance, built and owned the Michigan Central road from Detroit to Kalamazoo, which it operated for years at a loss and sold in 1846 for a small consideration. The land-grant policy of aid to railroads began in 1850 with the Illinois Central grant.

"If Senator CHAMBERLAIN had had an opportunity to read the debates in the Senate when these land grants were made, instead of inserting into the RECORD a mass of statements from an encyclopedia, he would have learned the conditions which existed in 1850, the motives and reasons which inspired the Senators of that day to vote these land grants, the values which the Government parted with, and the valuable financial reservations that were inserted as conditions of the grants, and the wisdom of the policy.

"The following are extracts from speeches of Henry Clay, Thomas H. Benton, and Stephen A. Douglas in the Senate upon the subject of the Illinois land grant which throw an illuminating light upon this whole subject and are typical of all the speeches made on the subject:

"'Mr. DOUGLAS. It is simply carrying out a principle which has been acted upon for 30 years, by which you cede each alternate section of land and double the price of the alternate sections not ceded, so that the same price is received for the whole. These lands have been in the market for 15 to 30 years; the average time is about 23 years; but they will not sell at the usual price of $1.25 per acre, because they are distant from any navigable stream or a market for produce. A railroad will make the lands salable at double the usual price, because the improvement made will make them valuable.'

"'HENRY CLAY. With respect to the State of Illinois—and I believe the same is true to a considerable extent with reference to Mississippi and Alabama, but I happen to know something personally of the interior of the State of Illinois—that portion of the State through which this road will run is a succession of prairies, the principal of which is denominated the "Grand Prairie." I do not recollect its exact length; it is, I believe, about 300 miles in length and but 100 in breadth. Now, this road will pass directly through that Grand Prairie lengthwise, and there is nobody who knows anything of that Grand Prairie who does not know that the land is utterly worthless for any present purpose—not because it is not fertile but for want of wood and water and from the fact that it is inaccessible, wanting all facilities for reaching a market or for transporting timber, so that nobody will go there and settle while it is so destitute of all the advantages of society and the conveniences which arise from a social state. And now, by constructing this road through the prairie, through the center of the State of Illinois, you bring millions of acres of land immediately into the market, which will otherwise remain for years and years entirely unsalable.'

"'THOMAS H. BENTON. From the consideration which I gave to that subject at that early day, it appeared to me that it was a beneficial disposition for the United States to make of her refuse lands, to cede them to the States in which they lay. Lands which had been 20 or 25 years in the market at the minimum price, and had never found a purchaser up to that time, were classed as refuse, and it was deemed that the State, as a local authority, might be able to make some disposition of them, which the General Government, without machinery of land offices, could not. The principle of the bill before the Senate is to take the refuse lands and appropriate them to a great object of internal improvement, which, although it has its locality in a particular State, produces advantages which we all know spread far and wide, for a good road can not be made anywhere without being beneficial to the whole United States.

"'But, Mr. President, with respect to the general proposition, this application rests upon a principle that young States are made desolate, in a great degree, by having lands in their midst that pay no taxes, undergo no cultivation, that are held at a price that nobody will pay, and which, in fact, in some parts of the country become jungles for the protection of wild beasts that prey upon the flocks and herds of the farmers.'

"Why did not Senator CHAMBERLAIN examine the record of these debates? Why did he not inquire and state what the railroad companies were compelled to give back in return for what the Government granted to them?

THE ILLINOIS CENTRAL GRANT.

"Because it was the first of these Government land grants and embraced the most valuable lands covered by any grant of agricultural land a correct knowledge of its value will throw light upon the whole subject.

"The first point to consider is what were these lands worth in 1850; what did the Government give to secure the construction of the Illinois Central road? What value did the Government part with?

"This all-important inquiry is ignored by Senator CHAMBERLAIN. The reason for its importance has been well put by Prof. Allen, of the University of Chicago, as follows:

"'In determining the principle represented by the lands we must take account of the actual value of the lands in 1851. The values which the railroad company was to receive for the lands were not foreseen, and the State could justly claim compensation only for the values it surrendered. The lands had been offered by the General Government at $1.25 per acre without finding buyers, but as soon as the lands were granted to the railroad company the minimum price for Government as well as railroad lands became $2.50. More than this they were sure to bring, but only in case the private corporation bring in the road to develop them.'

"What contribution, then, did the Government make toward the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad?

"Senator Douglas and all the other Senators state clearly what was the value of these lands. They had been in the open market for sale for 25 years with no purchasers. The promoters of the road, who took the risk of the venture, could have bought this land with no strings to it, no restrictions whatever, at $1.25 per acre. The grant was for 2,500,000 acres, so that the outside estimate of what the Government contributed was $3,100,000.

"The officials of the road could have bought the land for $3,100,000.

"But that is far more than the Government parted with, because not only did the building of the road enable the Government to immediately raise the price of all its adjoining lands from $1.25 to $2.50 per acre, as Senator Douglas explains, but it gave them a market for land which, without the railroad, was not salable at any price.

"Senator CHAMBERLAIN in his speech was inconsistent in his attitude toward the railroad companies in this matter of the value of their land grants. In one sentence he denounces them for not holding the lands for higher prices and in another denounces them for refusing to sell to settlers at low prices. He says, 'If the lands had been husbanded as carefully as they ought to have been, these grants ought to have built the roads,' but in the very next sentence he bitterly denounces an Oregon railroad company for refusing to sell lands which he describes as 'magnificent' and 'covered with the finest timber in the world,' at $2.50 per acre. In one breath he condemns them because they sold the lands at low prices and in the next breath condemns them for refusing to sell at low prices.

"The Illinois Central grant, as stated, had a possible market value of $3,100,000. That is an outside estimate of what value the Government parted with as a contribution toward the building of a railroad through a region which Henry Clay described as 'utterly worthless for any present purpose' and Thomas H. Benton referred to as 'jungles for the protection of wild beasts that prey upon the flocks and herds of the farmers.'

"But what has the Government and the State of Illinois taken from the Illinois Central Co. and its owners in consideration of that land grant worth $3,100,000? It has already taken more than $21,000,000 in money and continues to take at the rate of hundreds of thousands of dollars every year.

"Senator CHAMBERLAIN protested, 'I am not inimical to railroads; I am friendly to them.' Why, then, did he not acquaint the Senate with something of the other side of the story? Why did he not mention what the railroad companies have been forced to pay for these land grants?

"The acts of Congress granting the lands contained provisions which, in some cases, have compelled the companies to pay out in money more than the lands were worth, and the various States to which grants were made in trust for specified companies added other costly conditions.

"Two of the clauses that have proved most expensive to the railroads are as follows:

"In 1876 Congressman Holman, of Indiana, caused to be inserted in the appropriation bill the following clause:

"'Railroad companies whose railroads were constructed in whole or in part by a land grant made by Congress, on the condition that the mails should be transported over their roads at such price as Congress should by law direct, shall receive only 80 per cent of the compensation otherwise authorized by this section.'

"Another provision that was in all the grants reads as follows:

"'The railroad accepting such grant shall be free from toll or other charge upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States.'

"In addition to the mail pay deductions and the stipulation for transportation of property and troops of the United States, the State of Illinois inserted in the Illinois Central grant a clause under which that company must pay in perpetuity 7 per cent of the gross earnings of these charter lines into the State treasury in lieu of general taxes, which would be approximately 3 to 3½ per cent. Under the Federal valuation law proceedings these figures are obliged to be correctly stated, and the following is an official statement of these items as of the valuation date of June 30, 1915:

Excess State tax on operating revenues	$16,499,995.00
Mail pay deductions	1,569,292.37
Freight deductions	448,327.70
Deductions for handling troops, munitions of war, etc.	2,630,643.24
	21,148,258.31

"There is no doubting the significance of these figures. They are typical of the greater part of all the land grants.

"The value of the Illinois Central grant was $3,100,000, and up to June 30, 1915, it had cost the company in cash $21,148,258, and these charges against its revenues are to continue forever. Any business man would say that the Illinois Central would be in better shape financially to-day if, instead of accepting this land grant, it had borrowed the money and bought this $3,100,000 worth of land outright and owned it free from restrictions.

"Concerning one important feature of the situation Senator CHAMBERLAIN in his speech makes a most unfortunate misstatement. He says that the grants provided that the roads would carry Government troops and property and munitions of war free. They did not contain any such provision. The clause referred to reserved to the Government the right to use the railroad the same as it could use any other highway, but did not require the companies to hire employees and buy coal and provide cars for the free use of the Government. As the Senator states, this question was submitted to the Supreme Court, which only allowed 50 per cent as the necessary operating charge. It is now over 80 per cent.

"Because of this Supreme Court decision Senator CHAMBERLAIN denounces the railroads. He says: 'The railroad companies did not carry out their agreement, but repudiated the contract solemnly entered into.'

"They did carry out their agreement, and they did not repudiate their contract. The Senator from Oregon seems willing to ignore the decision of the Supreme Court in favor of the companies upon a question that was open to reasonable doubt, and to characterize the acceptance by the roads of that decision as a repudiation of contract, and yet claims to be fair-minded! He offers that decision of the Supreme Court, which was rendered 43 years ago, as a reason why he now opposes return of these properties to their owners.

THE IOWA LAND GRANTS.

"Next in agricultural value to the Illinois lands were the grants to the State of Iowa in 1856 in trust for four named companies, namely, the Burlington & Missouri River (now Chicago, Burlington & Quincy), the Mississippi & Missouri (now Rock Island), the Cedar Rapids & Missouri River (now Chicago & North Western), and the Dubuque & Sioux City (now Illinois Central).

"The table which the Senator from Oregon inserts in his remarks is not a correct statement of the acreage received by the companies. In the case of the Burlington road his table states the acreage as 389,990 acres, when, in fact, it was 358,424 acres, a discrepancy of nearly 10 per cent. The explanation is this:

"The grants were of the odd-numbered sections within 6 miles of the line of road as definitely located, with indemnity for shortages to be selected within 15 miles, but could only apply to the 'public lands' within the designated limits. No land to which any title or even a 'claim of right' in any other person existed at the date when the grant took effect was 'public' land, and therefore no such land passed to the railroad company. In the older Western States (Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri) a large part of the lands had been 'entered' or filed upon or settled under military bounty land warrants or under preemption certificates, so that, although by the general terms of the act the 'grant' to the Burlington road in Iowa was over 900,000 acres, it was never able to get over 358,400 acres. In many cases also where lands were actually patented to railroad companies they afterwards lost them through conflicts with prior Mexican grants, swamp-land grants, Indian and military reservations, and other deductions.

"Similar conditions as to value of lands and deductions made by the Government in consideration of the grants prevailed in Iowa as in Illinois, and in some cases in a more marked degree.

"Take as an illustration the case of the Burlington grant, with which I am personally familiar. That company received 358,424 acres in Iowa, which had been in the market for many years at $1.25 an acre, with no buyers. Speculators would not buy these lands because they could not be sold at a profit. Money in that country commanded 10 per cent, and in many cases as high as 1 per cent a month. To the speculator it was more profitable to lend his money than to buy land from the Government at $1.25 an acre. Settlers would not buy the land even under the very liberal provision of the preemption laws, because there was no market for their products. Instances were numerous in western Iowa of land selling at 70 cents an acre which had been entered at $1.25, because purchasers could not then make a living on the land. That same land now sells for $200 an acre, because New England capital built a railroad for them. Who received the chief profit in that case? The landowner and not the owners of the railroad. For years after the Burlington road was built its stock, which had been paid for at par, sold at 15 cents on the dollar and its 10 per cent bonds sold much below par, although it owned these lands as well as the railroad. The owners of the Burlington road could have taken $450,000 in money and bought every acre of that Iowa land grant. But how much money has the Government compelled it to pay back as the price of that grant? Up to the 1st day of October, 1916, the company had paid to the Government $2,209,000 as the 20 per cent deduction from its mail pay, pursuant to the Holman law of 1876. Exact figures are not available since October, 1916, when the so-called 'space basis' for carrying the mails was inaugurated, but this exaction is going on year after year! Hundreds of thousands of dollars are now being paid every year by these land-grant roads out of their mail pay because of the 'gift' which Congress presented to them in 1856.

"In the case of the Burlington Co. in the State of Iowa it has repaid to the Government in cash by these mail-pay deductions alone more than five times the full money value which the Government parted with in making the Iowa land grant.

"Besides this, in carrying the train loads of troops and munitions of war and Government property across the State of Iowa, during the 50 years since the road was completed from Burlington to Omaha, at half the lawful tariff rates that company has repaid several times over the value of every acre of land that was granted to it.

"There is another side to this particular feature that is often overlooked. Other railroads have been built across Iowa since the land-grant period, such as the Milwaukee & St. Paul and Great Western, which are, technically, not subject to the 50 per cent reductions in tariff, but, being in land-grant territory, the Government authorities force them to also make the cut rate as a condition of giving them any business. The result is a 50 per cent tariff throughout this whole region, whether the road received a land grant or not. It is common practice for the Government to enforce this 50 per cent reduction from the tariff along the entire line of a transcontinental road which has no land grant, such as the Rio Grande and Western Pacific, solely because the Northern Pacific had a land grant for its entire length!

"The discrimination thus forced upon western roads by the Government in both mail pay and traffic generally, in comparison with great eastern lines, like the New York Central and the Pennsylvania and New Haven, which had no 'gift' of lands, is a severe and costly discrimination, to which the Senator from Oregon might well have called attention in discussing the railroad land grants.

THE NEBRASKA GRANTS.

"In the case of the large grant made to the Burlington road in Nebraska the company sold thousands of acres of these lands at 25 cents per acre, but at the date of the grant it is extremely doubtful whether the entire grant could have been disposed of at $1 per acre, since the United States Government had probably not sold an acre of its land adjoining the lands covered by this grant at its standard price of $1.25 per acre, while at the same time many persons by the purchase of land scrip acquired title to some of the choicest Nebraska lands, more favorably located than one-half or more of this grant, at a cost of less than $1 per acre. In many counties wherein these lands are located no homesteads—at a total expense of $14 for 160 acres—were located until long after the date of this grant, and many of these counties were not "organized" until 1871 to 1873, years after the date of this grant.

THE NORTHERN PACIFIC GRANT.

"The Northern Pacific Railway was not completed until 20 years after its land grant was made, and since then it has gone through bankruptcy twice, notwithstanding its ownership of these lands and of its railroad. How much good did the original stockholders to whom the lands were given realize from the gift? And the same inquiry is pertinent as to the Union Pacific land grant and the grants made to the Rock Island, the Santa Fe, and other western roads that have been foreclosed. Prior to the actual construction of the Northern Pacific the settlement and development of the country was insignificant. There were no dwellings, much less towns, except in the vicinity of Army posts and mining camps and a small community on Puget Sound. The whole country, excepting Indian and military reservations, was open to homestead and other entry under the public-land laws, and the maximum charge by the United States for agricultural lands entered prior to the definite location of the road was $1.25 per acre. Generally speaking, the Indians were occupying the territory to the exclusion of others. Practically all the value the lands now have has resulted from the construction of the road.

"Seven-eighths of all the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railway have now been sold, and the net receipts and uncollected deferred payments have produced for the company an average of $2.89 per acre, as officially reported.

THE UNION PACIFIC GRANT.

"Under date of November 11, 1919, the land commissioner of the Union Pacific Railway made the following estimate of the value of the lands covered by their grants at the time of the grants, namely:

"In Nebraska and Kansas, $1 an acre.

"In Colorado, 50 cents an acre.

"In Wyoming and Utah, 25 cents an acre.

SOUTHERN GRANTS.

"The table which the Senator from Oregon caused to be inserted in the RECORD shows railroad grants of acreage in Southern States as follows:

	Acres.
Mississippi	1,075,345
Alabama	2,746,560
Florida	2,216,980
Arkansas	2,562,095
Missouri	1,837,968

"Hon. E. B. Stahlman, of Nashville, before a congressional committee, when resisting an attempt to still further reduce the mail pay of the land-grant roads, stated under oath:

"'The land granted in Alabama consisted of hills and mountains not susceptible of cultivation. The Florida lands were sand hills thinly covered with small pine of little value. Of these the best have been sold at 70 cents per acre. The companies can not realize 25 cents per acre on what remains unsold. When the grants were made, their value could not have exceeded 12½ cents per acre. Lands of greater value were sold all through Florida and Alabama for that price.'

"Hon. W. A. McRae, now commissioner of agriculture for the State of Florida, wrote from Tallahassee under date of November 21, 1919:

"'It would be fair to assume that the bulk of the lands granted to Florida railroads brought them less than $1.25 per acre.'

"When account is taken of the taxes paid and commissions, advertising, and other costs of selling, Mr. Stahlman's estimate that the value which the Government contributed toward the construction of these southern roads did not exceed 12½ cents an acre does not seem far out of the way.

"The grant to the St. Louis & San Francisco Co. was for 1,668,000 acres in Missouri, and concerning its value the land commissioner says: 'Fifty per cent of this grant was wholly worthless; 30 per cent was fair, and similar lands sold for 25 cents per acre; the remaining 20 per cent were worth $1 per acre.'

"Concerning the Atlantic & Pacific grant, the vice president of that company says: 'The company sold 3,500,000 acres at 75 cents per acre, 1,058,560 acres at 50 cents per acre to a cattle company, and 259,000 acres at 70 cents per acre, an average of 87 cents per acre, or $4,670,000. The taxes and expense of selling the lands to date have been $622,000, the mail pay deductions $430,000, and large deductions on account of transportation of troops and munitions of war. The company would be glad to sell all the land it now owns or will receive at 25 cents per acre. There is no demand for it, and the truth is it can not be sold for any sum.'

TEXAS GRANTS.

"More lands, by far, were granted by the State of Texas to aid in the construction of railroads than by any other State, mainly because they had more to give.

"What was the value of these lands according to the views of Texans who are qualified to speak?

"Two of the largest grants in Texas were those made to the International & Great Northern (5,646,720 acres) and to the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe (3,554,560 acres).

"The International & Great Northern lands (12,800 acres per mile) were forced upon the railroad company in 1875, in place of bonds of $10,000 per mile which had been granted and were promised—that is, the company was compelled to accept the lands on a basis of 78 cents an acre. But this was an exceptionally valuable grant because the surveys were allowed to be made in solid bodies, and the lands were wholly exempt from all taxes for 25 years. They had to be located in the arid regions of Texas, and lands of better value were freely sold in those days at 10 cents an acre.

"The result of being compelled to accept these lands was that the International & Great Northern was forced into bankruptcy in 1876, and in those proceedings these lands were turned bodily over to the bondholders, and did not really contribute to the building of a mile of the road.

"The Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe built 1,000 miles of railroad in Texas and received land certificates on the first 200 miles, amounting to 3,554,560 acres, which they sold for $246,677, less $35,508 expenses, the net proceeds being $211,168. The road was cheaply constructed and the proceeds of their land grant were sufficient to pay for the construction and equipment of 10 miles of the 1,000 miles, according to the statement of date December 10, 1919, by the Federal manager, Mr. F. G. Pettibone, well known all over Texas. This was not an improvident or unusual sale. The prevailing price of similar lands in Texas from 1878 to along in the eighties averaged from 10 to 12½ cents an acre. Over 32,000,000 acres were granted in Texas, with an outside selling value of $6,000,000, which would construct and equip about 150 miles of the present 15,740 miles in that State, or less than 1 per cent.

"The tables filed by the Senator from Oregon aggregate 124,000,000 acres, and if the swamp and other lands granted by States, including Texas, are added, the grand total is approximately 174,000,000 acres, which no reasonable man with knowledge of the facts would estimate as having a value, when granted, to exceed $174,000,000, of which the companies have already repaid at least one half in cash and are subject to perpetual charges which in time will more than equal the other half.

"That is equivalent to saying that all the lands granted to all railroads in the United States have not been equal in value to 1 per cent of the cost of the roads. The figures of the gross sales will, of course, aggregate a larger amount, but from these must be deducted taxes, commissions, and sale expenses, and this increased value is a value which the railroad has itself created.

"The history of land grants to railroads in this country has not yet been written. It was in the main a record of pioneering and risk, of financial struggles, disappointments, and loss. When that history is impartially written and the facts of each grant are disclosed it will probably be made clear that from the point of view of the public it was a wise and beneficent policy, the chief beneficiaries of which have been the fortunate farmers who bought the lands and improved them.

"The railroad companies were interested in getting the lands into the ownership of actual settlers who would cultivate them and create traffic for their roads, which was far better for the general good than to have them owned by speculators. There is no evidence that they did not act in good faith in promptly disposing of the lands and devoting the proceeds to the construction of the roads.

"Senator CHAMBERLAIN in speaking of these grants characterizes them as 'gifts.' Gifts of this character are made by the public, not because the givers love those to whom they are made, but to induce the recipients to do something for them. What was the motive behind these so-called gifts of land? It was to induce those to whom the lands were offered to risk their money in building railroads through uninhabited regions in order that the public might profit by their investment. Instead of making a gift the public received a full and adequate financial compensation in the building of the roads entirely aside from the actual repayments of cash that have been exacted.

"Discussion of this subject from the standpoint of statesmanship, to say nothing of common honesty, would take into consideration the state of the country and conditions in the West and all the motives which led to the adoption of the policy by Congress.

"Instead of such discussion it has been the practice for years by a certain class of politicians to bring out and reproduce at intervals this detailed list of the acreage granted to railroads by States and by companies, without stating values or the conditions of the grants, and then by innuendo and insinuation, and sometimes by direct assertion, seek to create in the public mind of the present day a belief that the railroads were largely built by these gifts of land.

"Those engaged like Mr. Plumb in a propaganda for gaining control of the railroad property of the country without the investment of a dollar and without the slightest responsibility for consequences may be expected to indulge in more or less reckless assertion, but such indulgence is not looked for in the Senate."

THE AMERICAN METAL CO.

Mr. CALDER. I submit a resolution requiring from the Alien Property Custodian certain information relative to the sale of the American Metal Co., and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 275) was read, as follows:

Whereas according to press reports, the Alien Property Custodian has recently sold 34,644 voting trust certificates of the American Metal Co. to a syndicate, the members of which apparently include persons connected with the former German owners of this company, and persons whose ownership of stock in such metal companies was declared by the Alien Property Custodian in his report published in February, 1919 (S. Doc. 435, 65th Cong., 3d sess.), to be a menace to the country: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Alien Property Custodian is hereby directed to report to the Senate as soon as practicable:

First, the names of the purchasers of such certificates; the number of certificates purchased by each; and the relations, if any, of each purchaser to the former German owners of such American Metal Co.

Second, the reasons for and the circumstances surrounding the sale of a large portion of such voting trust certificates to L. Vogelstein, in view of the reference to such Vogelstein on pages 92 and 93 of the report of the Alien Property Custodian herein mentioned.

Third, the provisions of law, if any, authorizing, and the reasons for, the formation of a voting trust and the sale of voting trust certificates, in lieu of the sale of the shares of stock taken from the alien enemy holders thereof.

Fourth, all other pertinent facts in connection with the sale and transfer of such voting trust certificates, and the issuance and award of such certificates by the advisory committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask that the preamble of the resolution be again read. I did not hear it all read.

The preamble was again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

CESSION OF THRACE TO GREECE.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution and ask that it lie upon the table. It relates to the cession of Thrace to Greece. There is a resolution before the Committee on Foreign Relations dealing with the same subject. I shall not ask consideration of the resolution or its reference to that committee pending some action by the Committee on Foreign Relations, but if the committee fails to act within a short time I shall then ask for consideration of the resolution which I now offer.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The resolution will be printed in the RECORD if it is not to be read?

Mr. KING. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The resolution (S. Res. 276) was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas it is imperative for the peace of eastern Europe that the peace conference make a proper disposition of the territories surrendered by Turkey and Bulgaria and comprising the residue of Thrace extending from Kavalla along the coast of the Aegean Sea to the line of the Chatalja Hills behind Constantinople, reserving to the league of nations proper control of the fortifications which command the Dardanelles to insure the free navigation of the straits between the Aegean and the Black Seas; and

Whereas Thrace is racially and geographically a proper part of ancient Greece; and

Whereas the Greeks in the hundred years since their emancipation from the domination of the Turks and the establishment of the independent Kingdom of Greece have striven consistently for the redemption of Thrace from alien rule; and

Whereas it is now within the discretion of the allied and associated powers to satisfy the proper national aspirations of the Greeks with regard to Thrace; and

Whereas the requirements of Bulgaria for the accommodation of its maritime commerce at an Aegean port may be completely satisfied upon the same terms which the Greeks have accorded Serbian commerce in the port of Saloniki: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that those parts of Thrace which have been surrendered by Bulgaria and Turkey to the principal allied and associated powers and extending to the line of Chatalja Hills, behind Constantinople, should be awarded by the peace conference to Greece and become incorporated in the Kingdom of Greece, proper control of the fortifications which command the Dardanelles being retained under the authority of the league of nations, and Greece being charged with the duty of granting to Bulgaria arrangements for the accommodation of Bulgarian commerce at an Aegean port, of a similar character to the commercial accommodations granted Serbia at Saloniki.

COAL CORPORATION TAXES.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, there is on the calendar Senate resolution 257, requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish a statement relative to dividends paid by corporations engaged in the mining and production of coal within the United States for 1917 and 1918.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] has introduced a resolution providing for practically the same thing. I should like to call up the resolution of the Senator from Georgia, S. Res. 247, requesting information from the Secretary of the Treasury relative to income and profits tax returned from coal corporations. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] objected to its consideration the other day on the ground that it could not legally be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not changed my mind in that respect, and I shall object to the consideration of it at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Has the Senator from Utah considered the resolution of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. I have considered it and shall object unless an amendment has been offered to it. I do not know whether it has or not, or whether the Senator from South Dakota is going to offer it now.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The resolution will be offered as it lies on the desk, and I should like to have the Secretary read it.

Mr. SMOOT. I see no objection to the Secretary reading it, but I do object to its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the use of reading it, then?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no use whatever, as I object to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. Morning business is closed.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILROADS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to make just a few observations, with the consent of the Senate, in reference to a statement which was printed in the RECORD while I was temporarily out of the Senate, presented by my friend, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. It was a statement attached to a letter written by Mr. W. W. Baldwin, of Chicago, to the Senator from Utah, in reference to some remarks made by me some days ago regarding land grants to railroads. I desire that what I say now shall be printed in connection with the article in question.

Mr. President, the statement prepared by Mr. Baldwin, which was printed in the RECORD, I think unjustly criticizes what I had to say when the Cummins bill was up for consideration in reference to grants to railroads. In his opening statement he says:

> The remarks of Senator CHAMBERLAIN, of Oregon, in the Senate on Friday, December 19, 1919, contain so many mistakes of fact, and so many half truths, that they do not correctly represent the subject of land grants to railroads. The Senator himself is probably an unconscious victim of this misrepresentation because his speech consists largely of quotations from a publication called Encyclopedia of American Government.

That statement is not true, and I may say, for the benefit of Mr. Baldwin, that I think, coming from a public-land and land-grant State, as I do, I know just as much about the general situation as he does. I do not know anything about the books of his company and which he represented as land agent, but it is a well-known fact that while figures do not lie, liars will sometimes figure. I do not mean to charge that Mr. Baldwin has falsified anything, because my friend, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], says he is a highly honorable man; but I do know, and I charge, that in many instances railroad companies that had these immense grants have charged up anything they pleased against the moneys received from the land grants. It has constituted a sort of a slush account into which they might inject many charges that ought not to have been made against the proceeds of the land grants, and ought not to have been charged against the Government at all.

But the statement I resent in this publication of Mr. Baldwin is that I was unconsciously misled by the Encyclopedia of American Government. Mr. President, I expressly copied into the RECORD, not what this encyclopedia had to say about the number of acres and the amount of these several grants, but I made portions of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office a part of my remarks, and I not only did that, but I gave the page of the report where the matter was to be found, and stated:

> Mr. President, in support of what I have to say about that, I call attention to State grants that were made from 1850 to June 30, 1919, and I am referring now to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, so it is a recent report.

And I then quoted from the report just exactly what the Commissioner of the General Land Office had to say about these land grants.

That report brought the condition of the grants down to June 30, 1919, as I recall it now. In order further to convince Mr. Baldwin of the accuracy of my statements, I ask to have printed in the RECORD, as an appendix to my remarks, a statement showing the land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, together with data relative thereto, compiled from the records of the General Land Office by order of the Secretary of the Interior and printed as a public document in 1915. I do not ask to have printed anything with reference to wagon roads, canals, or internal improvements mentioned therein, but all that bears upon railroad grants. I do that, Mr. President, for the purpose of showing not only the original grants but the extent of the indemnity limits, where, in addition to the specific grants, the railroad companies were permitted to select lands outside of the grant itself; the name of the grantee; the grantees of the States, which were in nearly every case, if not in all cases, railroad companies; subdivisions of grants and present owners; the date of the several acts; and additional legislation affecting these grants. That gives in minute detail everything that affects these grants down to 1915.

Mr. President, Mr. Baldwin in his statement says I was inconsistent in the observations I made, that the railroad companies ought to have sold these grants and at the same time insisting that if they had been properly husbanded the grants which were made to the companies would have built the roads. I made no such statement, as far as the first part of his statement is concerned, but I did say, and I repeat, that if these land grants had been properly handled, and the moneys properly accounted for, in many instances they would have completed the roads.

In this connection I want to refer again to the Oregon & California grant and the California & Oregon grant, where millions of acres were given for the construction of a road practically from Portland, Oreg., to San Francisco. Mr. President, the company violated expressly the terms of the grants in these cases. They were limited to sell in quantities of 160 acres of land to actual settlers at $2.50 per acre. They held those lands back from cultivation and settlement for many years, and when they went up in price they sold larger quantities than 160 acres to other than actual settlers, and in addition to that sold for prices per acre far in excess of the amount specified in the grant itself.

The railroad companies, under the management of Mr. Harriman, finally, as these timberlands commenced to soar skyward in value continued to hold these lands from any settlement and cultivation in violation of the terms of the grant, with the result that proceedings were instituted in the Legislature of Oregon and by the people of Oregon to have the grants forfeited, and later a suit was commenced in the Federal court of Oregon to forfeit the grants. The Supreme Court of the United States, while they did not forfeit the grant in terms, in effect authorized legislative action which might forfeit the grant, reserving only to the railroad companies the price of $2.50 per acre; and Congress did, in 1908 or 1909, enact laws which forfeited the grants, and the lands are now restored to the people of the country and are being sold under rules and regulations provided by the Secretary of the Interior under the act of Congress.

I do not know, Mr. President, that I care to enter into a lengthy discussion of the statement of Mr. Baldwin. I simply wanted to say that he is entirely mistaken when he said I relied upon any encyclopedia for the information submitted by me in my remarks a few days ago. I relied upon the reports of the Federal Government—upon the reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I repeat that the statements I made then were correct, and I now desire to duplicate that statement by printing in the RECORD, as an appendix to those remarks, another statement by another branch of the Government to show just exactly what these grants were and what subsequent legislation was had in regard thereto.

Mr. President, I desire to say in conclusion that many of the roads agreed to carry Federal troops and munitions of war under varying arrangements. I may have stated it a little too broadly if I said they agreed to carry them for nothing. In some instances the railroad companies have come back to Congress and asked for relief from the very terms of the grant under which they took those lands, and the Congress has sometimes afforded them relief. Relief has been asked within the last three or four years, to my certain knowledge. I refer particularly to chapter 209, Thirty-sixth Statutes at Large, pages 1037 and 1050, where it is provided amongst other things as follows:

> Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States, and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on condition that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provision only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation for such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service.

I ask to have printed as an appendix to my remarks a statement showing land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, canals, and internal improvements, together with data relative thereto, compiled from the records of the General Land Office by order of the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The appendix referred to follows:

Date of act.	Statutes.	Page.	Object.
Mar. 26, 1824	4	47	Authorizing State to locate canal to connect the navigation of the rivers Wabash and Miami of Lake Erie, and granting right of way 90 feet in width on each side of canal.	None		1,480,408.87	The length of the canal from the Ohio State line to Evansville, Ind., as shown by the official maps on file in the General Land Office, is as follows: From the Ohio State line to Terre Haute..... 225 miles. From Terre Haute to Evansville..... 144 miles. Total..... 369 miles. A map showing the location of the canal from the Ohio State line to the mouth of Tippecanoe Creek appears to have been filed in the General Land Office with letter from D. Burr, president of Board of Commissioners, dated Oct. 9, 1829, but this map can not now be found in the files of the office. The map now on file showing the location of the canal from the Ohio State line to Terre Haute was received in the General Land Office with letter from Hon. Thomas H. Blake, dated Dec. 26, 1848. The map showing the location of the canal from Terre Haute to Evansville was received in the General Land Office with letter from James H. Whitcomb, Esq., dated Dec. 29, 1845. In the final adjustment of the grant under the act of 1848, which act the General Land Office appears to have construed as applying only to that part of the canal which lies between the Ohio State line and Terre Haute, the State was allowed five sections per mile for each mile of canal between said points. In addition it was held that as the act of 1824 reserved a strip 90 feet in width on each side of the canal in perpetuity, the State lost the fee to that extent as to any of the alternate sections covered by the grant of 1827, and was entitled to other lands in lieu of the strip thus reserved. See letter from Commissioner of General Land Office to Secretary of the Interior of Feb. 23, 1850, Mis. Record 28, N. S., p. 344. With reference to the right of way granted by the act of 1824, diligent search in the records of the General Land Office fails to show that any reservation of such right of way was ever made. See opinion of Attorney-General, Jan. 16, 1879 (16 Opinions, p. 250), holding that the grant of 90 feet on each side of the canal is a grant not of the land but of an easement therein, and that the purchaser or grantee of the Government took the title subject to such easement, unless the same was excepted out of the patent. See also opinion of Attorney-General, Nov. 15, 1849 (5 Opinions, p. 179), that State was entitled to lands for navigable feeders, and letter of Commissioner of General Land Office to Hon. Thos. H. Blake, Nov. 24, 1849 (Mis. Rec. 27, N. S., p. 208), holding that there were no "navigable feeders" within the meaning of that term as used by the Attorney-General. Under the act of 1845, extending the grant from Terre Haute to Evansville, the State appears to have been allowed to select one moiety of the unappropriated lands within a strip 5 miles in width on each side of the canal, and, in addition, one moiety of all the unappropriated lands in the Vincennes district. See letter of Commissioner General Land Office to Secretary of the Interior, Mar. 16, 1852.

Grant has long been treated as satisfied and closed.	265,815.45	The length of the canal from the Indiana State line to Perrysburgh is 91 miles. Map thereof was filed in the General Land Office with letter from the governor of Ohio dated June 11, 1834.
May 24, 1828	4	305	Section 4, authorizing State of Indiana to relinquish and convey grant to State of Ohio.	Aug. 27 1836. Mar. 2, 1849	9	352	Confirming certain entries and authorizing State to select other lands in lieu of the lands covered thereby.
June 9, 1858	11	313	Confirming State's selections of certain even-numbered sections.				Under the act of 1854, and resolution of 1855, the State claimed, in addition to the grant of 1846, five sections per mile for each mile of the Wisconsin River from its mouth to the Portage Canal. This claim was rejected by the Commissioner of the General Land Office Mar. 12, 1855, and his decision was affirmed by the Secretary of the Interior Mar. 26, 1855. The question was appealed to the President of the United States, who, by decision dated Feb. 11, 1857, affirmed the decision of the Secretary. For decision of the President, see Misc. Rec., vol. 49, p. 202.
Mar. 12, 1867	15	20	Extending time for completion.
Mar. 2, 1861	12	251	Relinquished to State all the title the United States then retained in lands along the Des Moines River, and above the Raccoon Fork thereof, which had been improperly certified under the act of Aug. 8, 1846.	June 1, 1849; Apr. 6, 1850; July 26, 1851; May 18, 1860.	Not known. Grant has long been treated as satisfied and closed.	1,161,513.69	The act of 1846 did not specify any particular sections, but the State elected to take the odd.
Mar. 3, 1871	16	582	Confirmed the title of the State to certain indemnity lands which had been certified to the State for supposed losses within the grant in place, which were subsequently found not to exist.				On account of the great conflict of opinion among the executive officers of the Government, some contending that the grant terminated at the Raccoon Fork and others that it extended along the entire course of the river within the State of Iowa, the withdrawal of June 1, 1849, reserving the lands along the entire course of the river was made.
							The Supreme Court of the United States in April, 1860 (December term, 1859), in the Litchfield case (23 Howard, 66), decided that the grant did not extend above the Raccoon Fork, but the withdrawal of 1849 was continued until the act of July 12, 1862, extended the grant to the north boundary of the State.
							In Wolcott case (5 Wall., 681), Riley vs. Wells (December term, 1869), not reported; Williams vs. Baker (17 Wall., 144); Homestead Co. vs. Valley Railroad (17 Wall., 162), and other cases, the same court decided that the withdrawals of 1849 reserved the lands, and that the act of 1862 had the effect to give to the State all the land she originally claimed under the act of 1846. Area above Raccoon Forks 840,091.36 acres; area below Raccoon Forks 321,422.33 acres.

CONDITIONS IN THE UKRAINE (S. DOC. NO. 176).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, in response to the resolution adopted by the Senate on December 16 (calendar day December 20), 1919, requesting the State Department to transmit to the Senate such information as may be available, not inconsistent with the public interest, showing the actual condition in the Ukraine with respect to the treatment of members of the Jewish race.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
12 January, 1920.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 11368. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LUDWIG C. A. K. MARTENS.

Mr. MOSES. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 277) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations acting under the resolution of the Senate (S. Res. 263) agreed to on the calendar day of December 20, 1919, be, and hereby is, empowered to employ counsel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, before consent is given, I should like to have some explanation as to why counsel seems to be required.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the subcommittee acting under the authority of the resolution cited held its first meeting this morning and discovered that the mass of material involved in the investigation which the Senate has already ordered is so great that no Senator could possibly give his attention to it without wholly neglecting every other duty which he owes to the Senate and to his constituents; and in order that there might be an orderly presentation of the case before the committee it was the unanimous opinion of the Senators attending the hearing this morning that this authority should be asked for.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What sort of material is it that is before the committee? Can the Senator give us an idea?

Mr. MOSES. We have received memoranda of various sorts making various suggestions with reference to the subpœnaing of witnesses, and in a measure as to the sources from which information bearing upon this investigation may be drawn, to such a number and to such an extent that, as I have said, it would be impossible for any member of the committee to look it over even cursorily if he expected to do anything else. It was strongly the opinion of the Senators who were present this morning that if a real investigation was to be had along the lines of the resolution the committee should be aided by counsel.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it seems to me that if counsel are to be employed the Department of Justice should be asked to detail a man for that purpose. I am a good deal opposed to authorizing a committee of the Senate, under circumstances like these, to employ counsel to aid it. I can hardly conceive of a set of circumstances which would justify it. I suggest to the Senator that in the case of the investigation made by the Judiciary Committee along similar lines, and of equal importance, that course was taken. The Department of Justice was asked to detail a man for that purpose.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I am acting under the authority of the subcommittee in presenting this resolution, and so far as I am concerned I would rather have it encounter the opposition of the Senator from Nebraska by his refusal to unanimous consent for its consideration than to accept the suggestion which he has made. The committee feels that if it is to have counsel it should have counsel of its own choosing, in order that it might guide the course of the investigation, rather than to have it guided by any counsel who might be thrust upon it by detail from any department of the administration.

I say this without reference to the personality of whoever might be designated by the Department of Justice to assist the committee, and I say it further because there are certain trails which have already opened up in connection with certain documents already submitted to the committee which would indicate that it would be inconvenient and perhaps embarrassing if some agency of the Department of Justice were designated to direct the course of the committee so far as counsel went; and the committee feels that it should be wholly independent with reference to its counsel if the Senate is to give it authority to have counsel.

I will only add that if the Senate does not give the committee authority to employ counsel, as is suggested by this resolution, there will be many vacancies on the committee, because those members of the committee who were present this morning feel exactly as I have said—that they can not have an orderly and a proper investigation along the lines of the resolution unless they are assisted by counsel, and they firmly feel that that counsel should be of their own selection.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, had the Senator from Nebraska concluded?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was merely reserving the right to object. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if Mr. Martens is not represented by counsel?

Mr. MOSES. He is. One of his counsel appeared this morning, and it was represented to the committee that he had been unable yet to get in proper touch with other counsel whom he expects to have to assist him before the committee; and it was in accordance with that information that the continuance of the hearing was had.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to urge the Senator from Nebraska not to object. The matter is not without precedent. In the Lorimer investigation, counsel were employed. It became absolutely essential. The members of the committee could not give to that work the time that otherwise would have been required. I have gone into this matter enough to know that the investigation will amount to nothing if there is no counsel. It is absolutely impossible for the members of that committee to give to it the consideration which they should, and the investigation might just as well be abandoned if there is to be no counsel. It will not get anywhere.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, for this morning I think I shall object, but I shall be glad to talk the matter over with the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. Then I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to make a suggestion, I was named by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations as a member of this subcommittee, and I was obliged this morning to ask to be relieved of that duty because of my engagements on the conference committee on the railroad legislation; but I share the view of the Senator from New Hampshire that counsel ought to be appointed. I think I realize the tremendousness of the questions which will be presented to the subcommittee.

The suggestion has been made that the Department of Justice could send a representative to appear on behalf of the Senate. Of course that is possible. I do not know whether that would embarrass the Department of Justice or not. The papers indicate that the Department of Justice has been having under consideration certain procedure. As a lawyer, I think I can understand why the Department of Justice at this time might be somewhat embarrassed if they were to go into this investigation, which might proceed along entirely different lines, and might be more comprehensive than any investigation that the Department of Justice may see fit to make. For that reason it seems to me that the committee could serve the Senate very much better if they were aided by some lawyer who could act independently of the Department of Justice, and I hope that view will prevail in the end.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks this resolution should go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MOSES. I asked, when the objection was made, that it be referred to that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

PAY OF OFFICERS AND MEN OF COAST GUARD.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 102. The object of the joint resolution is to have the officers and men of the Coast Guard Service who were attached to the Navy during the war but have now been detached given the same salaries that officers and men in the Navy are receiving.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not intend or desire to interpose an objection, but I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question. The Senator probably knows that on the calendar there is a bill (S. 3383) providing for an increase in the pay of the officers and men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service, all under one bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. I merely wanted to ask the Senator from Minnesota if this bill for the consideration of which he now asks unanimous consent would, if enacted into law, have any effect upon the pay of the men in the Coast Guard Service?

Mr. NELSON. Why, they would get the same pay that they got in the Navy.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be an increase of pay.

Mr. NELSON. The Coast Guard was an independent service prior to the war. During the war they were attached to the Navy, and they cooperated with it and were getting the Navy pay. Since then they have been detached from the Navy and their pay is less, and they simply ask to get the same pay in the Coast Guard Service—which is the old Revenue Cutter Service—as in the Navy.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then perhaps this will be the case: If the joint resolution is passed, and is followed by the passage of a general pay increase, the Coast Guard officers would get the same increase in pay as the naval officers?

Mr. NELSON. They would.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Having been placed upon the same basis as naval officers by the Senator's joint resolution?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I merely wanted to have that clear in my own mind, because there is another bill on the calendar affecting pay.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator a question. I see by the press that some committee—I presume the Naval Affairs Committee—has recommended an increase of from 30 to 50 per cent in the compensation of certain persons in the Navy. I am not sure whether it extends only to the seamen or whether it includes the officers of the Navy. If that bill should become a law, then I presume if the joint resolution the Senator is asking the consideration of now should be enacted into law, automatically they would receive the same 30 or 50 per cent increase which is granted by the measure to which I have just referred.

Mr. NELSON. That is true; but I can see no reason why they should not. Their work is as difficult and hazardous in time of peace as that of the Navy. Whether that bill will pass or not I can not say. That is another question.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not persons competent to judge, and by that I mean naval officers and officials of the Treasury Department, who have had cognizance of the activities of the Coast Guard Service, feel that the services bear such a relation to each other in importance as to require the same compensation in the two departments?

Mr. NELSON. They certainly do. The head of the department, as well as the head of the service, feel that they are entitled to as much compensation as officers in the Navy in time of peace, and from my own knowledge of the duties performed by the Coast Guard I have no doubt of it at all. They are on active duty late and early, all the time, patrolling our coasts. They are as busy as they can be, and they perform as efficient duty as those in the Navy in time of peace.

Mr. KING. Mr. President I shall not object to the consideration of the joint resolution. I understand that an amendment which I shall offer will be agreed to. But I take this occasion to express the view that in my opinion the services are so dissimilar as to call for different pay. I see no reason why an employee of the Coast Guard Service whether officer or seaman, if that is the proper term, should receive the same compensation as men in the Navy, who are called upon to leave their homes for months at a time and go to foreign ports and to meet the hazards and responsibilities that are incident to naval service. However, if the Senate believes that the services call for the same compensation, I shall not object to the consideration of the joint resolution. I think it is unwise and improper legislation.

The joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That commissioned officers, warrant officers, and petty officers and other enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now or may hereafter be prescribed for corresponding grades or ratings and length of service in the Navy: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall operate to reduce the pay or allowances that would have been received by any person in the Coast Guard except for the passage of this resolution.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to insert at the end the following proviso:

Provided, That the senior district superintendent, the three district superintendents next in order of seniority, the four district superintendents next below these three in order of seniority, and the five junior district superintendents shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of captain, first lieutenant, second lieutenant, and third lieutenant in the Coast Guard, respectively.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not insist upon the committee amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask one further question. As the joint resolution now reads, it does not call for officers in the Coast Guard to receive automatically, or by any system, the same grades enjoyed by officers in the Navy.

Mr. NELSON. No; it has nothing to do with grades. The committee amendment having been eliminated, it has to do with nothing except with the pay question and nothing as to grades of officers.

Mr. KING. The grades are determined by some other statute or by regulations of a different character from those prevailing in the Navy?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR HARDING.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the address delivered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] before the Ohio Society in New York City on Saturday last may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Mr. Toastmaster, ladies, and gentlemen, the topic of the evening makes it befitting to allude to the contemporaneousness of the birth of Ohio and the beginning of Americanism. Ohio became a definite part of the Northwest Territory in 1787, and the first flaming torch of Americanism was lighted in framing the Federal Constitution in that momentous year. Everything else American is preliminary or subsidiary.

"The Pilgrims signed their simple and majestic covenant a full century and a half before, and set aflame their beacon of liberty on the coast of Massachusetts, and other pioneers of new-world freedom were rearing their new standards of liberty from Jamestown to Plymouth for five generations before Lexington and Concord heralded a new era; and it was all American in the destined result, yet all of it lacked the soul of nationality. In simple truth, there was no thought of nationality in the revolution for American independence. The colonists were resisting a wrong and freedom was their solace. Once it was achieved, nationality was the only agency suited to its preservation.

"Ours was the physically incomparable America, so enriched by God's bounty and so incalculable in its possibilities that adventurous Spaniard and developing Englishman stood only at the gateway and marveled. Ours were American colonies in name, but the colonists were still echoing the prejudices and aspirations of the lands from which they came. There were conflicting ideas, varying conditions, and contending jealousies, but no common confidence, no universal pride, no illuminating spirit. These essentials came with the adoption of the Federal Constitution and the riveting of union, and the star of the American Republic was set aglow in the world firmament on the day that ratification was effected.

"On that day Americanism began, robed in nationality. On that day the American Republic began the blazed trail of representative popular government. On that day representative democracy was proclaimed the safe agency of highest human freedom. On that day America headed the forward procession of civil, human, and religious liberty, which ultimately will effect the liberation of all mankind.

"I am not thinking to magnify its comparative excellence, its charm of simplicity, or its exalted place among the written fundamental laws. I am recalling the Federal Constitution as the very base of all Americanism, as the ark of the covenant of American liberty, as the very temple of equal rights, as the very foundation of all our worthy aspirations. More, it was the supreme pledge of coordinate government by law, with the sponsorship of majorities, the protected rights of minorities, and freedom from usurpation of power—the people to rule.

"Men ofttimes sneer nowadays like it were some useless relic of the formative period, seemingly unmindful that on its guaranties rests the liberty which permits ungrateful sneering. Others pronounce it timeworn and antiquated and unsuited to modern liberty, but they forget that the world's orderly freedom has come of its inspiration. Perhaps its very simplicity, its utter naturalness for popular government under majority rule, has led to scant appreciation if not unmindfulness. But it does abide and ever will so long as the Republic survives.

"The trouble is that its sacredness, if not forgotten, has been too little proclaimed. Most of us think it too righteous to assail and too essential to ignore, and we have held the superstructure so nearly ideal that for more than a hundred years we have had no peace-time statute to make seditious utterance a crime. Apparently we have held the freedom of speech which the Constitution guarantees more sacred than the guaranteeing instrument. I have come to think it is fundamentally and patriotically American to say there isn't room anywhere in these United States for anyone who preaches the destruction of the Government which is within the Constitution.

"This patriotically, if not divinely, inspired fundamental law fits every real American citizen, and the man who can not fit himself to it is not fit for American citizenship nor deserving of our hospitality. It fully covers all classes and masses in its guaranteed liberties, and any class or mass that opposes the Constitution is against the country and the flag.

"This Republic has never feared an enemy from without. It no longer intends to be menaced by enemies from within. If any man seeks the advantages of American citizenship, let him assume the duties of that citizenship. If he wishes the freedom of America, let him subscribe to freedom's protection. If he craves our hospitality, let him not abuse it. If he wishes to profit by American opportunity, let him join in making the same opportunity open to others. One can not be half American and half European or half something else. This is the day for the all-American.

"Nor can the foreigner hereafter be a prolonged visitor or resident alien, gathering the fruits of American opportunity, assuming the privileges of a citizen without whole-heartedly plighting his faith of citizenship. I do not mean the mere perfunctory declaration and legal naturalization. I mean renounced allegiance to the land from which he came and a heart and soul consecration to this Republic. It were better to leave some of our industrial work undone than to have the Government undermined in its doing.

"But we must not accept the overwrought impression that the assault on stable American Government is chargeable wholly or mainly to those of foreign birth who have not sworn American allegiance. The worst disloyalists and most effective conspirators wear the garb of full-fledged American citizenship, and many of them inherited American opportunity at their birth and turned liberty into license. The ignorant foreigner is more a victim than a conspirator, because he has heard the gospel of revolution when no one preached the blessings of orderly government and the rewards of American opportunity. Agitator and revolutionist found profit in agitation. They learned the foreigner's language and thought his thoughts and reached his sympathies, and lied to his ignorant prejudices, while the captains of American industry were counting dividends without concern for the human element in their making. There were exceptions to this crime of negligence, but in most instances the Americans who invited and enlisted foreign activities to swell the man power of industry have neglected to teach the American language, failed to utter American sympathies, forgot to extend American fellowship, and omitted the revealment of the loftier ideals of American citizenship. The grind of the workshop alone is poor culture for that citizenship which makes the ideal republic.

"It is well enough to preach Americanism, and we ought. It is more important to practice it, and we must. In truth, my countrymen, we need practical Americanism in business as well as proclaimed Americanism in politics. It is superb to lead in commerce and excel in industry—and no nation ever filled a brilliant page in history until it reached industrial and commercial eminence—but the distinction is too costly if wrought in the neglected qualities of citizenship and attending unrest and ultimate revolution.

"It is well enough to be concerned about the quantity and quality of our wares, but it is better to be sure of the spirit of the workers who make them. We must be thinking of men as well as materials and the conditions of making as well as marketing. The enhancement of conditions in 20 years is tribute to awakened American conscience, but the neglect of education is the warning to American heedlessness.

"There must be concern about devotion and duty as well as dividends. There must be a thought of the eventful morrow as well as the golden day. It is of no avail merely to preach contentment. Content never lighted a furnace nor turned a wheel in all creation. It doesn't exist in the human being who is really worth while. Mere subsistence does not make a citizen, and generous compensation without thrift blasts every hope of acquirement.

"What humanity most needs just now is understanding. The present-day situation is more acute because we are in the ferment that came of war and war's aftermath. Ours was a fevered world, sometimes flighty, as we used to say in the village, to suggest fever's fancies or delirium. I forbear specification. But we are slow getting normal again, and the world needs sanity as it seldom needed it before.

"Many have thought the ratification of the peace treaty and its league of nations would make us normal, but that is the plea of the patent-medicine fakir, whose one remedy marvelously will cure every ill. Undoubtedly formal peace will help, and I would gladly speed the day, if we sacrifice nothing vitally American. Yet as a matter of fact actual peace prevails and commerce has resumed its wonted way.

"Normal thinking will help more. And normal living will have the effect of a magician's wand, paradoxical as the statement seems. The world does deeply need to get normal, and liberal doses of mental science freely mixed with resolution will help mightily. I do not mean the old order will be restored. It will never come again. A world war's upheaval which ends autocracies and wipes out dynasties and multiplies cost of government, an upheaval which shifts the sacred ratio of 16 to 1 until silver is the more sacred, sweeps humanity beyond any return to precise prewar conditions.

"But there is a sane normalcy due under the new conditions, to be reached in deliberation and understanding. And all men must understand and join in reaching it. Certain fundamentals are unchangeable and everlasting. Life without toil never was and never can be. Ease and competence are not to be seized in frenzied envy; they are the reward of thrift and industry and denial. There can be no excellence without great labor. There is no reward except as it is merited. Lowered cost of living and increased cost of production are an economic fraud. Capital makes possible while labor produces, and neither ever achieved without the other, and both of them together never wrought a success without genius and management. No one of them, through the power of great wealth, the force of knowledge, or the might of great numbers is above the law, and no one of them shall dominate a free people.

"There can be no liberty without security, and there can be no security without the supremacy of law and the majesty of just government. In the gleaming Americanism of the Constitution there is neither fear nor favor, but there are equal rights to all, equal opportunities beckoning to every man, and justice untrammeled. The government which surrenders to the conspiracies of an influential few or yields to the intimidation of the organized many does justice to neither and none and dims the torch of Americanism which must light our way to safety.

"Governmental policies change and laws are altered to meet the changed conditions which attend all human progress. There are orderly processes for these necessary changes. Let no one proclaim the Constitution unresponsive to the conscience of the Republic. We have recently witnessed its amendment with less than 18 months intervening between submission and ratification, with some manifestation of sorrow marking the fundamental change. It promptly responds to American conviction and is the rock on which is builded the temple of orderly liberty and the guaranteed freedom of the American Republic.

"The insistent problem of the day, magnified in the madness of war and revealed in the extreme reaction from hateful and destroyed autocracy to misapplied and bolshevist democracy, like the pathos of impotent Russia, is the preservation of civil liberty and all its guaranties. Let Russia experiment in her fatuous folly until the world is warned anew by her colossal tragedy. And let every clamorous advocate of the red régime go to Russia and revel in its crimsoned reign. This is law-abiding America!

"Our American course is straight ahead, with liberty under the law, and freedom glorified in righteous restraint. Reason illumines our onward path, and deliberate, intelligent public opinion reveals every pitfall and byway which must be avoided. America spurns every committal to the limits of mediocrity and bids every man to climb to the heights and rewards him as he merits it. This is the essence of liberty and made us what we are. Our system may be imperfect, but under it we have wrought to world astonishment, and we are only fairly begun.

"It would halt the great procession to time our steps with the indolent, the lazy, the incapable, or the sullenly envious. Nor can we risk the course sometimes suggested by excessive wealth and its ofttimes insolent assumption of power, but we can practice thrift and industry, we can live simply and commend righteous acquirement, we can make honest success an inspiration to succeed, and march hopefully on to the chorus of liberty, opportunity, and justice.

"Sometimes we must go beneath the surface Gulf Stream to find the resistless currents of the great ocean. It little matters what a man proclaims in an ephemeral outcry for fancied reformation, you get the true undercurrent when you learn his aspiration for his children and his children's children. He stands with his generation between yesterday and the morrow, eager to lift his children to a little higher plane than mediocrity can bridge and which socialism never reaches. He wants to hand on American freedom unabridged; he wants to bequeath the waters of American political life unpolluted; he would bestow the equality of opportunity unaltered and the security of just government unendangered. The underwriting is in the complete and rejoicing Americanism of every citizen of the Republic.

"Mr. Toastmaster, we have been hearing lately of the selfishness of nationality, and it has been urged that we must abandon it in order to perform our full duty to humanity and civilization. Let us hesitate before we surrender the nationality which is the very soul of highest Americanism. This Republic has never failed humanity or endangered civilization. We have been tardy about it, like when we were proclaiming democracy and neutrality while we ignored our national rights, but the ultimate and helpful part we played in the Great War will be the pride of Americans so long as the world recites the story.

"We do not mean to hold aloof, we choose no isolation, we shun no duty. I like to rejoice in an American conscience, and in a big conception of our obligations to liberty, justice, and civilization. Aye, and more, I like to think of Columbia's helping hand to new republics which are seeking the blessings portrayed in our example. But I have a confidence in our America that requires no council of foreign powers to point the way of American duty. We wish to counsel, cooperate, and contribute, but we arrogate to ourselves the keeping of the American conscience and every concept of our moral obligations. It is fine to idealize, but it is very practical to make sure our own house is in perfect order before we attempt the miracle of Old World stabilization.

"Call it the selfishness of nationality if you will, I think it an inspiration to patriotic devotion—

"To safeguard America first.

"To stabilize America first.

"To prosper America first.

"To think of America first.

"To exalt America first.

"To live for and revere America first.

"We may do more than prove exemplars to the world of enduring, representative democracy where the Constitution and its liberties are unshaken. We may go on securely to the destined fulfillment and make a strong and generous Nation's contribution to human progress, forceful in example, generous in contribution, helpful in all suffering, and fearless in all conflicts.

"Let the internationalist dream and the Bolshevist destroy. God pity him 'for whom no minstrel raptures swell.' In the spirit of the Republic we proclaim Americanism and acclaim America."

LIBRARY OF HOWARD UNIVERSITY.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, last Thursday, January 8, I called the attention of the Senate to a pamphlet written by Albert Rhys Williams on bolshevism and what it meant. The pamphlet comprised, I think, some 72 questions and answers. The pamphlet came from the library of the Howard University.

I have received and I suppose every other Senator has received from an official of the university, the secretary-treasurer, a communication headed as follows:

The following statement furnished the press by Dr. J. Stanley Durkee, president of Howard University, is also forwarded to Senators and Representatives of the United States Congress for their information.

(Signed) E. J. SCOTT,
Secretary-Treasurer.

The statement is headed:

Head of Howard University says institution does not sympathize with soviet or bolshevik movements. Its record of proved loyalty. Says pamphlet should be suppressed by the Government.

I have read the statement furnished to the press of the country by the president of the university, and I agree with his statement. All I care about it is to see that that pamphlet is removed from the Howard University library. I know of no one in Congress who has given more attention to Howard University and who is more in favor of its continuance and assistance to be extended by the Government of the United States than I. It is for that reason that I took the interest in the matter that I did.

I am very glad to have received from the president of the institution a personal letter in which he speaks of the pamphlet in most positive terms as not being worthy of a place in the library not only of Howard University but of any other school library in the United States.

I ask that the statements to which I have referred be published in the RECORD without reading, and I also should like to have printed in the RECORD at the same time the letter from the president of Howard University addressed to me.

I desire the same publicity given through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD made by the officials of the institution as was given the statement made by me. I am delighted to see the spirit manifested in the letter of the president of the university addressed to me, and I want to assure him that, as far as Howard University is concerned, if they do the same work and along the same lines that they have done in the past I shall be very pleased indeed to vote for appropriations from the Treasury of the United States to assist them, as I have in the past. There ought to be more such schools in the United States. But I could not allow the question to pass without calling attention to the fact that a book of the character referred to, and written by Albert Rhys Williams, was in the library of that institution. I agree with the statement made by the president of the institution as to the desirability of having the publication removed not only from the library of Howard University, but from every school library in the United States.

There being no objection, the statement and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The following statement furnished the press by Dr. J. Stanley Durkee, president of Howard University, is also forwarded to Senators and Representatives of the United States Congress for their information.

E. J. SCOTT, Secretary-Treasurer.

HEAD OF HOWARD UNIVERSITY SAYS INSTITUTION DOES NOT SYMPATHIZE WITH SOVIET OR BOLSHEVIK MOVEMENTS—ITS RECORD OF PROVED LOYALTY—SAYS PAMPHLET SHOULD BE SUPPRESSED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 9, 1920.

Dr. J. Stanley Durkee, president of Howard University, in replying to the statement made by Senator SMOOT, of Utah, in the United States Senate, Thursday of this week, calling attention to the pamphlet by Albert Rhys Williams, states:

"The pamphlet in question was donated to the library of Howard University about a year ago. Hundreds of books and periodicals are thus donated and accepted each year, and in this case the pamphlet itself was not catalogued until eight or nine months ago. Since the cataloguing of the pamphlet it has been called for twice, which is proof positive that no particular attention has been paid to it by students or teachers. A letter from the librarian of the university in reference to this whole matter may be of interest:

"'HOWARD UNIVERSITY,
"'Washington, D. C., January 9, 1920.

"'President J. STANLEY DURKEE,
"'Howard University, Washington, D. C.

"'DEAR SIR: In response to your request of this date, I have the honor of making the following statement of facts concerning the presence in this library of the pamphlet, Bolsheviks and Soviets, and its use by students and faculty.

"'Two copies of this pamphlet were presented to us by one of our students about a year ago. When first presented, and before it was properly catalogued, it was probably read by several students, for there was at that time a great deal of interest in and curiosity about the new Russian Government and a very great disagreement as to the bare facts about it. The pamphlet was formally catalogued about eight or nine months ago, and since that time, according to the charging cards, only two students have asked for it, one on October 27, 1919, and one on December 30, 1919. As all use of a book in the building as well as use of it at home is recorded on these cards, it would seem to be conclusively proven that this pamphlet has been asked for but twice.

"'It is—or was, I know—in the United States Library of Congress, for the cards on which it is recorded in our card catalogue were printed and distributed by the Library of Congress.

"'Very respectfully, yours,
"'(Signed) E. C. WILLIAMS,
"'Librarian.'

"Howard University is the one outstanding national university of the negro people of America. It trains a larger number of negro college and professional students than any other institution of learning in the world. It is located at the head of the black belt and sends into the heart of the black belt of the South a larger number of graduates than any other institution. These graduates are all hard at work promoting good citizenship and seeking to raise the whole level of life among the negro people.

"During the recent war the university rendered service to our Government of the highest and most patriotic character. It had more graduates to receive commissions and serve as officers with colored military units than any other institution in America for the training of negro youth. The complete facilities of the university were placed at the disposal of the Government. National Army training detachments, students' army training corps, and reserve officers' training corps units were trained at the university. The student army instruction camp for 70 colored institutions of learning was also conducted here. In all, 1,786 men were trained for war work.

"With such a record of proved loyalty, it is most unfortunate that statements should be made calculated to convey the thought and idea that the university sympathizes directly or indirectly with soviet or bolshevik movements. Neither through classroom teaching nor otherwise has the university expressed any sympathy with movements seeking the overthrow of established order. On the contrary, the university has unhesitatingly stood in positive fashion for law and order and against movements designed to interfere with the orderly functioning of the great departments of the Government.

"To-day is the first time I have seen or read the pamphlet. I heartily agree that such false statements should not have circulation. The pamphlet should be suppressed by the Government. I am surprised to learn that it has not been suppressed. I have instantly withdrawn these copies from our library."

HOWARD UNIVERSITY,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Washington, D. C., January 10, 1920.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SMOOT: I noticed in the Evening Star of January 8 a statement in which you were calling attention to a certain book which was alleged to be circulating in Howard University regarding the bolshevik and the soviet.

I wish to say that I have looked the matter up very carefully and the report inclosed in this letter will give you absolute facts regarding the situation.

Frankly, Mr. Senator, after having read the pamphlet, I agree with you from my heart that such false statements ought not to be circulated, and, in my judgment, the Government should suppress the printing of such pamphlets as these. I only regret that my attention was not called to the matter before it was necessary to give it to the public, for, as doubtless you well know, the damaging statement will go to the end of our country, while the ameliorating facts which we are now stating will not be given very much credence by the newspaper world.

May I ask from you, Mr. Senator, an appointment, that I may sit down and chat with you for a few moments over some of the great questions which are so desperately perplexing me in my work here? I should esteem this a personal favor, and I think it would be of vast good for our America.

With kind personal regard and the greetings of the season, I remain,

Respectfully, yours,

J. STANLEY DURKEE,
President.

TREATY RESERVATIONS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have received a number of communications during the past few days urging the immediate ratification of the treaty. There is a general feeling throughout the country that the Senate should promptly adopt a resolution of ratification. There is, I believe, genuine disappointment because of the failure of the Senate to take affirmative action upon this matter.

In an address delivered a few days ago, I earnestly urged that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the treaty and called attention to the perilous situation in Europe, and to the general spirit of unrest throughout the world, and expressed the view in substance that if the treaty were ratified and this Nation entered the league of nations, and that organization functioned as the covenant of the league provides, it would stabilize conditions, dissipate much of the unrest, and arouse hope throughout the world. I again asseverate with the utmost earnestness that we should act now. We should dispose of the treaty, ratifying it with such fair and proper reservations as will meet the wishes of the Senators and the American people who earnestly are in favor of a league of nations, and the adoption of a plan that will make for the peace of the world.

Some of the communications received by me urge that the Senate follow what is denominated as "Mr. Bryan's plan." Apparently the press—and particularly the Republican press—has been interested in emphasizing the idea that Mr. Bryan is the leader of the Democratic Party and that he came to Washington and promulgated a new plan concerning the ratification of the treaty, and that under his influence and leadership Democratic Senators are about to abandon former views and ratify the treaty in pursuance of the plan submitted by him. Mr. Bryan is a great American and a very conspicuous figure in the Democratic Party and in the Nation, but it would be improper to say that he suggested a new plan of dealing with the treaty, or developed a novel theory in dealing with this grave and important matter. Several months ago the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], one of the oldest and most respected Members of this body, and one to whom the Democrats look for guidance and leadership, stated upon the floor of the Senate that in his opinion the treaty should be ratified promptly, but that because of the divergence of views it appeared to be necessary, in order to secure ratification, that reservations to the treaty be incorporated in the resolution of ratification.

The distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] months ago stated in substance in an address delivered in this body that he was heartily in favor of the ratification of the treaty, but that reservations, and particularly a reservation affecting article 10, would be necessary in order to secure favorable action upon the resolution of ratification. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the leader of the minority, has repeatedly announced that reservations would be accepted by the minority, and he offered a number of reservations and moved their adoption. He offered a resolution containing a number of reservations, one of them dealing with article 10 of the treaty. Several other Democratic Senators have stated upon the floor of the Senate and in public addresses that they were in favor of reservations or interpretative reservations. I think all of the Democratic Senators have voted for reservations, including a very important reservation dealing with article 10. A number of Democratic Senators have openly expressed the view that a reservation must be adopted dealing with article 10, which would relieve the treaty of the interpretation that article 10 imposes a legal and moral obligation to protect the territorial integrity of any member of the league in advance of action by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Bryan's views in respect to article 10 of the treaty, as expressed by him at the recent banquet given by the national Democratic committee, contained no new program. He urged conciliation, and that Senators make such concessions as would secure a prompt ratification of the treaty. He frankly stated that he had urged the ratification of the treaty without amendment or reservation, but that that seemed impossible, and he therefore felt that it was the duty of Senators to make such reasonable concessions as would enable them to reach a common ground, that would bring about an immediate ratification of the treaty with Germany. No one questions the good faith or the sincerity of Mr. Bryan, and there is no doubt but what his views have weight throughout the country. But in the interest of accuracy I want the country to understand that many Democratic Senators for months have been urging that the treaty be ratified and that ratification may not be obtained without reservations; that among the reservations there must be one that squarely dealt with the question of the obligation placed by article 10 upon the members of the league. The question of reservations did not originate with Mr. Bryan. The suggestion that a reservation with respect to article 10 be adopted was not first suggested by Mr. Bryan. I repeat what I have said upon a number of occasions, that the treaty will be ratified, and my opinion is that it will be ratified at an early date, and that it will contain reservations. That it should be ratified, I believe most Americans heartily agree. That there should be reservations incorporated in the resolution of ratification, if necessary to secure its ratification, I believe a majority of the American people desire.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I also believe the treaty will be ratified, but I think it will be ratified sooner because William Jennings Bryan came to town.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there is a rule that on Monday we shall proceed with the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that we may do so immediately.

Mr. SMOOT. In this connection I desire to ask unanimous consent that we begin with Calendar No. 241, Senate bill 411, as that was the number on the calendar which we reached on last Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The calendar is in order. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 411) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to certify certain findings of fact, and for other purposes, was announced as first on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1233) to repeal an act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," and the act amendatory thereof, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary adversely. The question is, Shall the bill be indefinitely postponed?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the member of the Committee on the Judiciary making the report, and also in the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], I ask that that motion be not acted upon to-day, but that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 3090) to repeal the espionage act was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. This bill was also reported adversely. I ask that it may go over for the same reason.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2614) for the relief of Francis M. Atherton was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that that may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BURIAL EXPENSES OF RESERVE AVIATORS.

The bill (S. 3384) to provide for burial and expenses of transportation of remains of certain officers and enlisted men of the reserve forces of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from New York desire to take up the bill this morning?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it is a measure which ought to pass. The men were killed while on duty under authorization of the Secretary of War. I think we should follow the custom of the military service, and that the men's burial expenses should be paid by the Federal Government.

Mr. KING. I did not know but there was another bill duplicating the same subject.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not that I know of.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

Mr. WALSH of Montana Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. Evidently there are two varying views concerning what ought to be done in this matter. Evidently quite a large number of people feel that the bodies of these men should remain in the cemeteries for which provision has been made in France. Others insist that the bodies should be returned to this country. I desire to inquire of the Senator if hearings were had on this bill so that these varying views were presented to the committee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think the Senator misapprehends the nature of this bill. This bill has nothing to do with the removal of the remains of the soldiers now buried in France. This is a bill authorizing the payment of the funeral expenses of the reserve officers and enlisted men who, subject to the authority of the Secretary of War, navigate airplanes in time of peace and are so unfortunate as to meet with fatal accidents.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. At the various flying fields in the United States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; at the flying fields here in the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the allowances for the expenses of interment and for the preparation and transportation of the remains of officers and enlisted men of the reserve forces of the United States, whether on active or inactive status, whose death results from aeronautical duty performed with the approval and under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, shall be, and are hereby, made the same as those authorized for officers and enlisted men on the active list of the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 3385) to authorize the War Department to restore the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park to its condition prior to use for military purposes during the war with Germany, and to appropriate the necessary funds therefor, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park to be restored to the condition in which it was at the time it was taken over for military purposes during the World War by removal therefrom of all buildings and structures erected thereon for military purposes, obliterating all roads, trails, walks, and paths not forming parts of the plan of the park, filling all trenches and other excavations made or caused in the training of troops, resodding, and doing any and all other acts and things necessary or expedient in order to restore the entire area so occupied as nearly as practical to its former condition as a national park.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated the sum of $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be available for expenditure under the provisions of this act until this restoration work is completed or the appropriation exhausted.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether there is any exigency which calls for this work at the present time? I fancy it will cost a considerable sum; and in view of the large demands which are being made upon the Public Treasury and the high cost of labor and material, I am led to inquire whether the situation is such as to call for immediate action in respect to this matter?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The situation is described in the report of the committee, which includes a letter from the Secretary of War. As the Senator from Utah knows, the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park was set aside by Congress many years ago; it has been maintained under a separate organization, and is not now in the War Department, as I recollect.

When the United States went into the recent war a great deal of land inside the park was deemed of great value for cantonment and camp purposes, and the War Department took it over. They have built trenches and excavations at one place or another in this public park, which is supposed to be for the benefit of the people of the United States. The bill appropriates $65,000 to restore the park, to fill up those trenches and excavations, and to level off the ground, as best they can, inside the limits of the park. The War Department, of course, is in honor bound to do that work at some time or another; it can not very well go into a great public park like that of Chickamauga and Chattanoooga any more than it could at Gettysburg, tear the whole place to pieces, and then never restore it to its original condition.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator from New York that under his statement the work of reparation should be made, but the only point in my mind was whether the work should be now undertaken.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It might be well to say to the Senator from Utah that the Army buildings, the cantonment buildings, and the various storehouses that are now there are to be sold, indeed, probably have been sold; and the money gotten from those sales would be sufficient to pay the cost of restoring the ground to its former condition; but under the law the money from those sales has to revert to the Treasury. So we have to make the appropriation sooner or later to do this work. As a matter of fact, the salvage is going to be enough to cover the cost of the work.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the chairman of the park commission estimates that the total amount required to do the work will be $105,273.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is absolutely required, would it not be better to make one appropriation to do the work than to have the $65,000 which is appropriated, and perhaps wasted, expended and then be asked for the full amount?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The representative of the department says that it will not cost that much, and the committee was glad to take the lower figure.

Mr. SMOOT. The action of the committee was proper; but the Secretary of War says:

But it is believed that the essential work can be carried out for the amount requested in the proposed bill—

Namely, $65,000. I do not know what the Secretary of War means by "essential work," and if that is all that is to be expended for this purpose, well and good; but what I am fearful of is that a year or two after this money shall have been expended they will again come back and ask that a large amount be appropriated for the same purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, we will take no chance of that.

Mr. SMOOT. I always prefer when we have a job to do, to do it right in the first instance.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think they should have a subsequent appropriation, and I should not favor appropriating $105,000 for the purpose. I think we can make them do the work for the $65,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us refuse to make any further appropriation if they do not do the work for $65,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will stand with the Senator from Utah on that contract.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANCE TO CIVILIAN AVIATORS.

The bill (S. 3386) to provide for the assistance of civilian aviators in distress by authorizing the Secretary of War to sell at cost price at aviation posts or stations gasoline, oil, and aircraft supplies to persons in charge of civilian aircraft landing upon or near said posts was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to sell at contract price, plus 10 per cent of such price, gasoline, oil, and aircraft supplies of all kinds to the persons in charge of civilian aircraft landing upon or near aviation posts or stations and in need of assistance either for the continuation of their journey or for the protection of the lives of the passengers or crews: Provided, That these shall be sold only in such limited amounts as may be needed to enable the aviator to get to the nearest point where such supplies can be bought and when it is impracticable to obtain same in the vicinity. The money realized from the sale of said articles shall be passed to the credit of the appropriations from which such supplies were purchased.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPENDENTS OF CERTAIN OFFICERS OF FRENCH MILITARY MISSION.

The bill (S. 3387) for the relief of dependents of Lieuts. Jean Jagou and Fernand Herbert, French military mission to the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to the dependents of First Lieut. Jean Jagou, Seventy-third Infantry, and First Lieut. Fernand Herbert, One hundred and sixty-third Alpine Infantry, both of the French Army, and who were accidentally drowned July 26, 1918, near Camp Cody, N. Mex., while on duty with the French military mission and acting as instructors of United States troops at Camp Cody, N. Mex., such sums of money as by the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, as amended," approved June 25, 1918, is provided to be paid as compensation to the widow or children or other dependents for the death from causes occurring in the line of duty in the service of the United States; and such compensation shall be payable and be paid as of and from the 26th of July, 1918, and under and according to the terms, conditions, and basis of compensation in said act provided, and such sums shall be in full of all claims, legal or equitable, of said Jean Jagou and Fernand Herbert, their heirs, representatives, or assigns.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SERVICE OF REGULAR ARMY OFFICERS WITH TROOPS.

The bill (H. R. 7752) relating to detached service of officers of the Regular Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, after the termination of the emergency incident to the war with Germany and Austria-Hungary, in the construction of any law relating to detached service of the officers of the Regular Army, all service performed by such officers during the said emergency shall be regarded as service with troops or organizations thereof.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this bill from the Senator having it in charge.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this proposed law is rather important. The Senator from Utah will remember that under the military law as now written an officer of the Regular Army must spend a certain proportion of his time with troops in time of peace and also in time of war, if there is no change made in the statute. As soon as the war broke out, of course every officer of the Army was assigned to one duty or another. During the period of our participation in the war officers were sent to France, to Belgium, to Italy, to England, to Siberia, to northern Russia, to Spain, and to other parts of the world on military duty. They were transferred back and forth. Sometimes they were with troops and sometimes they were serving in a category which made it difficult to determine whether or not the service was with troops under the meaning of the statute. Now that they have come back and to all intents and purposes a state of peace, so far as the Army is concerned, has been restored, the department is confronted with the almost hopeless task of finding out how many days or weeks or months each and every officer of the United States Army spent with troops or away from troops in order to determine whether or not he can now be sent on detached service in the United States. To find out exactly how many days every officer serving in the war has spent with troops and add it to the number of days that he spent with troops before we went into the war; to find how many days he was on detached service during the war, what the detached service was, to define it, and add that to the number of days or weeks or months that he had been on detached service before we went into the war is an utterly impossible task. It would require the keeping of a daily diary by every officer of the Army during the war. So the committee has come to the conclusion, at the suggestion of the War Department, that the law which provides that officers shall spend a certain percentage of their time with troops should be rigidly applied should only apply in time of peace, because when war comes the changes, the transfers, and the assignments to duty are so rapid and so innumerable that it is utterly impossible to apply the law.

So this bill provides, in effect, that during a period of war, when all officers, whether they happened to be with troops or not, were contributing to the best of their ability to the defeat of the enemy, whether they happened to be here in the War Department or in the front-line trenches in France, in the city of Paris in liaison work, or in London or in Queenstown or in Siberia or in Italy, or wherever they were, they should all be considered to have been serving with troops. When the emergency is terminated that rule terminates and they go back to the old rule that they must actually serve a certain percentage of their time with troops.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an inquiry, when under this bill or under the interpretation which the War Department places upon it or upon existing law will the emergency cease to exist, if it has not already ceased?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The emergency, of course, can not be deemed to have ceased to exist until so declared by the President.

Mr. KING. This bill would mean that officers now serving in the department, with no possibility, at least for some time, of their serving with the troops, should be regarded as having rendered service with troops?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; during the emergency. It is almost impossible, I will say to the Senator, to draw the line. It can not be drawn rigidly. The whole Army has been mixed up; officers have been sent everywhere and on all kinds of duty; it is a vast kaleidoscope. For instance, if this bill is not passed, many of the student officers in our service schools will have to be taken out of those schools, because under the rigid application of the existing peace-time law, which is now in effect in time of war, they have not served the required time with troops. It is not their fault if during the war itself, while we were in the war, they went where they were ordered to go. As I said before, you would have to require them in advance of our going into any war to keep almost an hourly diary of everything they did during the war, and figure out the number of hours or days they served with troops, and the number of hours or days they served away from troops. In time of war it is mighty hard to define what service with troops is. It may be half a day with troops and half a day away from troops.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that the officers are so disposed not to serve with troops that they want to keep it down to the very hour?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all; but it is to avoid their being compelled to do that, and to avoid making the department search back through the daily record of every officer in the war who is a member of the Regular Establishment, that this bill is introduced. Why, I have yet to find an officer who was not exceedingly anxious to serve with troops; but the trouble is that in time of war you can not define what service with troops is. It is mighty hard.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing in the law, is there, that requires that there shall be just so many months of service with troops?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; two years out of every six.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but there is nothing in the law that says that an officer can not serve three years out of six, is there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it seems to me that this is a relief measure.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a relief measure for the war-time period.

Mr. SMOOT. And, being a relief measure, it points to the fact that the officer would prefer to serve somewhere else than with troops?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; it was not a matter of his preference. He had to go where he was ordered in time of war.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He did not make application to go on service away from troops. He was sent on service away from troops. He may have spent 18 days in the service, and then may have been transferred to another part of the line, or another part of the Army zone, and found himself on service with troops again. Now, you have got to figure out the number of days that he was with troops and the number of days that he was not with troops, and to do that is an impossible task.

Mr. SMOOT. The theory of the bill is that wherever an officer serves exactly two years with troops he is all right. Now, it seems to me that any officer would prefer to be with troops three years than to try to bring it right down to the fact that he had served only two years and one day, or just exactly two years; and I can not see anything in the bill except that it is to take care of the officer who does not want to serve with troops more than two years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; Mr. President, it does not take care of officers that want this or that. It cuts a Gordian knot that can not be cut otherwise. It is not a question of the officer's preference or where he wanted to serve. His preference was not consulted. Under the law as it stands an absolutely accurate estimate must be made as to the number of days, up to and including a total period of two years, during which that officer served with troops. Now, you can not apply that rule in time of war to thousands and thousands of officers.

Mr. SMOOT. In order to be sure that he had served two years out of six; that is all there is to it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly; but it is the department has to obey the law. If this bill does not pass, the Secretary of War must get from every officer who served in the war an absolutely accurate diary, in order to ascertain whether his service in the war with troops, added to his service with troops before the war, aggregates two years; and you can see that it is an impossible thing for him to do. It would take months and months.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make a further inquiry of the Senator? The purpose of this bill, of course, is to give to certain officers greater compensation than they otherwise would obtain.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no. Compensation is not touched at all by it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Is it the same with troops?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why, certainly. The pay of an officer is just exactly the same whether he is serving with or away from troops. This has nothing to do with pay. It is simply to make it possible to administer the detached-service law. In other words, under this bill the detached-service law would be suspended for the period of the war.

Mr. KING. Would it affect the large number of officers who, by special legislation which we enacted recently, were permitted to remain in the service for a period of one year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; only officers of the Regular Army.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that we passed legislation some time ago, under the request of the Secretary of War, in order to wind up the affairs of the Army and to make disposition of vast accumulations of funds and salvage the same. Additional officers were required, and, as I recall, we provided for either twelve or eighteen thousand officers to remain for one year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but those are not Regular Army officers. Those are emergency officers. We authorized the Secretary of War to keep a number of the emergency officers in service to the end of this fiscal year, that number of emergency officers plus the regular officers not to exceed 18,000 in the aggregate. That 18,000 officers' bill has nothing to do with this. These are only regular officers. You try to count up the number of hours a day——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it not mean simply this, that those who have been serving on staff duty during the war—say, two years during the war—will now be eligible to serve on staff duty here? That is the substance of it, is it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In part; yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is not this the point of it, that the department is compelled to require officers to serve with troops for two years, and this is to enable them to find out who is eligible?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; not just that. The law provides that officers must serve with troops two years out of six. Now, war comes along, and the whole list of officers is shuffled up, and men are sent far and wide all over the world. One day they will be with troops, and a week later they may not be with troops. The week after that they may be taken away from troops and sent on some exceedingly important detached service which will consume only three or four or five days. Those little periods will all have to be figured out and counted up for every officer of the Regular Army in order to determine whether or not he has had his two years with troops before he can be assigned to detached service at the termination of the war. Now, you can not figure it out; it can not be done; and the purpose of this bill is to suspend the operation of the detached-service law during the period of the war. It does not make favorites of anybody. It does not suit or meet anybody's preference. They had to go where they were ordered. Sometimes they were with troops, and sometimes they were not; one day on and one day off.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? Is not the purpose of the bill to overcome the provisions of the statute that require an officer to serve with troops, and to be on detached service only for two years at a time? In other words, was it not to prevent officers remaining here in Washington instead of being with their troops? Was not that the purpose of the detached-service law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the fact.

Mr. NELSON. There were so many officers who stayed here in Washington, and got what we call soft snaps, that in order to put a stop to that they enacted this law requiring them to be two years with troops before they could be detached and come here to Washington and have a good time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. NELSON. And this is to overcome that law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; it is not to overcome that law.

Mr. KING. This is to perpetuate that law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think the question was put to me, and perhaps I may answer it.

Mr. KING. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not to overcome that law. The Military Affairs Committee does not want that law repealed. We want it on the statute books. We want to keep it there in time of peace; but when war comes you can not enforce it. It is impossible to make the computation, and this bill is to suspend that law for the period of the war; that is all.

Mr. NELSON. Let me tell the Senator how it strikes me. There were a lot of officers who were kept here in Washington in the departments during the war. They had the benefit of city life. They would like to continue here. They would have to go back now with their regiments or their troops to do service, because they have been away on detached service so long. Now, if we eliminate this law, it simply allows them to stay a little longer around Washington; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that as I understand it, it means that the time that those officers served in Washington is to be credited to the two years' service with the troops that is required out of every six.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; I so understand it.

Mr. SMOOT. And it is just the reverse of what the Senator says.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; I so understand it. This is to give them credit for that as though they were with their troops.

Mr. KING. That is right.

Mr. NELSON. That is what I said.

Mr. SMOOT. I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. It is to give them credit for that service, and to enable them, if this bill becomes a law, to get a new detached service here of two years. It enables a lot of these officers who have been here in Washington and have not been abroad, if they get that counted, to have it counted as though they had been in service with troops, and they can get two years additional of detached service.

Mr. KING. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that a short time ago there were more than 3,000 officers in the city of Washington—and I think there are as many now—many of whom, captains, majors, colonels, and perhaps higher ones, were performing unimportant work, much of it mere clerical work calling for no technical skill or ability and but little responsibility, work that a $100 per month clerk could perform. If this bill is to keep officers here in Washington doing nothing, or next to nothing, I think it is a very improper measure. There ought to be some method provided by which officers will go where they can be of some service to the Government. If we should introduce bills reducing the expenses of the War Department, I think we would be doing better service for the country. During the war we gave to this department unstintingly and, indeed, extravagantly. Now the war is ended, and officials in this department are not fully responding to the spirit of economy which should prevail in all branches of the Government.

For instance, there is a zone depot in New York operated by the War Department. My information is that there were recently 11,000 persons employed in the work of this depot. Two-thirds of the number were clerks, and a large number of heads and chiefs and bosses. There were two clerks for each other employee. My information is that there is inefficiency, waste, and improvidence in the administration of certain branches of the War Department.

I should be glad if the Military Affairs Committee or some efficiency bureau would challenge attention more frequently to the extravagance and inefficiency in the administration of the War Department, and take steps to correct the evil.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am in entire sympathy with the Senator's desire for retrenchment, but I may remind him that this bill does not cost the Government a cent. It has no effect whatever on appropriations, pay, rank, or allowances. It has nothing to do with it.

Just let me read a portion of a paragraph in the report submitted by the Secretary of War:

> The kinds of service that took officers from their organizations before the war were few compared with those that took them away during the war, and the difficulties in deciding whether service performed prior to the war amounted to detached service would naturally be multiplied a thousandfold during the war by reason of the conditions of service which then obtained. It will be impossible to anticipate what may be shown by the records kept in France, England, and Siberia with reference to the kind of service that officers have performed, but it is safe to say that it will be a long time after the emergency has terminated before the war-time records can be made available for the purpose of ascertaining the nature of the services rendered by officers during the war. Nothing satisfactory nor dependable would result from calling on each officer of the Regular Army to furnish a report of his services during the war, for the reason that in most cases officers would not be able to furnish the necessary reports without consulting records which would not be available to them. The result would be that it would be scarcely possible for any commanding officer of any grade or in any position to detail an officer on detached duty without incurring the risk of stoppage of pay—

Which is the penalty under the law that we are now trying to suspend for the period of the war—

For violation of the detached-service law.

An officer comes back from France, having been there 18 months. He may have gone over with a combat division; he may have served with that division for one month and three days—he forgets just how long he has been with that division, but perhaps it is a little over a month—he is then detached and sent down to Italy to be a supply officer for a while with the regiment of Infantry we had with the Italian Army. He stays there perhaps two months and six days—he can not remember just when or how long—and he is detached from there and sent back to France, and serves three more weeks with another combat division with troops. Then again he is detached and sent to General Staff headquarters for some special purpose for two or three weeks more. From there he may be sent to Belgium, this all being in time of war. He goes where he is sent. He may be in Belgium two months; he may be sent over to England on some important mission, and be there two weeks, and come back and rejoin his old regiment or another regiment or a different branch of the combat service.

That has happened in thousands and thousands of cases, and you can not calculate it all out; and unless you do calculate it all out and get it absolutely accurate, no officer returning from France can be put upon detached service in this country, for if it should be proved years from now that he had been on detached service too long during the war to enable him to be put on detached service when he gets back from the war, the man who so put him on detached service forfeits all his pay and allowances. It is an impossible situation.

People are apt to take great joy in talking about the officers here in Washington; but it is not only the officers here in Washington, it is the officers of the whole Regular Army who may have been serving all over the world, sometimes with troops, sometimes away from troops; and there are some classes of services that have not been defined as belonging with troops or without troops.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire of the Senator from New York whether the objection which has been urged to the bill could not be met by adding to it the following:

Except such as are performed in the city of Washington.

Would not the purpose of the original act thus be preserved?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think that would be an injustice. Why discriminate against the officers who were ordered to Washington? It was not their fault.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The original act discriminated against them. It was intended to discriminate against them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; in time of peace the Congress saw fit to lay down a rule governing the War Department, and the intent was really to make a rule to govern in time of peace, so that certain groups of officers could not be anchored here in Washington and stay on indefinitely. But in time of war, it seems to me, Congress might well let the Commander in Chief assign officers to serve where and when they are needed; and that is the purpose of this bill. I do not believe it would be just or right to pass this bill and insert in it an exception. Why not include Hoboken, the great port of embarkation? Why not include Newport News or Charleston or New Orleans and say it shall not apply to officers who were assigned to any of those places?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It would not interfere with the assignment of these officers in time of peace at all, but if they had served during the war in the city of Washington it would then be necessary for them to be assigned elsewhere.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The present law does not say anything about their not serving in Washington more than two years.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand; but we all understand that that was the real purpose of the original act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was its main purpose; but it also applies to any headquarters of a department. It applies to Governors Island, it applies to Chicago, San Francisco, or wherever there is a headquarters of a department with an administrative staff. It applies to officers serving in the Ordnance Department or in the Quartermaster Corps. Their service is not with troops. They may be going right along behind the troops and supplying them, but their service is staff service, and they must serve two years out of every six with troops, and those services are not included. I do not think you can make an exception in any case. Mr. President, I have nothing more to say about the bill. I did not mean to take so much time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have such confidence in the Senator from New York, who gives earnest attention to the measures coming from his committee, that I do not feel at liberty to vote against this bill or to oppose its consideration; but I do hope the Senator will pardon me if I again invite his attention to what I conceive to be the extravagance of the War Department. Only recently—and this is only one very small item out of a multitude which could be brought to the attention of his committee—certain officers of the War Department made a requisition for trucks to cost approximately a million dollars, notwithstanding the fact that there were hundreds of trucks owned by the Government, many of which had never been used or cared for by the department.

I called the attention of the Senator a moment ago to the situation of the zone depot in New York, where there are thousands of unnecessary employees, and to several divisions of the War Department here where there are thousands of unnecessary clerks and employees. It seems impossible to get the officials in charge of those divisions or bureaus to reduce as they should the army of supernumeraries; and unless the committee takes the matter in hand and compels reductions, or unless the Appropriations Committees of the Senate and the House refuse to make appropriations, the War Department, as well as other departments—and the War Department seems to be one of the greatest offenders—will continue in service the thousands of unnecessary clerks, functionaries, and employees.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARRIAGE IN THE ARMY AND NAVY.

The bill (S. 3245) to regulate the marriage of persons in the military and naval forces of the United States in foreign countries, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 9, to strike out the word "or" and to strike out the semicolon following the words "Marine Corps" and insert "or Coast Guard"; on page 2, line 1, to strike out the words "Coast Guard"; on page 4, line 12, after the word "Navy," to insert the words "or of the Coast Guard"; on page 4, line 25, to strike out the amount "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000"; on page 5, line 1, to strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one"; on page 6, line 7, after the word "contracted," to insert the words "or shall be forwarded to the head of the department under which the Coast Guard is operating for file in the records of that department, if such certificate shall relate to the marriage of a person in the Coast Guard," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of this act, unless the context otherwise requires—

The term "person in the military or naval forces" shall be held to include:

(a) Every person, whether commissioned, warranted, appointed, enlisted, enrolled, drafted, or serving otherwise in the Army, Navy, the Marine Corps, or Coast Guard;

(b) Every person, whether commissioned, warranted, appointed, enlisted, enrolled, drafted, or serving otherwise in the Lighthouse Service, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service; serving, pursuant to law, with the Army or the Navy.

SEC. 2. That the term "person in an auxiliary organization" shall be held to include every male or female citizen of the United States attached to and serving with any one or more of the following, namely: American Red Cross, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association, Salvation Army, Knights of Columbus, and Hebrew Welfare Board, and with any other similar civil auxiliary organization engaged in the work of aiding or entertaining the forces of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the term "foreign service" shall be held to include all service outside the limits of the United States, its Territories and possessions; and the term "foreign country" shall be held to include any country other than the United States, its Territories and possessions.

SEC. 4. That every person in the military or naval forces of the United States while on foreign service, or in an auxiliary organization functioning in connection with the military or naval forces of the United States in a foreign country, shall, prior to contracting marriage in any foreign country, execute and subscribe an affidavit, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, in duplicate, before an officer of the military or naval forces of the United States authorized to administer oaths, in which affidavit the person desiring to marry shall make oath that he has attained the age of 21 years, if male, or that she has attained the age of 18 years, if female, and that he or she is unmarried, and knows of no reason why he or she may not lawfully contract matrimony, and said affidavit shall further contain a complete description of affiant, the date and place of his or her entry into the military or naval forces of the United States, or into the auxiliary organization of which he or she is a member, a statement as to whether he or she is a natural born or naturalized citizen of the United States, and if natural born said affidavit shall state the date and place of his or her birth, and if naturalized it shall state the date and place of naturalization; and such other matters as may be specified in the regulations that may be prescribed to carry into effect the provisions of this act: Provided, That an alien serving in the military or naval forces of the United States on foreign service shall be subject to the provisions of this act in like manner and under like conditions and penalties as a native-born citizen so serving: Provided further, That the officer in command of the unit to which the person making the affidavit is attached shall immediately after the making of said affidavit cause the available records of said unit to be examined and, if such examination does not disclose that any of the statements in said affidavit are untrue, shall thereupon certify that he believes the statements therein to be true, and that he is one of the superior officers of the affiant. One original copy of said affidavit and certificate shall be filed with and become a part of the records of the unit to which the affiant is attached and the other original copy thereof, together with a translation of the same in the language spoken in the country where said affidavit is made and certified to be a true translation by the officer before whom the affidavit was made, shall be delivered to the person making the affidavit.

SEC. 5. That all officers of the Army or of the Navy or of the Coast Guard of the United States who are now, or may hereafter be, authorized to administer oaths for any purpose are hereby authorized to administer the oaths required to be made by this act.

SEC. 6. That any person in the military or naval forces of the United States on foreign service, or in an auxiliary organization functioning in connection with the military or naval forces of the United States in a foreign country, who shall contract marriage in such foreign country in violation of the provisions of this act, shall, upon indictment, trial, and conviction thereof in the district court of the United States in the district in which he or she may be found, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment in a penitentiary for not more than one year, or both, and any such person who shall knowingly make any false statement in the affidavit herein provided for with reference to any matter herein prescribed to be contained in such affidavit shall be deemed to be guilty of perjury, and upon indictment, trial, and conviction in the district court of the United States in the district in which he or she may be found shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment in a penitentiary for not more than 10 years, or both.

SEC. 7. That a copy of either of the originals of said affidavit hereinbefore provided for, when duly certified by its official custodian, shall constitute prima facie proof of the fact that the statements therein contained were made, subscribed, and sworn to by the person whose name is affixed thereto as maker thereof, and that the person purporting to administer the oath was authorized so to do.

SEC. 8. That a copy of the certificate of any marriage contracted in accordance with the provisions of this act, when certified by the minister of foreign affairs of the country in which such marriage shall have been entered into, shall, when forwarded to the Secretary of State of the United States, be by him transmitted to the Secretary of War for file in the records of the War Department, provided such certificate shall relate to the marriage of a person in the military forces, or a person in an auxiliary organization serving with such forces at the time the marriage was contracted, or shall be forwarded to the Secretary of the Navy for file in the records of the Navy Department, if such certificate shall relate to the marriage of a person in the naval forces, or a person in an auxiliary organization serving with such forces at the time the marriage was contracted, or shall be forwarded to the head of the department under which the Coast Guard is then operating for file in the records of that department, if such certificate shall relate to the marriage of a person in the Coast Guard, and a copy of any such certificate so filed, shall, when authenticated in the manner prescribed by section 882 of the Revised Statutes, be admissible in any court of law or equity as prima facie evidence of the marriage therein certified.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, before the bill is passed, will the Senator from New York give us some information in regard to it? I do not know that I have any objection to it, but it is rather far-reaching.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can best explain the necessity for this legislation by referring to the committee report, which contains the letter of the Secretary of War. I shall read just a portion of it, and then I think the measure will be clearly understood. His letter states:

You are doubtless aware that the laws of France relative to the capability of persons desirous of contracting marriage are exceedingly complex and call for many official documents showing the past history of the candidates for marriage and which will legally establish the facts that such person is unmarried. It was soon evident that with our Army it was in many cases impossible to comply with the French laws on the subject—

That is, American soldiers simply could not produce these records—

Yet you will understand that in most cases our men would be unfamiliar with the French laws on the subject, and when the persons concerned desired to marry it would be found that the marriage could not be performed, as the necessary documents could not be produced by members of our forces.

* * * * * * *

Consequently an agreement was entered into by the Department of State with the Government of France waiving the excessive requirements of the French law and substituting in place thereof an affidavit setting forth that the person concerned was legally capable of contracting marriage.

The Government of France, while agreeing to this arrangement, is of the opinion that in case such affidavit contains a false statement specific punishment should be provided by law for making such false affidavit, and this bill (S. 3245) was proposed in order that prosecution could be made of such persons either in the Government service or after they had left such service, provided they were still within the jurisdiction of the United States, such person, of course, not being liable to punishment by foreign courts when without the jurisdiction of the country in question.

The proposed bill has not been limited to marriages in France, but has purposely been made broad enough to cover all countries in which our forces may happen to serve in peace or in war, thus giving a statute which it is hoped will govern our forces for all time.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 3184.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Moses	Smith, Md.
Ball	Harding	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Harris	New	Smoot
Beckham	Harrison	Newberry	Spencer
Calder	Henderson	Norris	Sutherland
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Thomas
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Trammell
Colt	Kendrick	Page	Underwood
Culberson	Kenyon	Phelan	Wadsworth
Curtis	Keyes	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	King	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Dillingham	Kirby	Pomerene	Warren
Edge	Lenroot	Ransdell	Williams
France	Lodge	Robinson
Gay	McKellar	Sheppard
Gronna	McNary	Smith, Ga.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce passed over will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 17, after line 23, strike out:

(e) That the licensee shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the commission. When licenses are issued that contemplate the use of Government dams or other structures owned by the United States, in the discretion of the commission, the charges to be paid by the licensee may be readjusted at the end of 20 years after the beginning of operations and at periods of not less than 10 years thereafter, in a manner to be described in each license.

And in lieu thereof insert:

That the licensee shall pay for the license herein granted such reasonable annual charges as may be fixed by the commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the cost of administration of the act in relation to water powers developed under its jurisdiction, in the proportion that the water power developed by the project covered by said license bears to the total water power developed by all projects licensed under the act, and for that purpose such charges may be readjusted from time to time, not oftener than once in two years; the licensee shall also pay for the use and occupation of any public lands and lands in reservations, except tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations, necessary for the development of the project covered by the license such reasonable annual charges based upon the actual value of the Government lands used as may be fixed by the commission; but in no event shall the annual charge for the foregoing exceed 25 cents per developed horsepower: Provided, That when licenses are issued involving the use of Government dams or other structures owned by the United States or tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations the commission shall fix a reasonable annual charge for the use thereof, and such charges may be readjusted at the end of 20 years after the beginning of operations and at periods of not less than 10 years thereafter in a manner to be described in each license.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, before the amendment is voted upon I wish to recall to the Senate that it is the amendment which I discussed the other day at some length. Its only purpose is to deprive the Government under any conditions or circumstances from exacting anything more than a nominal compensation for the privilege granted by the license. If the committee amendment is adopted it will be a clear gift of hundreds of millions of dollars to the water-power corporations of the country, without any return to the public.

It will be remembered that the conferees of the two Houses at the last session agreed upon a conference report on a similar bill, and that conference report, so far as compensation is concerned, was substantially in the language of the House bill which the Senate committee amendment seeks to amend. Under the House bill as it will stand, if the committee amendment is not agreed to, discretion is vested in the commission to make a charge for the power produced under the license. Now, it is said that this will be a charge upon the consumer, but I pointed out the other day that there are many, many cases where the consumer will not get the benefit of a nominal rate, and to fail to exact charge is merely to make a gift, without any consideration whatever to licensees under the bill and of something for which they themselves did not ask at the last session of Congress. I should like to know how any Senator can justify a provision depriving the Government of the United States from seeking compensation amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars when it is not necessary, in order to secure the development of the water powers of the country.

There are two classes of cases where a nominal charge can not be reflected in the rate charged to the consumer or to the public. It is a giving of a special privilege to this class of corporations, and nothing more. Let me give the two illustrations that I gave the other day.

Take the case of a city using, we will say, 10,000 horsepower per day, produced by steam at a cost of $20 per horsepower. There is a demand in that city for an additional 5,000 horsepower, and there is a water-power project that will produce that additional 5,000 horsepower. Suppose the bill is passed and some one gets the license to produce that 5,000 horsepower to meet the increasing demands in the city and that water power can be produced for $10 per horsepower. Does anyone think for a moment that with two-thirds of the consumers in the city using steam power and one-third using water power there will be one rate for one-third of the people of the city and a rate twice as high for the other two-thirds? Of course not. The rate will be the same, and it will be measured by the highest horsepower cost that is furnished to the city. The result is that any public-utility commission in the country would permit a water-power utility to charge for the water power, that it produced at a cost of $10 per year, the same rate that is charged for the steam power, costing $20 per year. The result is that there is a gift to the company over and above a reasonable return upon the investment; there is a gift to them of $10 per horsepower per year. Who will stand here and justify that kind of a gift over and beyond a reasonable return to the public utility?

There is another class of cases that no regulating commission can by any possibility take care of, and that is the case where there is a water-power utility which gets a license under the bill and creates a vast amount of power, and alongside of that dam that utility organizes a manufacturing corporation producing fertilizer or fixed nitrogen. The only competition there is to-day is Chilean nitrate. They can charge what they please up to what the cost of the Chilean nitrate comes to. Suppose they get a license. The purpose of the production of that power is not to be sold to the general public to be regulated by a public-utility commission, but it is for the purpose of using that power themselves in manufacturing. Will anyone say that a State commission regulating the price that the utility company shall charge itself for the power that it itself uses affords any protection to the public? Of course not. There is another illustration where the only return that the public can receive is in the imposition of a charge.

What reason is there for giving to the companies millions of dollars that they never asked for at the last session of Congress? We talk about the development of the water powers of the country in the interest of the people, and I am heartily in accord with that, but if we have water powers in the country, and we have, and private capital is to develop them, there should be no further inducement to that private capital than is necessary to secure the development. They are entitled to a fair return, they are entitled to a liberal return, but when they have that, if we are representing the public interest here and not the water-power interests, we will take care to see that the public will get the benefit of these water powers in the United States.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope that the Senate committee amendment will not be agreed to, and I desire a yea-and-nay vote upon the proposition in order that Senators may go on record upon it. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, a favorite way of arguing sometimes is to state an extravagant and unreasonable case and then to hold it up in holy horror and point out how dangerous it would be to do what is proposed to be done. Now, what are the facts? As a matter of law, aside from purposes of navigation, the use of the water in the different streams of the several States belongs to the people of those States and not to the Federal Government. The argument insisted upon amounts to this: That the Federal Government is to sell and to make a charge for water that does not belong to it, but which belongs to the people of the States.

The Supreme Court long ago, more than 100 years ago, if I recall correctly, or nearly that long ago, in the New Jersey case laid down the principle in reference to navigable waters that such waters belong to the people of the several States, and the interest of the Federal Government in them is only that incident to conserving navigation and commerce.

The Senator from Wisconsin insinuates that under the amendment the bill proposes to give away millions of dollars of the Nation's resources. It proposes nothing of the kind. The people of the States where water powers are to be developed will get the benefit of the development. We say in the amendment—and that is the principle involved—that where a dam is built by private capital, not by the money of the United States, aside from administrative expenses, the expenses of approving the plans and specifications and supervising the work, the Federal Government shall charge for no other expense; that if there is any charge to be made, the authority to impose it lies in the people of the several States. More than that, every time a charge is added, the power developed is made more costly and expensive to the consumer.

The Senator has referred to a few isolated cases that may exist in the country where there may be water-power development near an electric-light plant which is operated by steam. Those cases are very few and far between. I desire to say that where water power is developed and electric power is thereby secured in the neighborhood, it is not likely that any steam plant will be started in competition with it, for it can not compete with it.

I am in favor of the amendment, and so is a majority of the committee, because we believe that the people of the States are the ones who are interested in and are entitled to compensation. We believe that the people of the States should have the benefit of it in two ways: First, if they desire to make a charge for the use of the water, let them make it, but they can reach it in another and better way; that is, by regulating, as the bill proposes, the charge for furnishing electric power.

Why should the Federal Government charge the people of the States for the use of water which belongs to them, where the development is brought about by the capital of the people of the State? Why should the Government charge more than for the expenses involved in such a case?

Mr. President, it is said that there is a water-power trust; that is continually held up before us. I have not seen any water-power people; none of them has ever labored with me since I came to Congress. Long before this bill was pending, when Mr. Roosevelt sent in his letter to the Committee on Commerce, our committee investigated the subject and came to the conclusion that where, by private capital, a dam was built that did not interfere with navigation but rather promoted it, then, and in that event, outside of the administrative expenses, whatever charges were to be made for the use of the water were to inure to the people of the States in one form or another; either directly, if you choose, by way of compensation, or indirectly—which, perhaps, would be the most usual course—by reduced rates.

What is the object of this proposition? It is to give a commission here in Washington authority to exact millions in fees out of the people of the States who have long been waiting to secure water-power development. It is to force millions into the Treasury of the United States. Where the Government itself builds a dam, it is right enough to impose a charge for the Government's money invested in it; but in a case where the Government does not invest a penny, and where the enterprise is really in aid of navigation, I ask why should the people of the States be mulcted and made to pay to the Federal Government for property which the Federal Government does not own?

It can not be gainsaid or denied by any decision of the Supreme Court or any legal authority in this country that, aside from the purposes of commerce and navigation, the use of the water in the several States belongs to the people of the States. If it belongs to the people of the States, why should the Government take the property of the people of the States, sell it to them, and make them pay for it?

In cases where we give the Government control and say no dam shall be constructed without the consent of the Government, that is done for the purpose of giving the Government control of navigation. When we require that the plans and specifications shall be submitted to the Government, we do so in order to see that the Government's wishes in respect to navigation are carried out.

We provide in this amendment that all expenses which the Federal Government incurs in connection with water-power development constructed by private capital shall be reimbursed to the Federal Government so far as the expenses of examining and approving the plan, supervising the work, and seeing that it is executed properly are concerned. Beyond that we leave the property of the State to the State, with the authority in the State to determine whether a charge shall be imposed or a reduction of rates effected. It goes without saying that all the burdens put upon water power in these cases will ultimately come out of the consumer in one form or another. Throughout our country we have valuable water powers which, when developed, the several States can regulate by fixing the rate to be charged for the use of such power. If the Federal Government is not allowed to exact tribute or royalty or tolls, as it has been insisted by one class of men in this country it should exact, the consumers in the States will get the benefit.

It does no good to hold up a scarecrow and say "we are giving away millions." The Federal Government is not giving away any of its property; it is simply consenting that the people of the several States may use their own without paying tribute to the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I do not care about entering further into the discussion of this subject. I have gone through it time and again; I have written several reports, both as a member of the Committee on Commerce and as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary; I have investigated this question from end to end; and I have never yet found any legal authority for the contention that the waters in the navigable streams in this country, outside of commerce and navigation, belong to the Federal Government.

Reference has been made to the Chandler-Dunbar case; but in that case Congress passed an act declaring that all the water in the stream involved and all of the land beyond the canal strip and the international boundary was needed for the purposes of navigation, and hence that the Federal Government had a right to take it, because they did so not for water-power purposes but for the purposes of navigation.

Mr. President, I have briefly stated my views on this question, and they are the views, I think, of most men who have given the legal question any study. Much has been made of the fact that State utilities commissions and the States themselves would not be apt to reduce rates. That is assuming that the authorities of the States will fail to do their duty. In connection with that assumption is another one to which I have already referred, namely, that in the case of many water-power projects there will also be power plants generated by steam. That will happen only in a very few cases. As I said a moment ago, if a water-power plant is installed in the first instance, affording the people the cheap power which they ought to have, steam power will never be installed side by side with it.

Mr. President, in this contention I am for the rights of the public and of the people of the States. It is untrue that we are making a gift to any water-power trust, as Senators insinuate. We are, I repeat, simply giving the people of the States what is their own, for which they do not owe a thing to the Federal Government. It is simply because the Federal Government controls navigation that the people of the States have to come to Congress and ask consent to develop water powers on navigable streams. Because of that element the argument is made, "Oh, yes; we will give you consent; but, if you want consent, you have got to pay for this whole thing, for the use of the entire power," as though it belonged to the Government of the United States. "We admit that the States have some property in these waters, but inasmuch as you come here and want the privilege of building dams you must pay for the entire value of the power created, regardless of the question whether or not it belongs to the Federal Government."

I can not agree to any such doctrine. While I am as strongly in favor as any other Senator of sustaining the Federal Government in peace and in war and at all times, I am equally interested in sustaining the power and authority and interests of the several States. Our Union can only exist and be perpetuated as the fathers ordained it by according not only to the Federal Government its just rights but by according to the several States of the Union and the people of those States the rights and the property that belong to them.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the legal right of the Government to charge a license fee. I believe that will be conceded. I am not going to enter into a controversy with the Senator from Minnesota on the proposition that the water does not belong to the Government of the United States; but I do contend that since the dams can not be constructed and these water-power propositions developed without the consent of the Federal Government, the Federal Government has a legal right and a moral right to grant the concessions on such terms as it may see fit. It follows, therefore, that it has a right to charge if it wants to.

I would be the last man in the world to make even any charge if in all cases the people of the country got the full benefit. I do not, however, agree with the contention that is made that the people will get the full benefit. There might be instances where they would; but the Senator from Wisconsin, I think, has very clearly pointed out by way of illustration two or three instances where it would not be done.

There are a great many other illustrations that might be given. It does not necessarily follow, because part of the power, we will say, for a city, is developed by steam and part by water, that that is the only instance. It may be, and it is true, that a great many instances where the rates to be charged must be the same come from the development of various water powers in addition to steam; and one may be expensive, and the other much less expensive.

In the case that the Senator from Wisconsin puts, where a part of the power for a city, let us say, is developed by steam and costs $20 a horsepower, and the balance of the power is developed by water that costs $10 a horsepower, when the civil authorities of that State come to fix the charge that the consumers of that power or that light must pay to the company that develops it, they can not fix two rates. It must be one rate, and they must fix a rate that will enable the company in developing the power to make a reasonable interest return on the investment in the steam plant. When they do that they give them an exorbitant profit on that part of the power that is developed by water.

The Senator from Minnesota says we are taking it away from the people. Let us see. Take that illustration. Who is going to get the difference? Why, of course, it follows that the corporation or the individual or the partnership developing the power, owning the steam plant and the water power is going to get it, and upon the water-power part of the development it is going to make an enormous profit. The people are not going to get the benefit of it. The people are going to pay according to the investment in the steam plant, the more expensive part of the power that is necessary to give them electricity.

Now, how are you going to give it to the people? The method provided by the House bill, the proposition argued by the Senator from Wisconsin, is in my judgment the only way in which you can give it to the people. Let this commission in that case charge a rate for a license for the development of the power that comes from the water that will be sufficient to make up the difference; otherwise the company developing the water power would make all of the difference, and the people of the immediate vicinity would get no benefit whatever from it.

How do the people get it? Later on in this bill, unless another Senate amendment is agreed to that I think ought not to be agreed to, it is provided how this license money gets back to the people. It is turned over to the reclamation fund, to the national forests, and to some other activities, all going to the benefit of the people. Otherwise, the water-power people get it, and the public get nothing.

There are a great many instances where water power is developed in some system from various dams where perhaps steam has nothing to do with it. One is expensive, and the other is not; but, since they are combined and used in the same business, whatever it may be—it may not be a municipality; it may be sold to private users without the instrumentality of a municipality—although it costs in one case twice as much as in another, the rate to be charged must be the same. This device that is in the House bill, and which the Senate amendment would take away, enables the commission to equalize that, and to give back to the people in the way of a license fee that which in one case would otherwise give them an exorbitant profit.

I agree with the Senator from Minnesota that I want to get this to the people just as nearly as possible at cost; and if we could have a case—and there will be many such—where the development of a water power probably will supply some section of the country completely, and it will not come in competition with steam power or with some other water power that costs more money to develop it, it will be the duty of the commission in that case to charge a license fee that will be nominal, probably. The people in that case get the benefit of it; but in order to safeguard it and let the people get the benefit of it in every case, it seems to me it is absolutely necessary that the commission should have the authority, and should exercise it, to charge a license fee according to the conditions of each particular project and each particular locality that must be supplied.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], for whom, of course, I have the highest respect, does not seem to distinguish between the people of a State and a water-power corporation within that State. During the course of his argument he assumed that a gift to a water-power corporation was a gift to the people. I am not going to stand in my place here and argue that a water-power corporation, a water-power utility, and the people of a State are the same thing.

The Senator from Minnesota argues that we are depriving the people of a State of something under this amendment. Why, Mr. President, we are doing nothing but saving to the people of a State some of the benefits of a resource over which that State, as a member of this Union, has control and giving it to special privilege, and you can not get away from it.

The Senator says we have no right, either legal or equitable, to exact a charge when we are only giving our consent, and in the very next breath he admits that the Government itself might erect every one of these dams and make a charge. What is a licensee under this bill but an agent of the State? And if the Government itself could build these dams and make a charge for the power produced, why can it not and why should it not say to its agents, "Instead of your having all that the Government might make out of this dam, you shall only have a portion of it and the people of the United States shall retain the balance"?

The Senator made the old argument that the consumer would have to pay a higher rate. If this discretion is vested in the commission—and that is all that is proposed in the House bill—I do not want to see anything more than a nominal charge in any case where there is a general distribution of the power, based upon a rate that will afford only a fair return upon the capital invested; but I do want the commission to exercise that discretion, so as to prevent these utilities in addition to getting this fair return from making exorbitant returns out of the people of this country.

No, Mr. President, in my judgment there can be no defense for the Senate amendment; and with all due respect to the Senator from Minnesota, if one stands here representing the public interest I do not see how he can support this Senate amendment. It is true that these water-power interests want to get all they can. I do not blame them for that. We are the ones that are to blame if we give them all that they ask for, and it ought to be a sufficient standard or guide as to how much it is necessary to give them to secure development when they said less than a year ago that they were willing to develop the water powers of this country, with the right of the commission to make a charge, just exactly as I now propose. Does the Senator from Minnesota now give any reason why we should give these interests special privileges greater than they were asking for last March? And if no reason exists, how can any Senator justify his vote for this Senate amendment?

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I repel the insinuation in the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that we who advocate this principle represent the water-power corporations or their interest. I have been in public life a good many years, and I never have had the insinuation thrown up against me, directly or indirectly, that I represented any special interest or had been willing to turn over the property of this Government into their hands. I have always, in my service here, aimed to protect not only the Government of the United States but the rights of the people of the several States, and when the Senator says he can not see how any man can vote for this amendment he implies that the side that takes his view of the case is the only just side, and that the other side is morally wrong. That kind of an argument does not appeal to me, and I simply rise to protest against that form of argument.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NELSON. I am through.

Mr. LENROOT. I just want to say that, of course, I never said nor did I ever intend to intimate that the Senator from Minnesota represented any special interest. I know him better than that. We all know him better than that. I merely said, and I reiterate, that the position he takes, however honest it may be, is clearly in the interest of the water-power companies, and, in my judgment, against the interest of the public. I have a right to my opinion. He, of course, has a right to his.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been requested. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NEWBERRY (when his name was called.) I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KENDRICK. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. If present he would vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I inquire if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Then I withhold my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. EDGE. Has the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. EDGE. In his absence I will withhold my vote. If permitted to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] on account of illness.

Mr. WALSH of Montana (after having voted in the negative). I voted, not knowing of the absence of my pair, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I notice the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. In his absence I voted inadvertently. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and let my vote stand.

Mr. BALL. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] are detained from the Senate on account of illness in their families.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] is absent on public business.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—28.

Ball	Edge	Nelson	Spencer
Bankhead	Hale	New	Sterling
Borah	Harding	Overman	Sutherland
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Underwood
Calder	Lodge	Phipps	Wadsworth
Chamberlain	McNary	Sherman	Warren
Colt	Moses	Smoot	Watson

NAYS—29.

Beckham	Henderson	McKellar	Thomas
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Trammell
Dial	Kendrick	Nugent	Walsh, Mass.
Gay	Kenyon	Phelan	Walsh, Mont.
Gerry	Keyes	Ransdell	Williams
Gronna	King	Sheppard
Harris	Kirby	Smith, Ga.
Harrison	Lenroot	Stanley

NOT VOTING—38.

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	McLean	Shields
Culberson	Gore	Myers	Simmons
Cummins	Hitchcock	Newberry	Smith, Ariz.
Curtis	Johnson, Calif.	Owen	Smith, Md.
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Elkins	Kellogg	Pittman	Swanson
Fall	Knox	Poindexter	Townsend
Fernald	La Follette	Pomerene	Wolcott
Fletcher	McCormick	Reed
France	McCumber	Robinson

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to reserve the right for a vote upon this amendment when the bill reaches the Senate.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 19, line 16, to strike out "50" and insert "200," so as to read "not more than 200 horsepower."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 20, in line 21, after the word "prohibited," to strike out the remainder of the paragraph and to insert:

In issuing licenses for a minor part only of a complete project, or for a complete project of not more than 200 horsepower capacity, the commission may, in its discretion, waive such conditions, provisions, and requirements of this act, except the license period of 50 years, as it may deem to be to the public interest to waive under the circumstances.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I was called out on official business and was unable to be present at the former vote. At this time I suggest an amendment to the chairman, and hope he may be able to accept it. I move to amend by adding at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That the provisions hereof shall not apply to lands within an Indian reservation.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment passed over is on page 26. All the amendments are agreed to except on line 20, before the words "then the commission," where the committee inserted "which is accepted."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, an amendment was adopted the other day, offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], which covered a part, but not entirely all, of the provision from the word "Provided," in line 17, page 26, down to the word "then," in line 20. In order that I may perfect the amendment, I move to reconsider the vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I now offer as a substitute for that amendment the following:

Provided, That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over, or does not issue a license to a new licensee, or tender a new license to the original licensee, upon the terms and conditions aforesaid, which is accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. This is not a substitute for the amendment that was reconsidered. If the Senator will strike out the words "which is accepted" it will be, but the words "which is accepted" have never been agreed to, and we can take up that amendment later.

Mr. NELSON. There are other words that were not in the amendment. The words "upon the terms and conditions" were not in the amendment. I offer a substitute for the whole paragraph from the word "Provided" down to the word "then," in line 20.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, is it in order to offer in lieu an amendment that covers two lines of a long proviso, a substitute that covers the entire paragraph, which contains amendments that have been proposed and have never been acted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is first on the amendment which has been reconsidered.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the question. Now, the Senator from Minnesota offers an amendment which he terms a substitute, which is not a substitute for that amendment, but is a substitute for the entire proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment which was reconsidered.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. I am in favor of that.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment having been reconsidered, of course the question before the Senate is as the Chair states, but the Senator from Minnesota offers a substitute for the amendment now before the Senate, and under the rules he has a right to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has a right to offer it, but not as a substitute. The Secretary will read the proviso.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not issue a license to a new licensee or tender a new license to the original licensee——

Mr. SMOOT. "Upon the terms and conditions."

Mr. NELSON. That is as far as the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] went. My substitute includes that and then includes the words "upon the terms and conditions aforesaid" and the words "which is accepted." The amendment is now before the Senate and I have a right to offer a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a substitute for the amendment, but the Senator, as the Chair understands, offers in addition to that to amend the text.

Mr. SMOOT. To bring the question directly before the Senate, if the Senator will offer an amendment to that amendment by adding the words "upon the terms and conditions aforesaid, which is accepted "——

Mr. LENROOT. "Which is accepted" is already pending as a Senate committee amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I offer that as an amendment or substitute. A substitute is simply an amendment. I offer it as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and it differs from that in including the words "upon the terms and conditions aforesaid, which are accepted."

Mr. LENROOT. Why should the Senator be unwilling to let the Senate act separately upon the words "which are accepted"? There is no objection to his proposal for the substitution of those words. Why should the Senator be unwilling to have the Senate have a yea-and-nay vote on the words "which is accepted"?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I suggest that the Senator can accomplish that by asking for a division of the question?

Mr. LENROOT. That probably can be done, but may we have the Secretary read the proviso as it would read if adopted?

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in the event that the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not issue a license to a new licensee or tender a license to the original licensee upon the terms and conditions aforesaid—

Mr. LENROOT. Let us adopt that.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not allow the Senator from Minnesota to make a motion now to amend the amendment? The result will be exactly the same. If we vote to accept the amendment to the amendment it then becomes a part of the amendment, and then it will be adopted as a whole.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] does not understand the parliamentary situation to be the same as that disclosed by what the Clerk has read. The proviso read by the Clerk as the amendment would be agreed to does not contain the words "which is accepted." If the Chair holds that the Senator from Minnesota has the right to offer what he has offered as a substitute, then I want to have an opportunity to make a motion to amend the substitute by striking out the words "which is accepted."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the amendment offered by the committee inserting the words "which is accepted" is the question now pending.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Chair, but the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] did not understand it that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment which was adopted has been reconsidered and the Senator from Minnesota has offered a substitute for the amendment heretofore adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Chair hold that he can do that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all I want to know. That makes it clear.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question but that the Senator from Minnesota can offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He can offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Utah. Here we have a committee amendment pending, the words "which is accepted." Suppose the Senator from Minnesota offers his amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Montana, why do we want to have the amendment pending to the amendment of the Senator from Montana, and have also pending the committee amendment? We ought to have one vote on it and let that end it. I do not care at which place it comes, but I do not think it is quite fair to propose it first as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Montana, when there is already pending before the Senate a committee amendment. Why not adopt the amendment of the Senator from Montana, and then we will come to the other amendment that is pending and can vote on it, and it will show the sense of the Senate when that vote is taken.

Mr. SMOOT. If we adopt the amendment now, then the amendment can not be offered to that amendment in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes; a substitute can be offered for the whole thing.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; a substitute can be offered for the whole thing, but we have already passed upon all of it except the three words "which is accepted."

Mr. LENROOT. No; that is not true. The Senator has an amendment to which there is no objection, inserting "upon such terms and conditions."

Mr. SMOOT. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Montana adds the words "upon the terms and conditions aforesaid."

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was hardly correct when he said "which is accepted" is the only question.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all there is in dispute here.

Mr. NELSON. If the amendment of the Senator from Montana is read it will be found that it covers everything as the bill was reported, except the words "upon the terms and conditions aforesaid" and the words "which is accepted." Those are the two clauses added. He offered that amendment to the proviso. I moved to reconsider the amendment, and it was reconsidered. Now I have a right to offer an amendment to that amendment or to move a substitute for it as an entirety.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator offer it as a substitute?

Mr. NELSON. I offer it as a substitute.

Mr. LENROOT. Then I ask for a vote upon the pending committee amendment before the substitute is voted upon. We have a right to perfect it first.

Mr. NORRIS. The Chair has held that he could not offer it.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Chair is right as to the substitute but not as to the amendment. If the Senator from Minnesota desires to offer it as an amendment to the amendment, then it would be within the rule.

Mr. NELSON. That is what I do. I offer it is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Montana. We had the proviso before us the other day, and the Senator from Montana moved an amendment to that paragraph of the bill. I asked to-day to have that amendment reconsidered, and it was reconsidered. I now offer an amendment to his amendment, which is proper. When we had the bill under consideration that amendment was in order, and now when the amendment is reconsidered I have a right to offer an amendment to the amendment. There can not be any doubt about it.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator from Minnesota offers the amendment, I make the point of order that it is in fact a substitute, and we are entitled to perfect the text as proposed by the committee before voting upon his substitute.

Mr. SMOOT. To vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota is to perfect the text, and a vote to perfect the text comes before a vote upon the question itself.

Mr. LENROOT. No; there is a Senate committee amendment pending upon which we are entitled to have a vote before we vote upon anything striking that out.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will get a vote directly upon the words "which is accepted" by voting for or against the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am surprised that the proponents of this proposition are for some reason unwilling to have the Senate vote upon the sole question whether we shall make this a perpetual franchise.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that the proponents of the measure have no idea of preventing a vote. If we vote now upon the motion made by the Senator from Minnesota we vote directly upon that question. When we vote on the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, and that is disposed of, if it is carried, then we would vote on whether we shall substitute that for the committee amendment. So we get not one vote but two straight votes.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Utah is entirely wrong. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota we are in favor of in part and in part we are opposed to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then all the Senator has to do is to ask for a division. There will be no question about it.

Mr. LENROOT. Why do the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Utah object to having a straight vote upon the words "which is accepted," as contained in the Senate bill?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah does not object.

Mr. LENROOT. Then why does the Senator from Minnesota object?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator from Minnesota objects.

Mr. LENROOT. Then why not consent to omitting the words "which is accepted" from the amendment? Then we will adopt that amendment and vote on the other separately.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Assuming the substitute proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to be in order, I inquire of the Chair whether it is open to a division so that a separate vote can be had upon all the substitute except the words "which is accepted" and a separate vote upon that part of the substitute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so holds.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then why should we hesitate to proceed in that way?

Mr. LENROOT. I am perfectly willing to accept the ruling of the Chair, but it is very clear it is not open to a division, because there are not substantive propositions, each of which may stand alone, which is the rule regarding the division of questions. "Which is accepted," if the other portion of the amendment were not voted upon, would mean nothing.

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Has not the Chair already decided that the substitute offered by the Senator from Minnesota can not contain the words "which is accepted"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No. The amendment was reconsidered, and the Senator offered his substitute, and the Chair decided that the Senator could not include in that substitute an amendment proposed by the committee that has not been acted upon.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has a right to pass upon the committee amendments.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, then I understand that the Senator from Minnesota offers it as an amendment, and the Chair holds that he can include in it the words indicated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can offer any amendment he desires to the bill in order to perfect its text.

Mr. NORRIS. As a matter of fact, the Senator from Minnesota offered it as a substitute, and so stated at the time. I am interested in making this inquiry for the reason that I make the point that it is a substitute. I do not care what it is called; you can not make it anything else by calling it something else. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that if it is a substitute and the Chair should hold that the Senator had a right to include in the substitute the words "which is accepted," then I was going to make a motion to amend the substitute by striking out those words. If it is offered as an amendment—if such a thing were possible—then it is not subject to further amendment, for it is already an amendment to an amendment, which, under the rules of the Senate, can not be amended.

When all Senators concede that the only thing in dispute here or anywhere, so far as I know, is whether the words "which is accepted" shall be included or excluded from the legislation, why should we not have a vote directly on that proposition? No Senator objects to the remainder of the proposal of the Senator from Minnesota; it is conceded, I think, by everybody that it is all right and we are all ready to vote for it; but I do not like the idea, whether intended or not—and I do not presume it is so intended, though it has that effect—of saying, "We will offer this first as a substitute; then if the Chair holds that it is not a substitute, we shall offer it as an amendment; we will put these words in; and we will thereby make it out of order to move to strike them out"; so that some of us will have to vote for something that we do not want in order to get something that we do want. If the amendment should be agreed to, it becomes a part of the bill, and it would not make any difference what happened to the committee amendment; nobody would care. Those who are behind the bill would be agreed that it should be defeated, because the objectionable words would be already included in the bill. If the Chair is going to hold to that effect, Senators who are in favor of the amendment, but opposed to the portion of it including the words "which is accepted," will be put in the attitude where there never will be an opportunity to vote directly upon that proposition and have the vote count.

I repeat we are in favor of the remainder of the amendment; but if we agree to the words to which I have referred, we put them in the bill. Then the Chair will say, "The next amendment is the committee amendment, found on line 20, to include the words 'which is accepted.'" It can then be said, "Why, yes; we will vote with you and strike that out, because we have already inserted it in the other amendment." I hope we are not going to place the Senate in that kind of a parliamentary predicament, where those who want to strike that language out are not going to have an opportunity to do so and have their action effective. The words objected to are going to be put in the bill twice—that is the effect of the procedure here—and they are going to be put in in connection with other words which all Senators desire to have inserted, under a parliamentary procedure under which it is not in order to strike the words out of the amendment. If a Senator had no idea whatever about parliamentary procedure, common justice would demonstrate that that would be so unfair and so unreasonable that it could not stand anywhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks unquestionably that the Senate has a right to pass upon the committee amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] makes a distinction between a substitute and an amendment. A substitute is only an amendment. If a measure is pending and a substitute is offered for it, it is simply an amendment. There is no distinction in the parliamentary situation between a substitute and an amendment. We use the term "substitute," but it simply means an amendment. If Senators do not like the amendment I have offered, they can vote it down, and then offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask for a division of the question. I request a vote on all of the amendment except the words "which is accepted."

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection, Mr. President, to dividing the question; but I do object to the charges and insinuations made by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands there is no objection to the adoption of that part of the substitute offered by the Senator from Minnesota which does not include the words "which is accepted." If there is no objection, the amendment, with the exception of the words indicated, stands adopted by the Senate. Then the question recurs on agreeing to the words "which is accepted."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, just a word upon this amendment. I desire again to reiterate that in the position which I take, I do not wish to reflect in the slightest degree upon the good faith of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. But having said that, I must be permitted to express myself most freely upon the effect of the Senator's course, so far as the public interest is concerned.

I desire to say, Mr. President, just a word now to the Senators on this side of the aisle. There is nothing that has come up within the last 12 months, if this amendment be adopted which the Senator now proposes, that will be a greater reflection upon the Republican Party than the action of the Senate here to-day in connection with the other amendment, which fortunately was lost by one vote.

Mr. President, it is not long ago that the Senate took action with reference to special privilege toward labor; it is not very long ago that the Senate incorporated in the railroad bill an antistrike clause. We found many Senators then declaiming against special privilege; but where are those Senators now when it comes to a special privilege to organized wealth in this country? Where are those Senators this afternoon when it is proposed by these amendments to give away the most valuable resources remaining in the control of the people of the United States; giving them away not for 50 years, but if the amendment which is now proposed be accepted, if we do not strike out the words "which is accepted," giving them away forever? Oh, what a record the Senate will make this afternoon if it adopts the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota!

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator will explain a little more fully why it is that he thinks these special privileges are given away by the use of the words "which is accepted," I shall be glad to hear him. My attention has been called only lately to this proposed amendment. I did not hear the discussion of the amendment of the Senator from Montana the other day.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to accede to the request of the Senator from South Dakota. Under the previous sections of this bill it is proposed—and of that I am in favor—to grant a license for a term of 50 years for the development of navigation and water power. We are all in favor of that; but then we come to the proviso—

That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over—

I am reading now from the text of the bill, and the amendment does not change this feature in any respect—or does not tender a new license on reasonable terms to the original or a new licensee which is accepted, then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original license until the property is taken over or a new license is issued as aforesaid.

Mr. STERLING. The amendment of the Senator from Montana, as I understand, proposed to strike out the words "on reasonable terms."

Mr. LENROOT. "On terms and conditions as aforesaid." That will be the Senator's amendment, and I have no objection to that.

Mr. STERLING. But the words "on reasonable terms," in line 19, are to be stricken out, according to the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. LENROOT. Those words are to be stricken out. The Senator, I take it, wants to know in what way this becomes a perpetual franchise?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Under this proviso there are three things that may occur. The United States may take over the plant and pay the net investment and severance damages. I showed the other day that it might easily be that the severance damages under the bill with this proviso would be more than the cost of the entire project. The Government might take it over itself, or it might issue a new license to a new licensee; but if it did that the new licensee would have to pay exactly what the Government would have to pay, and neither the Government nor the new licensee under the terms of this bill can ever take it over at what it cost the original licensee, or ever take it at what it is worth either to the Government or to any third person, because the severance damages constitute no element of value; the new licensee gets nothing of value in money which he is required to pay for severance damages. So the Government would not take it over, and the new licensee would not take it over.

Then what happens? It is provided in the first part of the section that a new license may be tendered the original licensee under such terms and conditions as may be authorized or required under then existing laws and regulations. Now comes the proviso that if the Government does not take it over, or a new license is not issued to a new licensee, or a new license tendered to the original licensee which is accepted, then a license shall be issued from year to year.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin must there not be in any event an acceptance of the tender of the Government?

Mr. LENROOT. No; they will get a license from year to year, going on forever, by simply saying, "We will refuse to accept."

Mr. STERLING. Will it go on forever, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. LENROOT. Unless the Government takes it over, it will.

Mr. STERLING. The Government can take it over at any time, can it not?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes; of course it can, by paying, as I just stated, not only all that was invested in it but such severance damages as may be allowed. As I said the other day, it is a curious fact, Mr. President, that most of those who argue that this is a protection to the Government because the Government has the right to take over the project, when you ask the question whether they are in favor of Government ownership of these utilities will say "No." What becomes of the sincerity of such an argument as that? So this is, for all practical purposes, a perpetual license, unless the Government itself shall go into the business not only of taking over water powers but into the general public-utility business of furnishing power and light and heat to the people of this country.

So, Mr. President, unless the words "which is accepted" are stricken out of the bill, the record that will be made to-day will be the granting of perpetual franchises to these water-power utilities, beyond the power for all time to come of regulation or compensation in the public interest. I should be sorry to see any such record made here to-day, whereby the Republican Party, so far as it is represented in the Senate of the United States, shall take a position against special privilege to labor and to the men who toil but in favor of special privilege and perpetual franchises to the wealth of this country.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not understand why the Senator from Wisconsin claims that there is a perpetual license granted under the provisions of this bill if the words "which is accepted" remain a part of it. I can not see that special privileges are granted to the capitalistic class of America, the men who advance the money for the building of these plants and the establishment of this industry. I have tried to follow the Senator very carefully in what he says, but it is impossible for me to see this question as he has portrayed it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. If the license is not accepted under the proviso, what happens?

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator allow me to come to that in the way I intended to? I will gladly answer it then.

Mr. LENROOT. To be sure.

Mr. SMOOT. In the first place, I want it distinctly understood that I am not in accord with the statement made that the bill gives away the last of the natural resources of the country. The bill gives away nothing. The company which develops a water power secures the money for so doing and runs all of the chances of the enterprise being a success or a failure. The Government of the United States takes no chances whatever. If it is not a paying proposition, the Government of the United States would still collect as much money as the contract calls for for every horsepower that is developed upon the project. Not only that, but the price at which the power can be sold is to be fixed, regulated, and controlled by officials of the Government; and I now state, as far as I am personally concerned, I would not want to take any interest whatever in any power project that may be undertaken under the provisions of the pending bill.

The pending bill is a compromise measure, just the same as the leasing bill was a compromise measure, and agreed to with a hope of future development of the natural resources of our Western States, which at the present time and for years past have been locked up and the situation absolutely controlled by the bureaus here in the departments at Washington, so that all development of water power ceased. If any person or persons undertake to develop a water power, even though the site be upon lands not withdrawn from entry, as soon as the announcement is made by the party who has concluded that a power plant could be successfully established, the Government of the United States, no matter how much money he has spent upon his preliminary work, immediately withdraws it, and all improvement ceases.

So, Mr. President, there is not very much of a gift found in the provision of the pending bill, and there never can be a very great profit made out of any project developed under it. I think that more benefit will come to the country by the passage of this bill from power plants developed upon navigable streams of this country than in the sparsely settled Western States, where the great inland water powers can be developed. I know of electric power companies investing large amounts of money in the development of power, and it has taken 10 years or more before even the running expenses of the company could be paid from the revenues received from the sale of the power.

I am not objecting to the regulation on the part of the Government, as provided in the bill; but I do think that every charge that is imposed upon every horse power generated will be passed on to the consumer, and at the same time the people living in the States where these power sites are located prevented from collecting taxes from withdrawn lands, in some cases reaching as high as 76 per cent of the area of the State, and that being so you can readily see that all the expenses of maintaining an orderly form of government must be met by the imposition of taxes upon the industries and improvements of the remaining 24 per cent of the area of the State. The Government of the United States holds its hand over that 76 per cent. No taxes can be imposed, no development can be made, and the State is barred from receiving any benefits of taxation.

The Senator asks if the Government does not take over the license at the end of 50 years, what is going to happen? If a new licensee does not take it over at the end of 50 years, what is going to happen? Why, Mr. President, if the Government will not take over the plant at the end of 50 years, and if it can not find a new licensee, it will be operated by the owners from year to year until the Government does take it over or finds a new licensee. What reason for complaint has the Government or the people if the plant is so uninviting that a new licensee can not be found or the Government itself decides it is not worth the taking over?

Why, Mr. President, is the privilege of allowing the owners of the plant to run it another year a special favor, a special privilege to the company that has put its money into the business and operated it for 50 years? Nonsense! The company may only be making a profit of 1 per cent. It may be that it is making no profit at all, and under such conditions a new licensee would not want to take it over. Why should he? He can find better use for his money. If it is in such condition that the Government will not take it over, what disadvantage is there to the Government or the people if the man who has developed the property runs it for another year, and at the end of just one year's extension, if the Government will not take it over or a new licensee can not be found that will take it over, who is going to be hurt if it is operated by the owners? The Government will be getting its charges for another year. Every 12 months the same question will arise. Does any Senator think for a minute that a concern operating a plant of that kind wants to be put in that position, that it knows nothing about what is going to happen to its business at the end of every 12 months?

I want to say that the result will be that when a company constructs one of these plants, unless at the end of 50 years the Government wants to take it over, and it is profitable to do so, or unless the Government can find a new licensee, you can depend upon it that there has not been very much profit for the man who is operating it under the 50-year lease.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Would the Senator be willing, then, to vote for an amendment striking out the provision with reference to severance damages, so that the Government or a new licensee might take over this property at what it was worth to them?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the severance damages are nothing more than any honest man in a transfer of such property would agree to with any honest purchaser. It is nothing more nor less than the Government agreeing that in the severance of the property from the original licensee, whatever damages there might be should be paid by the Government in case the Government takes over the property, or the new licensee if there should be one, and I say that no honest person can object to that principle.

Mr. LENROOT. What would the new licensee get for the severance damages that he would have to pay?

Mr. SMOOT. He would get whatever value the required severance was to him, and that would be the severance damage to the builder of the plant. Mr. President, I want to say that all of the disadvantages in building the plant, the time it took to build up a demand for the power, and all of the burdensome unseen expenses of starting any kind of a business like the ones contemplated under this bill fall upon the original licensee. The man who asks for the second license has nothing like this to pass through. The business, if it is successful, is established at that time. He steps in without an effort, and it does seem to me he should be perfectly willing to pay a reasonable price, as the bill provides, whenever the property is transferred to him as a new licensee.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator understands he has to pay all those expenses, too, does he not?

Mr. SMOOT. Well, there is not any question of a doubt whatever that the severance of the property will be decided between the Government of the United States, or the man who first built the plant and put it into operation, and the new licensee. The original promoter of the business, if he remains in it for 50 years, or, if he does not, his successors in business, are never going to secure any advantage in the severance of it, and I say now that if the Government of the United States at the end of 50 years does not take over the property there will be some good reason for it. If the Government of the United States can not find a new licensee to take over the property there will be some good reason for it, and that reason will be that it will neither pay the Government of the United States nor pay a new licensee to do so. So every interest of the Government is protected, and every interest of the new licensee, if there be one, will be protected; and it seems to me that all that the severance provision does is to protect the first licensee, who took the first step to establish the industry. I know there is no man living who would say that he should not be protected in this, and that is all the bill does.

In relation to the words "which is accepted," what does it mean and what is the result of their use? I can not see the result as portrayed by the Senator from Wisconsin. They mean that if a new licensee is not found that will accept the terms offered by the Government, then the original licensee can proceed from year to year to operate the plant. Do not think for a minute that that is a favorable position for the licensee to be in with ten millions of dollars invested or one million or whatever the amount may be, not knowing whether he will be allowed to operate on the 2d day of January of each year. I say that every endeavor would be made and every point stretched to the limit by the original licensee to keep the plant in operation. The original licensee is entitled to know if the offer of the Government to the second licensee is accepted; then I say that the words "which is accepted" ought to be in this bill, for not only the protection of the man who has put his money into the concern and made it a going concern for 50 years, but also, it seems to me, Mr. President, it is nothing more than right between the Government of the United States and a second licensee. Why should it not be known that it is acceptable to the new licensee? If a licensee will not accept it, why should the original licensee be deprived of operating the plant year by year? Do you want it to stand idle? Do you want it to go to rack and ruin until some new licensee is found by the Government?

That is all there is to it, Mr. President, and I hope and trust the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota will be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I believe that after all argument is sifted down and we have gotten to the bottom, this is a question as to whether we want to give a perpetual lease or a limited lease.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has made an extensive and an able argument, and I believe that if it is analyzed, if he would analyze it himself as he usually analyzes other people's arguments he would have to reach the conclusion that this language if kept in the bill means that instead of issuing a license for 50 years, we ought to put in the bill a provision for a perpetual license and be done with it at once. The Senator's argument leads in that direction, and there can be a great deal of argument offered in favor of the proposition that the license should be perpetual. I am not in favor of it, but I know that lots of good men are, and you can make the same argument for a perpetual license as the Senator has made for these words.

He asks what difference it would make when the 50 years are up if the man has another year, and when that year is up he has another, and so on. It might not make any, Mr. President. The Government might be willing to do that. But if we are going to limit these leases to 50 years, then the Government ought to have the right at the end of the 50 years to say something about a new license, or what should be done with the property. Either that or meet the question squarely and say, "Let us have a perpetual license."

The Senator from Utah is not in favor of the Government taking over these properties. He will be here, I suppose, 50 years from now—I hope he will—sitting in the same chair where he is now, leading the Senate, and the country to a great extent, as he is now, studying all these questions as he studies them now, as diligently as any man in the United States. He will be here at that time, and he will say, "The Government must not take over these properties. The Government must not go into this business."

The answer is, if the Government does not do it the man goes on from year to year on his own terms. So it will reduce itself to this: This corporation that has operated a water power for 50 years, when the time expires and the Government presents its new lease, will decide the question on this basis, and very properly; I am not finding fault with them at all: "Is the new lease better for us than the old? If it is, we will take it; if it is not, we will refuse to take it, because if we refuse to take it, under the law passed 50 years ago, we are entitled to have it from year to year under those terms."

That is the right they will have at the end of the 50 years.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator leaves out one very important thing in the statement he has just made. The bill provides for a new licensee.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And the Government is not compelled to grant the license to the original licensee. A new licensee can make a new application, and if his application offers more than what the original licensee would pay, the Senator does not think for a moment but what the Government of the United States would grant it to the new licensee?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not call attention, however, to the fact that this law which we are now passing is so circumscribed that the new licensee will have some disadvantages. He will have to pay some things that he probably would not want to pay. He will probably refuse to comply with the law in regard to severance damages and in regard to carrying out the contracts that the old corporation has made, and unless he does agree to stand for those things he will stand nowhere; he will not have any opportunity to lease it, and he can not be a licensee, because those are the things he has to assume under the law.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the original licensee would have the same contracts to meet. He has made them, and he would have to comply with them entirely if he took it. So they are on the same footing there.

Mr. NORRIS. No; they are not on the same footing there. I can tell the Senator why I think they are not on the same footing. However, there is another thing that the new licensee would have to pay that the old licensee, of course, would not have to pay, and that would be the severance damages. When the 50-year period is somewhere near up, if this corporation desires to retain the control of it, or to make it difficult for any other corporation to take over the property and enter into a new contract with the Government of the United States, they could enter into a good many contracts with corporations that in effect would be themselves, which would be burdensome. It is true those contracts would have to be approved by the commission; but the commission is not going to criticize them or hold them up or refuse to permit a contract to be made. If they make a contract that does not seem favorable to themselves, they will be supposed to be looking after their own interests, and another corporation, practically composed of the same men, perhaps, could easily be given a contract that would be extremely advantageous. It would not make any difference to this old corporation, the other one making a contract with them, the existing licensee, because for them it would be taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another. If they sold themselves power at less than cost, they would lose on the one side, but they would make it all back on the other. If they had some contracts like that—and they would very likely, at the expiration of the 50 years, have them in readiness for just this kind of emergency—then the new licensee, if he took it over, would have to assume them, and they would be able then, if the new licensee was foolish enough to assume them, to go on with their other corporation and get their electric light or their hydroelectric power, or whatever it might be, at a very much reduced rate.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. PHIPPS. I should like to inquire if the Senator is familiar with the operations in any State having a public-utilities board, where a company is privileged to make a contract at a certain rate for hydroelectric power to one company and exact different rates from another company, under practically similar conditions?

Mr. NORRIS. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. PHIPPS. The point is that public-utilities commissions can not make rates to one company and refuse the same rates to other companies in the same line of business or using the same amount of power. In other words, they can not make one rate to themselves and different rates to the public. Is not that the fact?

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose that is very often the fact. But a subsidiary company, composed of the same men who own the original parent corporation, might have—it would be very easy for them to have—a case where they were getting the only contract in a particular line, and all other contracts with other men, or municipalities, or corporations were entirely of a different nature. And so, if they made a contract of that kind with that kind of a corporation, they would not impugn that kind of law if such a law exists.

Mr. PHIPPS. Then I should like to inquire of the Senator if it is not a fact that not only the earnings of the parent corporation but also the earnings of the subsidiary companies are limited to a certain rate per cent on the actual value of the property and the investment in the business?

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator ask me if that is always the case?

Mr. PHIPPS. I ask if the Senator knows of any State having a public utilities commission where that is not the case?

Mr. NORRIS. That is sometimes the case and sometimes not. If I understand the Senator's question, I do not know that it has any application to what I am discussing here.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator from Colorado if he can name a single case where a State undertakes to regulate the rates and products of a corporation the subsidiary of a manufacturing corporation?

Mr. PHIPPS. If the Senator will tell me where there is a manufacturing corporation that is subsidiary to a hydroelectric power corporation, I will undertake to answer his question.

Mr. LENROOT. There may be many.

Mr. PHIPPS. To my knowledge to-day, if such companies should come into existence I have no doubt that the States would well be able, through their legislatures, to take care of their proper regulation, as they have demonstrated their ability to regulate the business of hydroelectric power companies.

Mr. NORRIS. I think some of them will—I have no doubt of it. I am not finding fault with any State. I hope they all will. Some of them will not. But as a matter of fact, whether they do or whether they do not, a corporation that would have an advantageous contract would not necessarily be a subsidiary of the parent corporation. The stock might be absolutely independent and in no way connected with it except that the men or the interests who owned one might own the other.

Mr. PHIPPS. It seems to me that the Senator is setting up a supposititious case which is not at all likely to ever happen. But as it is possible, although not at all probable, it did seem to me that the case would well be met by the legislative bodies, who have shown their ability to handle cases just as difficult and just as intricate. I can not understand why the Senator seems to insist upon the power companies, at the expiration of the 50-year period, being compelled to accept any form of contract for a new period which the commission, through its representatives, may decide is a proper and fit contract for those companies to accept. Surely the contract must be reasonable, and yet the words "reasonable in its terms" have been stricken out and others have been substituted.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to discuss that. I think they ought to have been stricken out; I think they were properly stricken out; but I do not want to take up the time of the Senate to discuss it, because it is not before the Senate.

Mr. PHIPPS. That is true; they have been stricken out.

Mr. NORRIS. I think properly so, but I am not going to try to give my reasons for it, because I want to confine the discussion so far as I am concerned to the particular question that is before the Senate. The Senator says that at the end of 50 years—and that is the argument of the Senator from Utah, too—the corporation which has the license and is operating the property ought to be able to say whether it will go on or not. Of course it is able to say. On the other hand, we do not want to put the Government in such a position that no matter what conditions may exist 50 years from now, it is within the power of that corporation to continue under the old law. We stand that way because we believe in a lease that is limited. The bill is drawn on the theory of a limited lease. I said a while ago that there is a good line of argument that can be made for a perpetual lease, but Senators ought to be willing to meet that squarely and not go on the theory that we will put into the law a term of 50 years and then surround it by a whole lot of things that in effect make it perpetual if the corporation that has the lease wants to make it perpetual.

Mr. PHIPPS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I think we ought to be able to say when we make the lease the same as you say to your tenant farmer when you lease him some land, "When your lease is up the landlord must have something to say about leasing it again"——

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Even though some investment has been made by the tenant. I first yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I merely want to express the feeling that it does not seem to me necessary and it does seem unwise to leave the full latitude that would be given under this clause to the commission, which, of course, would function through its assistants, or through minor officials, to place before a company which may have developed not only an industry, but may have developed thousands of acres of country by reason of its investment in the business—at the expiration of the lease to hand out a new lease on such ridiculous terms that the company would be unable to accept it. That is not an impossibility, judging by the experiences of the past which these same officials have had with officials of the Government. You can not call such a document a contract upon which a decision should be made if it is absolutely one sided and unfair, and it might well be.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's position reduces itself to this: At the end of 50 years the Government of the United States is going to be unfair; it is going to be unjust; it is going to try to crush these men who have developed the country and who have developed the water power and done such great good for humanity. I do not go on that theory.

Mr. PHIPPS. I have not said that.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be true. He says that they are going to be presented with a contract that is not fair; that is unjust. I am assuming that the Government of the United States 50 years from now is going to be fair. If it is not going to be fair, then there is something in the argument.

Mr. PHIPPS. If the Senator will pardon me, that was not my exact language, but that possibility is there just the same.

Mr. NORRIS. I know it is.

Mr. PHIPPS. Judging by past experience, I think I am quite right in calling attention to that very feature of the contract, that the contract should not be used to the disadvantage of the person who has developed the property, unless on its face and under its terms it was reasonable and one which should be accepted by the lessee.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to be understood as saying that condition could not come about, as the Senator has indicated. That, reduced to the minimum, is the argument also of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. At the end of the 50-year period, probably before that or about that time, assuming that some water powers have been developed under the law if it is passed, Congress will undoubtedly legislate upon the subject. We can not now tell, even by the wildest stretch of the imagination, what conditions are then going to be. They may be entirely dissimilar to what they are now, and they may not have changed much, of course; but Congress will be here if the Government is here, and Congress will legislate and the commission will carry out the instructions if it is permitted to remain in power.

There may be a different instrumentality of the Government that will handle this at that time, but if we are going to lease on a term of years and not try to make a perpetual lease we must—I think we can; at least, I am going on that theory—trust our Government to be square and to be honest with those men, if there are any at the end of 50 years, who have developed the water powers of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment I will yield. It seems to me we ought not to go on any other theory. If we think 50 years is not the right term and that it ought to be 100 years or 1,000 years or to run through all eternity, then we ought to make it that way; but if we are going to make a term of 50 years—and it seems to be the judgment of both the House and the Senate that that ought to be the length of the term—we must, it seems to me, and I think we can do it with perfect candor and without any risk, trust to the Government of the United States to be fair at the end of 50 years.

If you take the other course you trust the corporation to be fair. Will the corporation enter into a new contract with the Government unless the Government offers it a contract at the end of 50 years that is better than the one it worked under for the first 50 years? Nobody expects that. The corporation is going to get as good a deal as it can get and it will take whichever contract to it seems best, looking at it from the financial standpoint.

I yield now to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator expresses himself that at the end of 50 years he believes the Government will be perfectly fair. If that is the case, why should the Government not be fair in preventing the owners of the property making leases to institutions owned by themselves at ruinous rates, because the Senator knows very well that those rates have to be submitted to the commission and the commission will have to pass upon them? Does not the Senator think that the commission would know immediately that those rates were made for some purpose?

Mr. NORRIS. They might, that is true, and they might refuse to let them do it.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think that they would do it?

Mr. NORRIS. The corporation might be so honest that they would not try to do it. I have only offered that as one of the burdens that might be fixed up to compel the new lessee, if they had one in contemplation, to assume and thus prevent it from entering into the lease. I know it is done in other ways.

Some time ago, in a very important investigation, a committee of which I was a member had occasion to go into the coal question at some length. That was several years ago, when I was a member of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives. It developed that in the coal-mining regions every railroad company organized had a coal company with which it worked. They did not all do it in the same way, but here is one instance that I remember of a railroad company and a coal company: The stock of the coal company was owned by the railroad company. The officers of the railroad company were the officers of the coal company. They could and did put men out of business who were competitors of the coal company by making a rate that was so high that it was practically confiscatory. In time we got that remedied. I think the man in the particular instance I am thinking about is in business now and making money and doing well, but it took him years and years of labor; he spent thousands and thousands of dollars in expense and was into all kinds of litigation and thought for a good while he was bankrupt and would have to quit business. They would follow that plan, probably.

I only cite that to show that now those things are done. This railroad company could charge a man in the coal business a thousand dollars a ton for transporting coal and it could charge the same rate to the coal company in which it was interested. It could make money on it and the coal company would lose it. It all went into the same pocket in the end, but the man who had to compete with that coal company had to go out of business; he did not have a railroad company to take up the slack.

It seems to me that something might occur about the time the leases are expiring so that the contracts would have to be assumed. It might be easy for one corporation to carry all the burdens for another. At least it gets down to the proposition that we make leases for 50 years, and at the end of 50 years we must trust the Government or the corporation that has the lease. If we do not want to make it perpetual, then we ought to strike out the words "which is accepted," and then it is up to the Government to be square and just, whatever instrumentality at that time may be looking after the interests of the Government, under whatever laws Congress may pass at that time.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an amendment which I offered to the pending bill, on page 35, line 13, may now be taken up. I am only justified in making the request because there are reasons which are imperative why I should leave the Chamber and of such nature that I must yield to them.

I think perhaps the Senator in charge of the bill will accept the proposed amendment. It provides—that no contract, which shall have been lawfully made, for power, light, heat, or water, or for the service or delivery of the same to be furnished from any project works, and to which such project works, or the person, company, or corporation constructing, owning, or operating the same shall be subject, shall be affected by any license under this act, and no such person, association, or corporation shall be released from any lawful obligation by reason of this act or of any license granted thereunder.

The theory of the amendment is that under the bill, if an existing company takes out a license, it automatically becomes subject to the regulatory power of any public-service corporation within its State. If it does not take out a license, it is subject to the regulatory power of the commission created by the bill.

I frankly and fully admit that any preferential contract, any discriminatory contract, would not be a lawful contract, and would not be protected by the amendment, but the fear that there is something in the bill which might impair the obligations of the existing contracts has caused the parties who have brought the matter to my attention to believe that this is a measure of safety.

I am perfectly familiar with the law governing public-service corporations in most of the States, and I know that the law is that no matter what the contract may say, no matter whether its term has a determinate or a definite period, that they are all subject to the higher power of the State, or the police power of the State, to be exercised through the commission, if there is a commission, and if there is no commission and they take out a license under the act they become subject to the same power under the commission created by the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to present consideration of the amendment?

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection to the amendment, but I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether he would be willing to accept an amendment to the amendment to read "not extending beyond the term of the license"?

Mr. KNOX. I would be perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. LENROOT. So that it would read:

That no contract which shall have been lawfully made, not extending beyond the terms of the license—

Mr. KNOX. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I regret that I was unable to follow the reading of the amendment tendered by the Senator from Pennsylvania. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania particularly desire to take action on that matter this afternoon?

Mr. KNOX. As the reason which calls me from the Senate now is likely to continue to exist for some little time, I should very much like to have my amendment acted upon. I thought perhaps the chairman of the committee might be willing to accept it, subject to consideration in conference.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the subject is one of very deep interest and concern to all of us in the West. I have not had an opportunity to look into that feature of the bill, but I rather imagine that there is not any provision at all in relation to carrying contracts over the period of the lease. I had supposed there was. There have been such provisions in previous bills. We shall certainly be obliged to tender something along that line in order to protect irrigation interests, because we hope to utilize many of the power plants that will be developed under the provisions of this bill for the purpose of pumping water for irrigation. That is a use to which many power plants in the West are now devoted. Indeed, one of the great dams across the Missouri River, only 15 miles from my own home, develops power, a large portion of which is utilized for the pumping of water by means of which extensive areas are irrigated.

Those corporations enter into contracts, which are perpetual in their terms, with the owners of lands, under which they undertake to supply them with water for the irrigation of the lands for all time at a fixed price. I feel that that is a very wise policy, and one that ought to be encouraged and recognized in the bill, so that when we come to consider the question of contracts to be carried beyond the period of the license, I should like to see that that feature is taken care of.

Mr. KNOX. Does not the Senator from Montana see that no matter under what circumstances or for what period of time any contracts may be made, they are all subject to the superior power either of the State or of the commission created under this bill? The main purpose of the amendment is to protect cases—many of which I have known, and, I have no doubt, the Senator from Montana, living in a section of country that has been more recently developed than the section from which I come, knows of many more—where projects have had the lifeblood put into them by being able to locate some large industry or, as in the case to which the Senator refers, make arrangements for the irrigation of vast areas of land, which guaranteed them from the start a revenue which enabled the project to be developed and extended to other uses. All I want to try to safeguard is that as to those contracts—in so far as they are lawful contracts, in so far as they are not discriminatory, in so far as they are reasonable, and in so far as the service to others similarly situated is the same—there shall be no action under this bill, by reason of the fact that the existing companies may avail themselves of the provisions of the bill by taking out licenses that shall impair the valid obligations of the previous contracts which have been made. That is as simple a way as I can put it, and I think it is comprehensive.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like very much to take the matter into consideration; but I want to submit this further consideration to the Senator having charge of the bill and to others who are interested. If we do not make some provision by which contracts may be carried beyond the period of the license, we are going to put at a most decided disadvantage the pioneer companies, those that are first organized and established under the bill, as against those that are developed in the course of time and when the conditions are very much more favorable to the development of enterprises of this character. To illustrate: The company now taking a license may very well make contracts for a period of 30, 40, or 50 years; and, as suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], any great industry that is to be established where it can be supplied from a particular plant will, of course, make a contract for as long a period as it possibly can, feeling, of course, that before the industry is established, it will be in a situation to get better terms than it would if it were already established and were making contracts for only short periods. I could tell of some unfortunate experiences in that connection.

When the lease, however, is expiring and has, we will say, only 10 years to run, having already run 50 years, the old plant comes into competition with a new plant which is only 2 years old, we will say. In bidding for the supply of power to a manufacturing industry that is to be located in a locality that can equally be supplied by the old plant or by the new one, of course the old plant can not bid. It will offer power at a certain price, but it can make a contract for 10 years only, while the new company will offer the power at exactly the same price but will offer a contract for a longer term of years—30, 40, or 45 years—and thus, Mr. President, the companies that ought to be encouraged—that is to say, the pioneer companies that go into the field before the country is developed—are put at a very decided disadvantage as against the newer companies.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the Senator familiar with section 22 of the bill, which relates to the matter to which he refers?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I must confess that I have not looked into it particularly.

Mr. LENROOT. The bill does now provide for the making of contracts extending beyond the period of the license upon the joint approval of the State utility commission and the commission created by the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Such a provision as that I had in mind; but I feared, because of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], that some such provision was not found in the bill. I had forgotten the specific provision to which the Senator from Wisconsin now refers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the consideration of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment; at all events, I am quite willing that it should be adopted and go to conference, where we can consider it in conference in more detail. In this connection, however, I desire to call attention to section 23, which provides:

SEC. 23. That the provisions of this act shall not be construed as affecting any permit or valid existing right of way heretofore granted, or as affecting any authority heretofore given pursuant to law; but any person, association, corporation, State, or municipality holding or possessing such permit, right of way, or authority may apply for a license hereunder.

That is, they may come under the provisions of this proposed law if desired.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, did the Senator accept the amendment which I suggested to his amendment?

Mr. KNOX. I accepted it.

Mr. LENROOT. Were the words suggested by me incorporated in the amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that the amendment as modified be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 35, at the end of line 2, after the proviso already agreed to at that point, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That no contract, which shall have been lawfully made, not extending beyond the term of the license for power, light, heat, or water, or for the service or delivery of the same to be furnished from any project works, and to which such project works, or the person, company, or corporation constructing, owning, or operating the same shall be subject, shall be affected by any license under this act, and no such person, association, or corporation shall be released from any lawful obligation by reason of this act or of any license granted thereunder.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania his construction of the words "shall have been lawfully made." Would not that validate a contract made subject to the passage of the act, but before applying for a license, in case of an existing project?

Mr. KNOX. The idea when the amendment was drawn was that they should be existing lawful contracts.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the Senator would not, I take it, object to an amendment after the word "made" inserting the words "prior to the passage of this act"?

Mr. KNOX. I would have no objection whatever to that.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator would not want them to make contracts with a view to coming under the act?

Mr. KNOX. I quite understand the position of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Then I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "made" the words "prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. KNOX. I accept that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire where those words will come in?

Mr. LENROOT. In line 2, after the word "made," insert the words "prior to the passage of this act" just before the amendment which I proposed, which was accepted, so that it would read:

That no contract which shall have been lawfully made prior to the passage of this act, not extending beyond the term of the license.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the word "made," in line 2, and after the comma, it is proposed to insert the words "prior to the passage of this act, not extending beyond the term of the license."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I must confess that I do not understand this amendment at all. I tried to follow the Senator from Pennsylvania, but I did not hear all that he said. I have gone over it again, but I do not really know what it means nor to what kind of circumstances it is supposed to apply. It reads:

Provided further, That no contract which shall have been lawfully made for power, light, heat, or water, or for the service or delivery of the same, to be furnished from any project works, and to which such project works, or the person, company, or corporation constructing, owning, or operating the same, shall be subject, shall be affected by any license under this act.

That contemplates a contract that is to be made with a company which secures a license. Of course, that contract must of necessity be affected by the license. It is governed by all the terms of this act which govern licenses.

Mr. KNOX. I hope that the construction that the Senator from Montana is now putting upon the amendment is without recalling the provisions of the nineteenth section. That section permits any existing public-service corporation to avail itself of a license. That may be a corporation that 20 years ago or 15 years or 5 years ago made a contract for supplying electric energy or power to an industry that was built up on the basis of the contract. That old public-service corporation may come in and avail itself of a license under the terms of this bill. All we are desiring to accomplish is that if they do come in under the provisions of section 19 or any other provision of the bill, their coming in and taking a license under this measure will not affect contracts that are already in existence and which in their nature are lawful; that is, nondiscriminatory and fair. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Can the Senator call our attention to some concrete case that will make clear to us the conditions he has in mind?

Mr. KNOX. I presume I could name 20 large industrial establishments in the United States that have been the financial source from which the means have been drawn to develop water powers for the construction of electric light plants. The proponents of these enterprises go to a number of prominent people who are disposed to enter into certain lines of business and procure them to locate at a particular place, and give them a contract at a particular rate, sometimes for a determinate and sometimes for an indeterminate period of time. On the basis of the revenue that is assured to the power company from such a contract they go on and develop their property, and they extend their service to the surrounding neighborhood. Now, under the nineteenth section of this act they may avail themselves of a license under the act; and this amendment is designed, as I have said over and over again, to prevent the taking out of that license from affecting the validity of that contract, if that contract will stand the test which practically all public-service commissions now impose upon public-service companies. The public is protected in this way: That is the enterprises happen to be located in States where they are not subject to the jurisdiction of a public-service commission which enforces that beneficent rule of law, they become automatically subject to the same rule under the terms of this bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not know yet how this amendment is going to operate. The section to which the Senator refers was inserted in the bill to meet the conditions which make the legislation necessary. That refers undoubtedly to licenses which are issued under the act of 1901, which everybody knows are revocable at the will of the Secretary of the Interior. Anyone having such a license as that may surrender that license and take one under this act; but, of course, anyone having a power plant established under the provisions of the act of 1901 could not have made any contracts for any definite period of time, because anyone holding a license of that kind was subject to have it canceled at any time, so there is not any need of protecting him. On the other hand, everyone else who has established any water-power plant in this country establishes it under a perpetual license, at least so far as the Government of the United States in concerned.

We have in our State a number of power plants that were built under the provisions of acts of Congress, and these are perpetual. Of course, they have gone on and made contracts perpetual in their character, or at least for a long series of years. They, of course, will not give up their perpetual right, their absolute and unqualified right, and take a license under this bill; and there is no protection needed for contracts which they have entered into. So in many cases the land upon which the dam was built was owned by private parties having a title in fee, and they sold the land thus held by a title in fee to the parties who built the plant, and the parties who built the plant have a title in perpetuity to that land, and they have made contracts extending for an indefinite time in the future; and I dare say that it is something of that character that the Senator from Pennsylvania has in mind. I do not know of any power plants in the East that are not built upon ground to which the owner has a title in fee, and if they were it would not seem as though this bill could affect them at all, if the title which they got from their grantors was a limited fee and not a title in perpetuity.

In other words, Mr. President, there are two classes of power development. One class of power development has the title in perpetuity, and they have made contracts accordingly, and their contracts can not possibly be affected by this. There is another class of power plants, that are constructed under a revocable license which may be revoked at any time, and they can not possibly have any contracts which will be preserved by this amendment. If there is any other class of power plants to which it would apply I shall be very glad to be enlightened about it, but at the present time I have not in mind a plant to which it would become applicable. Possibly the Senator from Wisconsin may have a more definite idea about it than I have.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know of any cases in the East that would be affected by this bill or the amendment which the Senator proposes. Does the Senator know of any?

Mr. KNOX. Not unless it might be the power plants at Niagara Falls and along the St. Lawrence River. I must confess that I have not made any effort to locate them.

Mr. LENROOT. That would be one case; yes. That is the only one that I can think of.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But, Mr. President, my understanding about the power plants at Niagara Falls is that those grants are in perpetuity.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no. It is running from year to year now.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is that so? Well, if that is the case, then, of course, those power plants could not possibly have made contracts for long periods if their license extended only from year to year. Certainly a man would not be so lacking in business judgment as to make a contract under which he was obligated to deliver power for 25 years, when his license permitted him only to occupy it from year to year.

Mr. KNOX. I think quite to the contrary. I think the probabilities are—and I do not state this from any knowledge of the subject, but based on some analogous cases—that they have made their contracts for a long period of time, subject, of course, to the ability to renew their licenses.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then their contracts will still be subject to the renewal of this license at the end of the 50-year period. The only difference between the two is that they are taking 50 chances to 1 upon the termination of their license and the surrendering of their contracts. This bill as it stands is giving them very much more than they are getting now, and so they do not need any further protection, if that is the situation.

Mr. KNOX. The Senator is unconsciously, perhaps, leading me away from the exact point. It is not a question of the character of the license. It is not a question of the character of the corporation. It is not a question of the title that it holds to the lands upon which the project is located. It is a question of whether we will assure them all; to the extent that they have valid legal contracts they are not affected by the terms of this bill. Now, if the contracts are not legal, or run out in a short period of time, or if they are subject to the expiration of licenses which they hold from the Government, that is a risk, of course, that they take.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the only thing I can see that will be affected by the amendment is in the case where it is provided in the bill that if there be no State regulatory commission regulating the rates of a licensee, the commission shall regulate the rates; and in the case of an existing contract that was lawfully made, I take it that the Senator's amendment would exclude that contract from regulation under this bill.

Mr. KNOX. If lawfully made.

Mr. LENROOT. A contract lawful when made.

Mr. KNOX. No; I think sometimes a contract which is lawful when made may by subsequent events, or by a change of circumstances or conditions, become an unreasonable contract. I think, if the Senator will permit me to say so, that all contracts of this class, no matter how solemn the engagement may be that is entered into between the parties, are subject to the ultimate police power of the State, and, in case of taking a license from the Federal Government, are subject to what we might call the police power of the Nation, which I believe the Supreme Court says exists.

Mr. LENROOT. I quite agree with the Senator that a contract might be lawful when made, but, because of subsequent events, might become unlawful; but the language of his amendment, so far as this act affecting the contract is concerned, is limited to those that have been lawfully made.

Mr. KNOX. Prior to the passage of this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but if such circumstances should arise that under a proper exercise of the police power that lawful contract when made has become unlawful, nevertheless the amendment would exclude it from the act.

Mr. KNOX. I do not think by legislation you can exclude the power either of the Government or of the State from passing upon that question. The public weal rises paramount to private interests in all of these contracts.

Mr. LENROOT. I would agree so far as the State commission is concerned; but the Senator does not think, does he, that where the project is wholly within a State the Federal Government could exercise a police power except where it becomes a matter of contract under a license?

Mr. KNOX. You would have no power over an enterprise existing exclusively in a State unless that enterprise took out a license and availed itself of one of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, I say, it becomes a contractual relation and a consent that this power be exercised by the Federal Government.

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania as modified.

On a division, the amendment as modified was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We return now to the former amendment, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 26, in the amendment offered as a substitute by the Senator from Minnesota, upon which there was a division, it is now proposed to add, after the word "aforesaid" in the said amendment, the words "which is accepted."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want briefly to reply to the arguments that have been made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. Their whole argument is founded on a mistake and an unjust assumption as to what the real condition is. Both Senators start in by stating that this amounts to a perpetual license. If you examine the language carefully you can see nothing of the kind. After that amendment just adopted comes this language:

> Then the commission shall issue, from year to year, an annual license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original license until the property is taken over or a new license issued.

In other words, the Government is not tied up, if you give full meaning and effect to that language; and it is a rule of construction that applies to statutes universally that you must give force and effect to all its parts. If you give force and effect to that part of the statute it simply amounts to this, Mr. President, that the Government, if a license by the original licensee is not taken out, or nobody else takes it out, is only tied up for a year. At the end of the year the Government can take possession of the property or they can give a new license to somebody else. How you can torture that language into a perpetual lease or into a perpetual grant passes my comprehension.

It strikes me, Mr. President, that if at the end of 50 years there is a developed water power it is to the interest of the Government and to the people of the United States that somebody should operate that power. If the original licensee declines to take out a new contract, or fails to do so, the most that he can acquire, if there is not another licensee, is a renewal of the lease for one year. It provides for a license either to a new licensee or to the original licensee; and if a license is not taken out, either by a new licensee or by the original licensee, the most that can happen is that there will be a renewal of the lease for just one year. At the end of that year the Government has still the option of taking over the property or leasing it to somebody else, and that applies year by year every year. You give an annual license for a year, and at the end of the year the Government has the power to take over the property or the power to lease it to a new licensee. How you can construe that language into a perpetual license passes my comprehension.

More than that, Mr. President, I think that is a valuable provision for the Government, in this respect: Suppose for any reason the original licensee declines to proceed further, declines to take out a new license under onerous conditions, as he conceives, and suppose a new license is offered with very onerous and different conditions from the original license. Suppose the licensee feels that he is unable to accept it, and suppose nobody else is willing to come in at the end of the 50 years. The use of that water power ought not to lapse; and so, in order to prevent a lapse, the Government says that it can continue for a year, year by year. But the Government has the right at any time—I take it it would be at the end of the year, probably—to take over the property, and it has the right to make a new license.

So the Government is not bound at all, as it is assumed in the argument. It has a free hand; at the end of every year it can take possession of the property itself or it can lease it to a new licensee.

It seems to me that that is wiser than to have the use of the power entirely lapse. It is the theory of that provision, undoubtedly, that instead of having the use of the water power remain idle or abandoned it shall be extended from year to year. It is like a tenant on a piece of land who holds over because the landlord can not immediately find another tenant. If the original lessee declines to take it over on the terms proposed, or a new lessee declines at the end of the 50 years, there is the power and no one to run it, neither a new licensee nor the old licensee. Under those conditions all the Government can do is to issue a new license from year to year. It is only committed for a year at a time. At the end of every year the Government can take possession of the property or lease it to somebody else. The language is plain and unmistakable. How it can be tortured into the theory and views expressed by the Senators from Nebraska and Wisconsin passes my comprehension.

The language is perfectly plain:

> Then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original license until—

There is nothing perpetual in that—> until the property is taken over—

That means taken over by the Government—> or a new license is issued.

The Government has the option at the end of every year. It is not tied up for more than a year at a time. At the end of every year it has the option to take over the property or to lease it to a new lessee. As I said, how you can torture that into a perpetual lease passes my comprehension. No court would hold such a view as is announced by the Senators from Nebraska and Wisconsin upon that plain language.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Government does not take it over, or a new licensee does not take it over, how many years will the original licensee be entitled to a license from year to year?

Mr. NELSON. That would depend. The Government at the end of every year——

Mr. LENROOT. I said if they did not take it over.

Mr. NELSON. At the end of every year the Government has the option of taking it over or finding a new licensee.

Mr. LENROOT. But if it does neither?

Mr. NELSON. Do you want the power to remain in abeyance?

Mr. LENROOT. If it does neither, for how many years would the original licensee be entitled to a license from year to year?

Mr. NELSON. It is wholly at the option of the Government to determine how many years. It is not at the option of the licensee. The Government can terminate it at the end of every year.

Mr. LENROOT. By taking it over?

Mr. NELSON. No; by letting it to a new licensee.

Mr. LENROOT. If it does neither?

Mr. NELSON. If it does neither, then it continues only for a year at a time.

Mr. LENROOT. For a thousand years?

Mr. NELSON. No. The Government can at the end of any year take the property over or license to a new licensee.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. Let me suggest, in response to what the Senator from Wisconsin has said, that if the Government does not want it and nobody else wants it, and it can not be otherwise disposed of, it would be better to have it run from year to year forever than to be just abandoned and have nobody producing any power.

Mr. NELSON. Certainly; the Senator is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am going to vote against this amendment, but there is not any doubt that the Senator from Minnesota is correct. It is utterly unjustifiable to say that with this language in the bill the right of the licensee becomes perpetual. If I lease a man my house and lot for 10 years, and thereafter he may take it from year to year, until I want it myself, or can find some other tenant for it, I can not say that he has a perpetual license to my house and lot. That is simply a denial of terms. It does not mean anything.

I also want to protest, Mr. President, against the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin that we are now giving away the last resources of the Government. Every time we take up bills looking to the utilization of the vast undeveloped resources of the Government of the United States somebody gets up and characterizes the legislation as an act to give away something.

Mr. President, we are dealing with these water-power interests in the best way we know how, not in the interest of the fellows who get them at all but in the interest of the people of the United States. If we know any better way to handle these great resources for the benefit of the people of the whole country, let us adopt that plan. This is the best plan that has been worked out, and why seek to throw discredit upon this or any other plan by speaking of it as a plan to give away the resources of the United States?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would be very glad to yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator knows it has been the policy to withdraw from utilization possible water-power plants in the West. Does the Senator know how far that policy has been in vogue?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It has been in effect, of course, for the 10 years since 1909.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator know of a single water power that has been developed by the Government, or anybody under the Government, since that policy was adopted 10 years ago?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Practically none. The power is lying there useless to anybody. We are consuming our coal, we are consuming our oil, in the development of power, as was demonstrated by the Senator the other day, to the extent of a million dollars a day, all waste; that might be all saved if we developed and utilized these water powers.

Yet, just as sure as we get up any of these bills, somebody wants to throw discredit upon the thing by talking about giving away something to somebody. We are giving it away to whoever utilizes it, because we believe that the people of the United States get an equivalent arising out of the development of these resources. The Government of the United States is endeavoring to arrange the very best terms they possibly can with the people they are inviting to go out and develop these resources. The Government of the United States, and the people of the United States, want many men who have the money and the enterprise and the initiative to go out there and take those water powers upon the terms we propose, and utilize them instead of allowing them to lie idle.

Now, Mr. President, I think that there is so little difference between the real force and effect of this bill whether the words "which is accepted" are in the bill or out of the bill, that it is a matter of no consequence to me how anybody votes upon the matter. I am going to vote against the committee amendment. I will try to explain, if I can, just exactly the difference between the bill with them in and the bill with them out, and it is scarcely the difference between tweedledee and tweedledum. If you have these words in the bill, then if a lease is tendered to the licensee at the end of his period, and he does not accept it, he is then entitled to a lease from year to year. The Government may take the property over at the end of any year, or it may lease the property to another licensee.

What will happen, Mr. President, if these words are not in the bill? Then let us assume that the 50-year period has expired, and the commission tenders to the licensee a new license, but it is not satisfactory to him and he does not accept it. Under the circumstances he will not be entitled to a lease from year to year. But will the plant stop? Will the industries that have been developed and grown up by reason of the existence of this power plant, and which are supplied by power from it, stop? Will the great communities that have been built up, will the populous cities that get their light from these power plants, go in darkness? Will street railways getting their power from the power plant stop running? Will the mills and factories that supply the population of great cities with labor supplied with power from the power plant go idle?

Why, Mr. President, it is unthinkable. The court will not permit anything of the kind. If the parties who own the property should endeavor to stop running it the court would mandamus them and compel them to go on and operate the property, and they would be entitled to receive compensation for the service they rendered, and they would be obligated to pay to the United States a reasonable sum for the use of the property of the United States during that time.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota first.

Mr. NELSON. I want to ask a question of the Senator from Montana, who is a very able lawyer. The amendment which we have already adopted provides that in the event the United States does not issue a license to a new licensee or tender a new license to the original licensee, then this condition takes place. The question I propound is this: If no new license is issued, would not a mere tender of a license made to the original licensee set in operation the balance of the proviso, and would not these words apply, that "then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license," and so forth?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the commission tenders a license——

Mr. NELSON. If there was a mere tender, would not that set that portion in operation?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If there was a tender of the license and it was not accepted, then the licensee would not be entitled to a license from year to year. If the license was tendered and was accepted, of course that would dispose of the matter.

Mr. NELSON. But if a tender was made and no new license executed, and no acceptance of the tender, what then?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the tender was made, then the concluding portion would not come into operation; there would be no license from year to year. The license from year to year would come into operation only in case the commission made no tender of a new license.

Mr. NELSON. But suppose the tender of a new license was not accepted and it did not go into operation; then the plant would remain idle?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; the plant would not remain idle.

Mr. NELSON. What would become of the plant?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. None of the plants would remain idle. That is just the point I am making. It would not remain idle and could not remain idle.

Mr. NELSON. What would become of it if a license was not issued to a new licensee or a tender made to the original licensee and neither of such terms or licenses were accepted and the 50 years were out? What would become of the property?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It would go right on operating just the same as before.

Mr. NELSON. They would continue to hold under the original license?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. They would not continue to hold under the original license; they would simply be occupants of the property.

Mr. NELSON. They would be tenants by sufferance?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; holding just as long as the Government consented to that situation.

Mr. NELSON. They would be tenants by sufferance until interfered with by the Government?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly. So the only difference between the two would be that in the one case they would be tenants by sufferance and the Government entitled to put them out at any time, and under the other arrangement they would be tenants from year to year and the Government entitled to put them out at the end of the year. That is all the difference.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. NELSON. In the one case they would be tenants by sufferance and in the other case tenants from year to year, and the Government could in one case intervene at any moment and in the other case at the end of the year.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator has stated my views correctly.

Mr. NELSON. So that the argument that the provision makes a perpetual lease is not true, is it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not take that view of it. I yield now to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator says that the only difference is that they would be a tenant by sufferance in the one case and a tenant from year to year in the other, and in either case the Government could put them out.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not mean that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course I do. Why should I not mean it?

Mr. LENROOT. Because under the license from year to year, as proposed by the amendment, that year to year must run on forever, unless the Government takes over the property and unless the Government pays compensation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So must the tenancy by sufferance run on forever.

Mr. LENROOT. No. Under a tenancy by sufferance the Government does not have to take it over, but can order it removed and stop the work, unless they accept the tenancy.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the proposition I want to present. Of course, the party holding the license, with a great community depending upon it, would be obliged to operate. It is a public-service corporation. In our city a water company had a franchise to supply the city with water. It had a franchise for 20 years. The 20-year franchise expired and they were threatening to shut off the water as soon as their license expired unless a new franchise, upon terms dictated by them, should be granted them. We proceeded by mandamus against them and compelled them, notwithstanding the expiration of the period of their license, to supply the city with water. They were entitled simply to a reasonable compensation for the services rendered, the city being entitled at any time to grant a new franchise or license to anyone else that would assume operation there.

This power plant would be supplying industries and the court would require the power plant to continue supplying the industries. Of course, the Government of the United States could step in and say, "We propose to tear this whole business out"; but just think of the United States doing anything of that kind!

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think they would.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, they would have power to do it; but we must remember that this is in the hands of a governmental commission, consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture. Now, just imagine those men going to Niagara Falls, for instance, and directing the destruction of a dam across Niagara Falls, with populous industrial centers upon both sides of the international line dependent upon the continuance of the operation of that dam at Niagara Falls.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am thoroughly in accord with the views of the Senator, even if the words "which is accepted" are included, that it does not make a perpetual lease, as is insisted by the Senator from Wisconsin. If I thought so, I would be opposed to the amendment myself. The Senator from Montana opposes it, but I favor it simply for the reason that it fixes the terms of the contract definitely for one year after the 50-year period has expired, whereas if you leave it "which is accepted," the language proposed as an amendment, there is no definiteness, there is no certainty about the terms under which the plant shall be operated. In other words, as the Senator says, we will have to go into court and have the court fix the rate for the original licensee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is quite right about that, and that is why I am in favor of it. I am in favor of it because if it goes on from year to year it will go on upon the terms of the original lease. We are speaking about a condition 50 years from now. Fifty years from now the terms and conditions of the lease, although they are all right so far as the public are concerned now, may be exorbitant so far as the public are concerned 50 years from now.

I do not want the public to be obliged to pay any more than the fair value of the thing at that time nor the fair value of the service at that time. That is to say, it may be entirely unfair to the public and they will be obliged to pay at that time to the Government, for the use of the property of the United States of which they make use, the fair value of the property at that time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does not the Senator believe that if the charges as fixed now are exorbitant at the end of the 50-year period, there is no question but that there will be a great many applicants for the new license?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let us suppose it is the other way. Let us suppose they are disproportionately low. Of course, we want to encourage these enterprises. We are going to try to have the commission fix the initial price as low as it is possible, and accordingly 50 years from now the price which they pay will not be adequate, considering conditions that exist at that time. I do not want to allow them to go on from year to year under the lease by which they are obliged to pay the original amount if a greater amount than that is due. But the Senator is quite right. If it is inordinately low, there possibly will be bidders at that time, but notwithstanding that there is not enough difference between the two propositions, as I view them, to cause any very great concern on the part of anybody.

Mr. LENROOT. Is not this the difference between the two propositions? If the Senate committee amendment is adopted, the Government must tender a lease such as the licensee is willing to agree to or else go on under the original license, while without the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota the licensee will accept such terms as the Government is willing to tender or else must make fair compensation to the Government for the use of the property.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I canvassed that the other day, and I believe both of them are under more or less constraint. I do not quite agree with that, because the Government will be under a measure of constraint to have the plants go on as well as the licensee will be under some constraint to accept the terms that are proposed. The Government will want the plant to go on, and to go on under terms that are entirely satisfactory, because, as I have indicated, it will be supplying industries and communities. Those communities will all be bringing pressure to bear upon the governmental agencies to conclude a contract that will enable them to go on and make contracts for a long period of time, and so the commission will be constrained to yield to their demands and exact a less price than they otherwise would.

On the other hand, the licensee, desirous of putting himself in a position where he can make contracts for the future, will want a license. So I believe the conditions are such as to bring them together on fairly reasonable terms. I do not believe the language is necessary at all, and I am accordingly going to vote for it, but the difference between the two propositions it seems to me is by no means as important as one would gather from the discussion.

Mr. NELSON. Unless there is some one, and I know of no one, who wants to discuss the bill further this evening, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 13, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 12, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Come Thou Almighty Father, with all Thy potent influence, shed abroad the light of heaven to illumine our minds and strengthen our hearts, that we may walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, satisfy the longings, hopes, and aspirations of our souls, and leave behind us a record worthy of emulation.

Each day brings its new opportunities. Strengthen us to surmount the barriers in the way, to beat down the temptations which assail us and march on to a higher civilization. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 10, 1920, was read and approved.

EXPENSES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7158) to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

Pending that motion, I should like to see if we can reach some agreement about the time for general debate. It has been suggested that we have two hours on a side, four hours of general debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the debate be limited to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan make that a part of his request?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; I would be glad to have it limited to the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know whether the debate is going to be divided between those who are for the bill and those who are against it, and how it is going to be divided?

Mr. MAPES. As far as I am concerned, I would be glad to have the time in opposition controlled by some gentleman who is opposed to the bill. It has been suggested that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD] control the time on that side.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, what is the request?

The SPEAKER. As so far presented, it is that the general debate on this bill be limited to four hours and that it be confined to the bill.

Mr. MAPES. In order to get it before the House I will ask that the time be controlled one-half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD] and one-half by myself.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are you both for the bill or both against it?

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD] is against the bill and I am for it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to four hours, to be confined to the bill, one-half to be controlled by himself for the measure and one-half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD] against the measure. Is there objection?

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, we think one-half the time should be controlled on the Democratic side. Speaking for the other members of the committee, I will say that we will try to apportion the time to Members, regardless of which side of the bill they are on.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, the committee, as I understand it, are about fifty-fifty on this bill. Eight members have signed the minority report, and I think that those who are opposed to the bill are undoubtedly entitled to control the time on that phase of the subject.

Mr. CARTER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Are there any Members of the minority of the House who are opposed to the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No Member of the minority signed the report. I do not know.

Mr. CARTER. If any Member of the minority of the House is opposed to the bill, certainly he should have control of the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The minority report is signed entirely by Members on this side of the aisle.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS] is a member of the committee, and he is for the bill and against the fifty-fifty business. Now, Mr. Speaker, every time we have a long debate here there is this same row about who shall represent what. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS] controls half the time, I think he will treat Democrats and others fairly and parcel out the time to both sides.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Who is to control the other half? The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS] is for the bill and the chairman of the committee is for the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not care anything about what the chairman of the committee is in favor of. I am talking about having the control of half the time on our side.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think on general principles we ought to have seven-eighths of the time. We have got the wisdom on this side, and the people are for us and against you. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARD. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS] are both in favor of the bill. Has there been any arrangement about the division of the time between the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS] and the chairman of the committee?

Mr. MAPES. No; there has not. If I am to control the time in favor of the bill, I expect to yield to those members of the committee who desire time.

Mr. GARD. I suppose the gentleman will also yield to other Members of the House who desire to speak on it?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask a question. I notice that the bill says that the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that such revenues shall be sufficient therefor and that the remainder shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Will the chairman of the committee object to an amendment saying that not more than 50 per cent thereof shall be paid by the United States?

Mr. MAPES. I think that question may very properly be considered when we take up the bill under the five-minute rule, and that the chairman of the committee ought not to agree to any such amendment at this time.

Mr. LITTLE. I do not ask the gentleman to agree to it. I just wondered if you would object particularly.

Mr. MAPES. Yes; I think I would object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. GARD. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state it again. The request is that general debate be limited to four hours, to be confined to the bill, half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] and half the time by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. MAPES was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7158) to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia, with Mr. FESS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all appropriations of money to provide for the payment of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid, from and after July 1, 1920, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that such revenues shall be sufficient therefor, and the remainder shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That the amounts to pay the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of the District of Columbia shall be paid one-half out of the revenues of the said District and one-half out of the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts in so far as they conflict with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for two hours.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members present, a quorum.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, if this bill had not been dignified by persistent and highly respectable opposition one would not think that it was of such great significance or that it was of paramount importance either to the Nation or to the residents of the District of Columbia. Attempts have been made to read different meanings into it, which are not expressed in the bill itself. Opposition to it arises chiefly because of what its opponents have worked themselves up to imagine it means, or what they imagine will follow its enactment into law, rather than because of anything contained in the bill itself.

It is short and simple. There is no hidden meaning in it. It is hoped by its passage to accomplish two things only. The first is to clear up a legislative situation which has embarrassed the procedure of Congress for several years and on one or two occasions has almost been the means of causing an extra session of Congress. The second is to make available the present surplus in the Federal Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia and change a provision of existing law which prevents the expenditure of a part of the money now raised by taxation because of the arbitrary fixed tax rate.

The language of the bill is the same in effect as that which has been carried as a rider upon the District of Columbia appropriation bill and passed by the House of Representatives five different times in as many years, namely, in the third session of the Sixty-third Congress, the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, the second and third sessions of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and again in the first session of the present Congress. As is well known, the House of Representatives has passed it, but the Senate has not only not passed it but has refused to give it serious consideration, assigning as the reason for its refusal to do so that it was a rider upon an appropriation bill, and that it would not consider a matter of so much importance in that way. As a result, in order to secure the passage of the District appropriation bill, the House each time has been obliged to recede from its insistence upon the legislation. In order to meet the objection of the Senate, and conceding that it is better procedure to consider it as a separate bill than as a rider upon an appropriation bill, as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia I introduced it as a separate bill, and the committee has considered and reported it as such. Its enactment into law would remedy this legislative situation, with which you are all familiar, and eliminate the cause which has held up the District appropriation bill for several sessions of Congress, and which apparently becomes more serious in each succeeding Congress. If the Senate refuses to consider it as a separate bill, the House can hereafter very properly insist upon its staying in the District appropriation bill.

But it is said that if passed it would repeal the half and half. So it would. People therefore favor or oppose the pending bill because they oppose or favor the half and half. But there are other considerations which should be kept in mind in order to have a complete understanding of the situation here in the District, so far as the system of taxation and of making appropriations for the expenses of the District government are concerned. In fact there are three provisions of existing law which ought to be kept in mind throughout the consideration of this legislation.

The first one is referred to as the half-and-half law. The half and half, as applied to the principle of making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, gets its name from the provision in the act of 1878 providing a form of government for the District of Columbia, which reads as follows:

> To the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates (i. e., the annual estimates to Congress of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the expenses of the District government), Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof, and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and the District of Columbia.

The second provision to be kept in mind is contained in an act approved March 3, 1909, and limits the action of the commissioners in submitting their estimates. It is as follows:

> The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not submit, nor shall the Secretary of the Treasury transmit, to Congress regular annual estimates for expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for any fiscal year that shall exceed in the aggregate a sum equal to twice the amount of the total estimated revenues of the District of Columbia for such fiscal year. Said estimates shall take into consideration and embrace all charges against the said revenues arising under appropriations other than the regular District of Columbia bill.

The third provision of existing law to be kept in mind is the one making the arbitrary fixed tax rate for the District of Columbia. The tax rate does not fluctuate or depend at all upon the budget or the expenditures of the municipality as it does in all other cities or municipalities in the United States. Every other community knows that it must pay for public improvements and benefits either by increased taxes or bonded indebtedness. There is no such restraining influence against extravagance here. Is there any wonder that there is such a persistent demand on the part of local interests for increased governmental expenditures in the District of Columbia as long as they receive practically all of the benefits and bear none of the burdens of such increase? No matter how much or how little, how extravagant or how economical the expenditures of the government of the District of Columbia are, the tax rate remains the same. Consequently the amount of taxes raised from the fixed tax rate is in no way dependent upon the needs of the government, but is likewise fixed and arbitrary.

What is the result of these different laws? The result is that there is raised every year by taxation within the District of Columbia a sum of money greater than one-half the total amount which Congress, in its wisdom, sees fit to appropriate for the government of the District. A surplus is thereby created in favor of the District which under existing laws can not be used. This surplus is deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and is there held to the credit of the District of Columbia. It now amounts to $4,063,922.18. It increases from year to year, and unless there is some change in existing law it can never be used.

Furthermore, as the value of the property within the District increases, if the assessed valuation is raised accordingly, the amount added to this surplus each year will be more and more.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What is the amount of that surplus at this time?

Mr. MAPES. Four million and sixty-three thousand dollars in round numbers.

In addition to that, out of the total annual appropriation for the District of Columbia at present the sum of $975,408 is for the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt to retire the so-called 3.65 bonds. The entire bonded indebtedness will be paid off in 1922, after which the District surplus will be increased on the same calculation, one-half of $975,408, or $487,704 per year, nearly one-half million dollars, in addition to the amount now being added to the surplus to the credit of the District every year.

Anyone at all familiar with the procedure of Congress knows that it will not appropriate for more than the commissioners' estimate, but it will in all probability pare down their estimates. Accordingly, if some such legislation as this is not passed there is bound to be a surplus of revenue raised in the District by taxation over and above the District's half of the appropriation.

There may be some reason why Congress should permit such a situation to continue, but I have been unable to find any that appealed to me, and it seems to me that it would be difficult to propose a bill that would be more conservative or more in accord with sound economic business and common sense than the present one.

The total assessed valuation of the real estate in the District of Columbia (I speak only of real estate, because the taxes on real estate constitute most of the District's revenue) for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, was $390,098,849, and for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, it was $414,610,691, or an increase in assessed valuation of $24,511,842, or a little over 6 per cent for the four years covering the war period. Land and improvements thereon are valued separately for assessment purposes in the District. It is of interest to know that the valuation of the land in the District, without the improvements, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, was $208,085,318, and for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, was $208,097,025, an increase of less than $12,000 for the entire District in the four war years.

It would be amusing, if it were not such a serious matter to so many people, to call attention to the difference between the increased value of real estate in the District of Columbia for assessment purposes and the increase in the value for sale or rental purposes during this same period; but, looking at the matter from the standpoint of the local interests, it would be folly to increase the assessed valuation as long as the present very low tax rate will produce a surplus in favor of the District, which can not be touched because of a law which Congress permits to remain upon the statute books, and it is expecting almost too much of human nature to think that the assessor's office, surrounded as it is by local influences, will do so. From the standpoint of the local interests, which the officials of the District of Columbia represent, existing law offers every inducement to the assessor on the one hand to keep down the assessed valuation and to the commissioners on the other to pad their estimates.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there another city of 400,000 people in the United States that has as low tax rate as the District of Columbia?

Mr. MAPES. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BLANTON. One further question: Is it not a fact that every owner of property in the District of Columbia, whether he is a Representative or a Senator or an ordinary civilian, benefits by this low rate of taxation?

Mr. MAPES. It seems to me so.

The assessor, in the very nature of things, will not care to raise by taxation from his local associates more revenue than can be used, and the commissioners will endeavor to find ways and means of spending all the revenue that the arbitrary system with which they have to deal provides them. It would seem as though the present laws were a direct invitation to the local officials to figure in every way possible to give the National Government the worst of it.

From the standpoint of the national interest, can any defense be made to a system which encourages such results? It is positively vicious in its tendencies. Can Congress justify itself in permitting a law which produces such a situation to remain on the statute books? Why should we perpetuate a law or a system which arbitrarily raises by taxation more money every year than can be expended?

A great many Members of the House of Representatives are justly proud of their business experience and success. Is there a business man who would permit such a system in his personal affairs or private business?

Is here not a good place for Congress to begin to economize by making available the present surplus of $4,063,922.18 now in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia, as well as the future surpluses which are bound to arise every year? Is there any better time to make the change than now, when people are being taxed to the limit and are demanding a reduction in all Government expenditures wherever possible?

The pending bill does not propose to increase the tax rate or change in any way the tax system now in effect in the District. If it should be enacted into law the taxpayers in the District would not thereby be required to pay 1 cent more in taxes than they are now required to pay. It merely provides, to quote the language of the bill, that the "expenses of the District of Columbia shall be paid from and after July 1, 1920, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that such revenues shall be sufficient therefor, and the remainder shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States"; that is, apply the money that is now raised by taxation in the District of Columbia by the present arbitrary tax rate fixed by law, as far as it will go, toward the payment of the expenses of the District government, the balance to be paid out of the Federal Treasury.

Inasmuch as the taxes paid by the residents of the District, based upon a true valuation of their property, are very much less than the taxes figured upon the same basis paid by residents of any other city in the United States which approaches Washington in size or advantages, it would seem not only eminently fair to the taxpayers of the District but exceedingly liberal to them, as long as they are not required to pay any more, to use the money thus raised before asking the Federal Government to contribute to the expenses of the local government, and that not to do so is grossly unfair to the taxpayers of other cities, who pay much higher taxes for State, county, and municipal purposes and who are required to pay their proportionate share of any contribution by the Federal Government to the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

Keeping in mind the three provisions of law to which I have called attention, namely, the half-and-half law, the law fixing an arbitrary rate of taxation for the District, and the law limiting the estimates of the commissioners to twice the estimated revenues of the District, I submit that there is no escape from the indefensible condition to which I have called attention without the passage of some such legislation as is proposed in the pending bill unless Congress plans to appropriate more than it allows the commissioners to estimate for or is willing to repeal the law limiting their estimates, either one of which alternatives would be a direct invitation to extravagance in the conduct of District affairs, and now is a poor time for Congress to be making such suggestions to any department of the Government.

There is one other alternative, which the modesty of the local taxpayers has not permitted them even to suggest, and that is a reduction of the already low tax rate, and that, of course, would not make available the present surplus.

Some of the witnesses before the District Committee criticized the House of Representatives and the committee for passing this legislation without giving it proper consideration and without a sufficient understanding of the subject. The answer to that criticism is that the matter has been before Congress for several years, and the criticism directed against the Members of Congress who favor the legislation is due to the fact that they understand the question too well to suit certain people instead of too little.

The joint select committee of Congress, appointed pursuant to the act approved March 3, 1915, to determine the fiscal relation between the United States and the District of Columbia, recommended the principle proposed in this bill. That committee, on page 8 of its report, said:

> We find after a most careful consideration of all of the evidence and circumstances as shown to exist at this time that there is no reason for any arbitrary rule of proportionate contribution for the expenses of the District of Columbia by the residents thereof and by the people of the United States who reside outside the District of Columbia; that the correct rule should be that the responsibility in taxation of the residents of the District of Columbia be as fixed and certain as the responsibility of residents of other American cities comparable with the city of Washington.

This proposed legislation was also recommended in substance by the then two civilian Commissioners of the District, Mr. Newman and Mr. Brownlow, when they appeared before the joint select committee. The commissioners represented the city government, and, although representing and surrounded entirely by local interests, they had the courage to speak their convictions on this subject, and their statements are a complete answer to every objection that has been raised to the legislation. Commissioner Newman testified before the joint committee on page 917 of the hearings:

> It seems to me that these certain surpluses automatically dispose of the half and half, for this reason, that to defend the half and half in the face of them means to do one of two things—appropriate twice as much money every year as the District raises and thereby absorb the surplus or reduce the tax rate in the District of Columbia.
> I do not anticipate that any member of this committee would seriously propose to this Congress a reduction of the tax rate in the District of Columbia. When you realize—> that this 1 per cent includes a great many State and county taxes which you pay in your home cities it must be apparent to each of you that the present tax rate, at least, is not oppressive. On the other hand, I think it must be apparent also to every member of this committee, when you sit down and calmly consider the appropriating habits of the Congress of the United States, that Congress is not going to make appropriations for twice the amount of these increasing revenues of the District of Columbia.

He said—

And again, on page 918 of the hearings, Mr. Newman said:

> If you continue the half-and-half, in order to obviate the accumulation of a surplus which will not be used you must do one of two things, reduce the tax rate or appropriate twice the amount raised by the existing tax rate. I do not believe that Congress will appropriate twice the amount of taxes raised in the District of Columbia, and I say that because those things do not happen in the process of making appropriations.

And again he said:

> Unless you reduce the tax rate that surplus is bound to accumulate. Just one word—> as to why that surplus should not be piled up. We do not need it—I mean, as a surplus. Our indebtedness is very small. We owe less than $6,000,000.

It has since been reduced so that now it is only a little over $2,000,000.

> The balance of the 3.65 bonds is all the money that the District of Columbia owes. In other words, we have a debt less than $6,000,000 (now $2,000,000) and an assessed valuation of about $400,000,000. We are in very fine financial condition. If at any time it was desirable to undertake a large extraordinary project—for instance, the development of the Great Falls water-power scheme—it could, and I think should be financed by a bond issue, as other municipalities finance unusual expenses of that character, and this could be done for the double reason that we have a very small debt and that we have a very great advantage over every other city in the issuing of bonds, in that we can float them at a lower rate of interest.
> A defender of the half-and-half system might—

> with some logic advocate the payment of the balance of less than $6,000,000 of 3.65 bonds with the surplus of District revenues, but we are paying those bonds off at a rate of about $700,000 a year now, and even if we should devote all our surplus to paying off these bonds in two or three years they would be paid up and we would again be in the same situation we are in now.

Commissioner Brownlow, before the same committee, testified on page 930 of the hearings as follows:

> I do not believe it is possible to arrive at an equitable proportion by the process of treating the holdings of the Federal Government as private property and exacting from the Federal Treasury a contribution which would equal the amount of taxes levied upon the Federal property if it were in private ownership.
> Neither do I believe that an equitable proportion can be stated in terms of percentages. Any fixed apportionment implies a marked division between national and municipal functions and interests, and if there be such division, in the nature of events it must vary from year to year. Assuming that there is such a division of interest, it must follow that if the half-and-half be entirely just and equitable this year, it may well be that next year it will be unjust and inequitable.
> I believe that the National Government should assume full and sole responsibility for the National Capital, meeting its every expense by a direct appropriation from the Federal Treasury; that the people here should contribute toward the national expenses an amount equal to the taxes paid by citizens of other American cities of approximately the same size.

If the Commissioners of the District, representing as they did the local government, took that position, why should Congress hesitate to pass this legislation?

The legislation is opposed because its opponents think they see in it an attempt to raise more money by taxation in the District. They fear that its passage will mark the beginning of legislation to require the taxpayers of the District of Columbia to pay more taxes, taxes more like what people have to pay who live in other cities in the United States, and their opposition to it on that ground leads them to maintain that the taxes paid by the residents of the District of Columbia are now fairly comparable to those paid in other cities. The statement of their position on this point, as stated in the minority report, is that "the property taxes paid by citizens of Washington are fairly comparable in every way to the taxes paid by citizens of other cities similar to Washington in resources and population."

It does not follow that the passage of this bill will be followed by other legislation increasing the tax rate in the District, although as far as I am concerned I am willing to meet the issue thus raised by its opponents.

I have no desire to argue the perfectly obvious. The membership of the House who pay taxes in other places know how the tax rate here compares with what they have to pay in other places. It is only necessary to compare their tax receipts on other property with the tax rate here.

The law requires that real estate in the District of Columbia shall be assessed at "not less than two-thirds of the true value thereof," and the assessor in making the assessment acts upon the assumption that the law requires him to assess it at not more than two-thirds of the true value. The rate upon that two-thirds assessed valuation is 1½ per cent, or 1 per cent of the true value, assuming that the assessment is actually two-thirds of the true value.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Can the committee advise us as to what the corresponding value is comparing the actual sales made at the time of the last assessment with the value fixed by the assessment?

Mr. MAPES. In a general sort of a way I will say, as I have called attention to the fact, that the assessed value in the District of real estate has increased about 6 per cent in the last four years, and the gentleman can draw his own conclusion as to whether or not that is equal to the actual increase of value.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. There has been no actual comparison made by the committee?

Mr. MAPES. No actual comparison.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the value approximates very closely to the assessed value.

Mr. MAPES. I will say that there was some evidence introduced along that line. I think it has been the consensus of opinion here in the District that after the report of the so-called George committee in 1912 the tax assessors raised the assessment of the real estate generally, at least the down-town portion of it, to where the assessed valuation was about two-thirds of the real value. Of course, since that time, as gentlemen know, we have had the war, and valuations have gone up very much.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I submit that the gentleman ought to give the figures given in the hearings as to the bona fide sales and assessed value in the down-town section.

Mr. MAPES. I have not those figures, but I assume the gentleman will give them when he gets the floor.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. Would it not be fundamentally wrong to increase the tax laid in the District of Columbia when it is absolutely shown that the money can not be used for District purposes?

Mr. MAPES. There does not seem to me to be any sense in it. I do not think the assessors, with the local influences, will have any tendency to increase the assessment under present conditions.

Mr. ROSE. Is there any city in the United States that has a surplus fund as shown here raised from taxation?

Mr. MAPES. Not that I know of.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman please state what the assessment is on personal property in the District as compared with the tax on personal property in other cities?

Mr. MAPES. I am coming to that in a minute.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have heard it stated that this is a rendezvous for people who wish to avoid taxation on personal property, and that is the reason for my question.

Mr. BLANTON. And that is what it is.

Mr. MAPES. For practical purposes, the tax rate on personal property might well be ignored in the consideration of this question, as it usually is as a matter of fact, because the great bulk of the taxes in the District are raised on the real property, although the rate on personal property here is much lower as compared with the rate on personal property in most other places than even the rate on real estate.

Intangible personal property, such as stocks, bonds, notes, mortgages, etc., is taxed at four-tenths of 1 per cent only, and tangible property, after exempting household furniture to the value of $1,000 and all libraries, wearing apparel, articles of personal adornment, family pictures, and heirlooms entirely, pays a tax of 1½ per cent.

In my opinion it requires no argument to convince the impartial student of affairs or the taxpayers of other localities that the residents of no other city in the United States which approaches Washington in population or advantages enjoy anywhere near as low a tax rate, based upon a true valuation of the property, as do the taxpayers of Washington. The truth of this statement has been demonstrated over and over again in the discussion of the subject upon the floor of the House. Congressman Prouty, of Iowa, in the Sixty-third Congress, put into the RECORD a list of 40 leading cities throughout the country, giving the tax rate in each city, figured on the true valuation of the property. The average for all the cities was about 2 per cent, or twice what it is in Washington on the real estate alone.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, testified before our committee on page 240 of the hearings, that in his home city, with a population of about 45,000, a house and lot, which would sell for $4,000, paid from $90 to $100 taxes. Here it would pay $40, assuming that it was fully assessed.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], a member of the committee, showed the committee a tax receipt for the taxes on a piece of property in a city in his district, valued at $4,000, on which he had paid taxes amounting to $132, or over three and one-third times what the same property would pay in the District of Columbia. Mr. LANHAM stated that the valuation on his property was a fair market value, and that the gross annual return from the property was only $393.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. DRANE] brought out the fact that the tax rate on a full valuation in Jacksonville, Fla., is 3½ per cent, in Tampa and Lakeland, Fla., it is 3 per cent.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN], who signed the minority report, brought out the fact before the committee that the tax rate on a valuation of 80 per cent in the city of Baltimore is 3½ per cent, which is equivalent to 2⅘ per cent on a full valuation, or two and two-thirds times what it is here in Washington.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], in testifying before the committee, showed that the tax rate, including city, county, and State taxes, in Louisville, Ky., was 2.72 per cent on a true valuation; in Dallas, Tex., 2.97 per cent; in Buffalo, N. Y., 3.93 per cent on a valuation of 94 per cent. And so one might go on, but it seems to me unnecessary to multiply examples to prove what all human experience shows to be the fact.

I would like, however, to call attention to one further piece of testimony on this subject. The minority report filed against this bill is said to have been written by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS]. It is fair to assume, therefore, that he is the author of the statement appearing in the minority report to which I have called attention, to the effect that—

> The property taxes paid by citizens of Washington are fairly comparable in every way to the taxes paid by citizens of other cities similar to Washington in resources and population.

The newspapers of the District have in the last few days called attention to the fact that some of the members of the committee who voted to report this bill have since indorsed the minority report. It may be interesting to know the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois on this point which he makes in the report at the time of the hearings, as voluntarily expressed by him before the committee.

On page 167 of the hearings, Mr. WILLIAMS, interrupting the witness, Mr. Theodore Noyes, made this statement:

> I do not think that we can sustain this proposition if we start out to assert that the property bears as much taxes in the District of Columbia as it does in other parts of the country.

And, again, on page 163, Mr. WILLIAMS, interrupting the same witness, said:

> It does not pay to say to Congress that the taxes are as high in other cities as they are in the city of Washington, when as a matter of fact Members of Congress know that that is not a sound proposition, because they pay taxes in different cities.

I am willing to stand on that proposition as announced by the gentleman from Illinois during the hearings, and I challenge anyone to prove that it is incorrect.

I thought, perhaps, that the statement in the minority report might be based upon the personal experience of those who signed it, so last week I sent identical telegrams to the city treasurers of the home cities of all the Members who signed that report to ascertain the tax rate in their home cities, in order to see how it compared with the rate in Washington. Some of them live in small places—smaller than I realized until I looked up the population in the census report—but I think it is fair to say that the larger the city the more advantages it affords in the way of paved streets, sewer system, water works, public lighting system, and so forth, and the higher is the tax rate, so that the comparison would naturally be in favor of their position.

The telegram in each case was addressed to the city treasurer, and the body of it was as follows:

Will you telegraph me collect tax rate for one year on assessed valuation of property in (name of town), including city, county, and State taxes, and basis of assessment, whether on full valuation or not?

I will give the replies, as far as I have received replies, from the different city treasurers of the home cities of the signers of the minority report in the order in which their names appear on the report.

The first is from the city treasurer of Louisville, Ill., the home of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS]. Louisville, Ill., according to the census report, had a population in 1910 of 670. It is therefore only a village. I do not know whether or not it has a sewer system, a public lighting system, water works, or how many paved streets, or what other city improvements and advantages it may have; but the telegram from the treasurer of Louisville is as follows:

Tax rate, city, $1.43½; county rate, regular, 50 cents, and special, 34 cents; State rate, 40 cents; taxes computed on one-half valuation.

FRED MCCOLUM,
City Treasurer.

The combined rate given in the telegram makes a total tax in Louisville, a village of 670 inhabitants, of $2.67 for every hundred dollars' assessment on a 50 per cent valuation, or $1.33 on a full valuation, which is one and one-third times as much as the residents of the National Capital have to pay, with all of its advantages.

Without taking the time to read the other telegrams in full, I will only give their substance.

I did not receive any reply to my telegram to the city treasurer of Seneca Falls, N. Y. On looking up the census I find reference to Seneca Falls village, and perhaps I did not properly address the telegram. The treasurer of the city of Cumberland, Md., the home of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] replied that the taxes in that city, for the city were $1; for the county, $1.17; for the State, $0.31, and that the assessed valuation of the city is $25,000,000, and the basis of taxation about 80 per cent. Twenty-five million dollars assessed valuation is over one-fifteenth of the assessed valuation of the city of Washington. The population of Cumberland was 21,000 in 1910. The total tax rate on 80 per cent in Cumberland, according to the telegram is $2.48 per hundred, or on a basis of 100 per cent it would be $1.98, or practically twice what it is in the National Capital.

The city treasurer of Clarksburg, W. Va., the home of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. REED], telegraphed that the city rate there was 60 cents; the State and county tax rate, $1.44; and the basis of assessment, full valuation, making the total tax rate of $2.20 in a city with a population of 9,201.

The city treasurer of Cape Girardau, Mo., the home of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAYS], telegraphed that the rate, city, county, and State in that city is $3.38, and the assessment basis 45 per cent. That is equivalent to $1.50—or one and one-half times what it is in the great National Capital—in a city with a population of 8,475.

The city treasurer of Lewisburg, Pa., a city with a population in 1910 of 3,081, telegraphed that the assessed valuation of Lewisburg is $1,520,605, that the school tax is 10 mills, the borough tax 6½ mills, the borough bond tax 2¾ mills, and the poor tax 3 mills, on a valuation of 75 per cent, making a total tax of 22¼ mills on the valuation of 75 per cent, or one and two-thirds as much as is paid in the District of Columbia.

The treasurer of the city of Steubenville, Ohio, the home of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY], a city with a population of 22,000, one of the largest from which I received replies, telegraphed that the total tax rate there is $17.40 per thousand on a valuation which is about three-fourths of the true valuation at the present time, which would make $1.30 on a full valuation, or one and one-third times what it is in the city of Washington.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. The valuation for taxation when those figures were given was such that you could not sell your property for the tax value in many instances stated. The figures given are not fair.

Mr. MAPES. That perhaps explains the wording of the latter part of the telegram, which seemed to me to destroy its value, but after the gentleman's explanation I think it helps, because the telegram says:

This assessed valuation is about three-fourths of the true valuation at the present time.

It, of course, is higher than it was when the assessment was made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was the rate of the tax levied in the city of Steubenville?

Mr. MAPES. The total was $17.40.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On a two-thirds valuation?

Mr. MAPES. On a three-fourths valuation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How would that make more than twice the rate in the city of Washington?

Mr. MAPES. I said one and one-third.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I misunderstood the gentleman. That includes the county and State tax?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; it includes all the tax they have to pay, as the 1 cent includes all of the tax the residents of the District of Columbia have to pay.

I have only one more, from the city treasurer of Springfield, Ill., the home of the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. WHEELER. He telegraphed that the total tax rate for the city of Springfield is $6.67½ on $100 assessed valuation, property assessed on one-half of 65 per cent of full value, which is $2.13 per hundred on full valuation, in a city with a population of 51,000.

Of course, there is no other city that has the same advantages that Washington has, so that it is impossible to make an absolute comparison with other cities, but for one I do not believe that it is possible to successfully maintain the position that property in Washington pays as much taxes as property in any other city in the United States which approaches it in population or advantages.

The witnesses before the committee in their attempt to justify their position argued that the per capita tax, or the total tax of the city, should be the basis of comparison. I do not believe that there is any justness in such a comparison. Time will not permit any more than a reference to that argument, but it seems to me that a person's ability to pay or the amount of property he owns should determine his tax obligation in Washington, the same as it does in other places. In other words, to give an extreme illustration, a community consisting of millionaires should expect to pay more than a community consisting of paupers, even though each has the same number of souls. The great body of industrial workers and laborers in other cities, whose per capita tax is small, more than offsets any similar body in Washington. It is well known that there are scarcely enough working people in Washington to take care of the demand in this nonindustrial city.

The minority report, in addition to the interesting historical résumé which it gives of the fiscal relations between the National and District Governments, concludes with two other statements to which I can only refer. It says that "the amount of revenue derived from District taxation doubled by the addition of a like amount from the Federal Treasury is not more than the needs of the District require."

The answer to that is, as already pointed out, that it is more than Congress has appropriated for the last few years, or in all probability will ever again appropriate in the future for the needs of the District, and now is a poor time for Congress to adopt a policy of more liberal appropriations for any department of the Government.

The final conclusion of the opponents of the bill is that the "best interests of the Capital City will be served by leaving unchanged the act of June 11, 1878." It is the old argument. Because a thing has always been, do not change it, no matter what changes have taken place in the circumstances which brought it into being. The Congress of 1878 could not fix the legislative policy of the Nation toward the District for all time.

There is nothing sacred about the half-and-half law. The reason for it no longer exists. It was passed to save the city from itself after a period of gross mismanagement and extravagance in the administration of the city's affairs. The local administration had been literally running riot in the conduct of affairs. The joint select committee of Congress appointed in 1874 to inquire into the affairs of the District government, of which the late distinguished Senator Allison, of Iowa, was chairman, said, in its report:

> Your committee are unable to see but one way in which the board—the then board of public works of the District—could have expected to pay this large debt; that is, by receiving aid from Congress, as it must have occurred to them that the resources of the District could not be taxed sufficiently to pay them.

That joint select committee, to quote the language of its report, "unanimously arrived at the conclusion that the existing form of government of the District is a failure and that no remedy short of its abolition and the substitution of a simpler, more restricted, and economical government will suffice."

It also recommended "a tax of 3 per cent upon real estate in the city of Washington and 2½ per cent in the city of Georgetown and 2 per cent in the county outside to maintain the government of the District for the year ending June 30, 1875."

It would be interesting to know why Congress in 1878 fixed so much lower rate of taxation than was recommended by the joint committee in 1874. Singularly enough there was very little discussion of the matter in the congressional debates.

Conditions in the District, however, have entirely changed since 1878. The population then was about one-third of what it is to-day. The city was greatly in debt and threatened with bankruptcy. Its total indebtedness was nearly $25,000,000, or about $150 per capita, much larger per capita than that of either New York, Boston, or Philadelphia at the time. Now the city is prosperous, it has been greatly improved, it has a population estimated at over 450,000, and its finances are in splendid condition. In less than three years it will have no indebtedness. Why should it be coddled any longer?

Indeed, the reason for the changed condition of affairs in the District of Columbia now over what they were in 1878 and before is due not to the half-and-half provision in the law of 1878 but to the fact that Congress at that time determined to exercise its constitutional power of exclusive legislation over the District, which it had not done before. It has kept control of local affairs ever since that time, and there is no suggestion of a change in that respect in this bill. As a matter of fact, the half-and-half provision of the act of 1878 was a minor consideration in that important piece of legislation, except as it furnished undue protection to the local interests from taxation with which to pay for their own extravagance.

The joint select committee of Congress appointed pursuant to the act approved March 3, 1915, speaking of the half-and-half, says very forcibly, on page 11 of its report:

> While there were those in 1878 who doubted the propriety, or even the expediency, of legislation fixing a certain and definite ratio of contribution by the Government to the payment of the expenses of the District, this act was apparently considered a satisfactory compromise solution of a problem then exceedingly difficult of proper determination by reason of the conditions in the District of Columbia at that time.
> But we think that the conditions of to-day and of the few years last past are so different from the conditions of 1878 that this arbitrary rule—a rule of then seeming necessity—need no longer be applied to District appropriations.
> Then the District was under a great debt; to-day that debt has been very largely paid, and the next few years will see it completely paid in the manner we have described herein.
> Then the District was suffering from the many experimental forms of government which had been tried in successive years almost; to-day the form of government is one of long existence, tried and tested.

As said in the majority report:

> It is not a sufficient answer to those who ask for the repeal of the half-and-half principle to say that it is necessary in order to maintain and support the Capital City on a scale befitting a great Nation. Congress has always contributed to its care and upkeep, and undoubtedly always will. It is folly to argue that the Members of Congress who come to Washington from all over the Nation, who represent the national thought, and who take a natural pride in their Capital City, will not provide liberally for its maintenance. As a matter of fact the American people as a whole take an ever-increasing pride in the Nation's Capital, and they will see to it that it is fittingly and liberally maintained. Let the residents of the District of Columbia, who receive the most direct benefits from its development and improvement, do their share as citizens of a great city, and there need be no fear but that the Nation as a whole, through Congress, will do likewise.

It is perhaps to be expected that the big taxpayers in the District of Columbia should desire to keep their taxes down as low as possible, and therefore oppose any change in the existing arrangement. If they can hoodwink Congress into keeping the present tax rate of 1 per cent on the statute books, instead of the average rate of other cities of 2 per cent, it means a saving every year of just what they now pay in taxes. It would be nice if your constituents and mine did not have to pay any taxes to support the Government under which they live, but they do, and as long as they do, why should the residents of the District of Columbia, who enjoy the privilege of living in the Capital City, with all its advantages, be given a freedom from taxation which people living in other cities, with fewer advantages, do not have? People come to Washington to live for various reasons. I will not say that they come primarily to escape taxation, but I will venture the assertion that the tax rate here has no tendency to keep them away. I do not know why they come, but anyone who will take the trouble to investigate will find many cases of wealthy people who claim a residence in Washington, whose interests and natural residence are in other places.

I realize the strength of the opposition to this bill. But the Congress of the United States ought to do justice to the people of the Nation as a whole before being liberal to those who reside in the District of Columbia.

Certainly it is not unreasonable to require the District to pay the expenses of the District government out of revenues raised by taxation from the present low tax rate to the extent that they are sufficient therefor. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], a member of the committee.

Mr. LANHAM, by unanimous consent, was given leave to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, as a member of this committee who attended the hearings and voted for a favorable report on the bill under consideration, I think that the accusation can not justly be urged against me that I have not a proper pride in the beautification of the National Capital and in its civic progress and development. In addition to the interest which every patriotic American feels in it, I have the added impulse and impetus of having lived here many years as a boy and of having attended the public schools in this city. And so, as a quasi-citizen of the District through that personal experience of boyhood residence, I wish in my observations to be fair to its citizens and also to the other people of the United States who as taxpayers contribute a part of the District's governmental expenditures.

It seems to me that the matter of pride in the Nation's Capital does not necessarily enter into this question of its fiscal relations as presented by this bill. I think it may be safely assumed that the Congress, composed of representative and patriotic citizens from all sections of our country, will at all times befittingly maintain that pride, and that their legislative action will reflect it.

I take it for granted that the people of the District wish loyally to bear their proportionate part of the expenses of the government with reference to the District. A proper regard for the welfare of the Capital should, like charity, be at least manifested here, even if it should not begin here. And I accord to these citizens the same patriotic purposes which I claim for myself.

The life of a citizen of the District of Columbia is not a specially undesirable and burdensome one. He has many cultural and educational and recreational advantages which the people of the several States can not enjoy, even with an increased rate of taxation. He does not contend that his tax contribution is excessive. It is 1 per cent on a full valuation of realty and tangible personal property and three-tenths of 1 per cent on intangible personal property.

It should be borne in mind that not all the people of the District wish or maintain that the present so-called 50–50 system should be continued. Two of the commissioners who appeared before the joint select committee in 1915 practically advocated the abolition of it. Several citizens presented similar views at the recent hearings. And it should be remembered, also, that the abrogation of this policy does not necessarily impair or prevent any efficiency which may have been attained here in the operation and administration of taxation. If the rate be low by reason of that efficiency, this bill does not seek to make any change in that rate. The only extra burden its passage would place upon the citizen of the District would be one arising from a more adequate assessment of the valuation of his property. Under the 50–50 plan it seems that this valuation has necessarily been low in order that the revenue might not be in excess of that which Congress could reasonably be expected to duplicate.

The present system had its origin at a time when those who advocated it said that 50 per cent was the proper and equitable proportion of expense to be borne by the National Government. That time, it seems, in the course of history has passed. We shall see this from the present respective valuation of governmental and private property.

I repeat that the bill under discussion does not seek to change the system of taxation or increase the rate. There is by existing law a limitation on the commissioners of the District which forbids the preparation of a tax program in excess of double the amount of the estimated revenues for the fiscal year, and the Secretary of the Treasury is likewise precluded from submitting estimates beyond that sum. Under this limitation has arisen a surplus of District revenues, referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] as a small one, but now amounting to more than $4,000,000. This amount, now in the Treasury, has been paid by the people of the District of Columbia through taxation, and it can not be used under the provisions of the prevailing 50-50 plan. This surplus will increase rather than diminish under the present régime.

There are some who believe that the Government should bear no part of the expense of the local affairs of the District. It is not my contention that there should be any mathematical nicety of proportion between the amount of expenses borne, respectively, by the people of the United States and the people of the District. But if one should contend for a principle of this character, the present plan of 50-50 does not represent it.

A few days ago, for my information, I asked Mr. William P. Richards, assessor of the District of Columbia, for a statement of the relative valuation of United States property and of privately owned property. In a letter to me dated January 8, 1920, accompanying a brief tabulation in this regard, he says:

The assessment of Government property includes all lots, reservations, and parks owned by the United States and the improvements thereon. It does not include any of the streets or avenues, or parts of streets, except so much as may be included within the small triangular or circular spaces that come at street intersections. The total acreage of Government-owned property is 7,420 acres.

The assessment of exempt property was made by the Board of Assistant Assessors and the valuation was deduced by comparison with surrounding values of privately owned real estate. Of course, where property is of a special site and in large holdings, the judgment of the assessors would guide as to whether it had any advantage over surrounding property and should be assessed at any higher rate. United States buildings are included herein at approximately two-thirds of their original cost, although in a few instances allowance has been made for depreciation. Many of them, being of a monumental character, could not be reproduced to-day at anything like their original cost.

The office has, during the last two years, obtained a great deal of detailed information as to the cost of Government buildings from the various departments having such buildings in charge.

In regard to the parks included within the inclosed estimate, I will state that Rock Creek Park, Potomac Park, Bolling Field, grounds along the Anacostia River, and such places as the Insane Asylum, Boys' Reform School, Soldiers' Home, Naval Observatory, etc., are all included, and, in addition, some several hundred small circular and triangular parks within the city limits are included in the estimate.

I think it would be well at this point to call attention to the fact that county and city lines have been obliterated in the District, and that the same rates of taxation on real estate, tangible and intangible personal property, apply in the outlying sections of the District that exist in the city proper. Much of the Government property located in the District is not, strictly speaking, in the city itself.

The table given by the assessor is as follows:

Assessed value of real and personal property, District of Columbia.

Real estate taxable, 1919:
Land	$208,097,025.00
Improvements	206,513,666.00

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. LANHAM. I shall ask the gentleman from Michigan to yield me additional time.

Mr. MAPES. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. As quoted in the newspapers, I find that the minority report says that the amount of revenue to be derived from the District taxation, doubled by the addition from the Federal Treasury, is no more than the needs of the District require; that many very necessary improvements are now being delayed, and all the available revenue under the existing arrangements will not more than meet the pressing needs of the District for years to come. What does the gentleman say about that?

Mr. LANHAM. I think the passage of the pending bill will place at the disposal of the District of Columbia for expenditure the surplus of more than $4,000,000 now in the Treasury. As indicated, under the present system this surplus will increase for the next few years, because a considerable part of the revenue of the District is now being devoted annually to the payment of the funded indebtedness, which will be entirely paid in 1922, and the passage of this bill would help rather than hinder the satisfactory solution of the problem the gentleman presents.

Mr. LAZARO. By increasing the taxes in the District?

Mr. LANHAM. Not necessarily; but by making available the entire revenue from the taxes in the District, supplemented by such sum as Congress would see fit to appropriate.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I have some things I want to say in the five minutes just granted me, and I must decline to yield.

As will be seen from the table to which I have referred, the valuation of the property belonging to the United States is $245,758,120, as against a total of $414,610,691 owned by the people in the District, which falls considerably short of the proportion of 50-50. The valuation for 1920 of the District property is $426,623,630.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I am anxious to have him answer a question.

Mr. LANHAM. My time is so limited that I must decline to yield.

Mr. JUUL. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will give him time so that he may answer the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LANHAM. The increase in the valuation of District property from approximately $390,000,000 to more than $414,000,000 during the fiscal years from 1915 to 1919, including the war period, does not indicate an excessive assessment or an intolerable burden; and, in my judgment, it does not properly reflect the greatly increased price in sales and rentals in the District.

I want to call attention to the per capita basis of comparison upon which those who oppose this bill principally urge their contention. Tables are inserted in the hearings which show the per capita payment of taxes on realty and personal property in many cities of the United States. These tables were prepared by some gentleman connected with the Census Bureau, and Washington seems to enjoy a splendid rating according to this standard. We are discussing a property and not a per capita tax. That might be a fair basis for a comparison of poll taxes. The Census Bureau probably gives the national debt also by its per capita burden, but we know very well that the payment will not be made according to this per capita arrangement. With reference to the matter in hand, such a standard is a mere camouflage of figures.

For example, I notice on page 64 of the hearings in one of these tables that in the city of Fort Worth, Tex., where I reside, the per capita realty tax levied is $8.50, and in Washington, D. C., it is $16.55. The per capita total property tax levy in Fort Worth is given as $11.24 and in Washington as $20.68. We have in the State of Texas a law requiring a full valuation. I say without shadow of hesitation that assessment in Texas is as nearly two-thirds of the value as it is in the District of Columbia, where a two-thirds valuation is the basis. And yet, exclusive of the State and county taxes which our Texas people pay and which are not required of residents of the District of Columbia, the Fort Worth citizen in his municipal tax alone exceeds by six or seven dollars per $1,000 the tax contribution of the Washington citizen. The per capita standard will hardly be thought fair, under these circumstances, by the proverbial Jones who pays the tax. And it is worthy of mention in this connection that the people of the District of Columbia enjoy many privileges and benefits similar to those which accrue to the people of the several States by the payment of State and county taxes from which the Washingtonian is immune.

Nor do I think the total revenues of the respective cities, another favorite comparison of the opponents of this measure, afford an accurate criterion for our guidance. Too many and varied elements enter into a computation of this character, and no city is strictly typical according to such a test. The nature and extent of the funded indebtedness, for instance, may occasion a considerable disparity in cities of approximately equal population. And let me remark, in this connection, that this bill takes care of the funded debt of the District of Columbia upon the existing 50–50 basis.

Mr. Chairman, it has been asserted at the hearings, and will likely be restated on the floor of the House, that a number of wealthy men have been attracted to make their homes in Washington by reason of the very low rate of taxation on intangible personal property. I have even heard that some have been able to defray their living expenses on the saving thus made possible here. I have no definite information on this subject, but the positive statement was made before the committee that some men of means have moved here because of such disparity in rates in Washington and in the States. The Washingtonian is entitled to fair and just consideration, but he has no right to demand that he be petted and pampered at the expense of the people of the country. In my humble judgment the provisions of the pending bill are drawn in the real interest of the citizens of our country, both here and elsewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am one of those who came to the consideration of this question prejudiced against the city of Washington, because, as I thought, of the higher cost of living here, and because of the many reports that I have heard concerning the way the citizens of the District were escaping taxation. After listening to the hearings and studying the figures that were there produced, however, I am convinced that this change ought not to be made at this time. It seems to me that when we are trying to curtail in every way, trying to save money for the country, and to pare down our expenses in every direction, it is not a proper time for us to take up this measure and do away with a law that has worked satisfactorily for the last 40 years, and do away with that law in such a way as will leave unlimited the amount that the United States Government will have to pay toward the administration of the District of Columbia.

I was away from Washington at the time the minority report was signed, and I presume it was for that reason that the chairman of our committee did not telegraph to Newport to find out in regard to our methods and rates of taxation. I would state for the information of the House that our rate of taxation is about $1.80, and as has been well said by my colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, you can not judge, you can not compare merely by the rate alone, you must have the rate and the assessment. It seems to me that here in the District of Columbia we have a method of assessment that is fair and equitable to all of the citizens and the taxpayer. The tax assessor, unlike in many of our cities and towns, is not elected by the people, but holds a permanent appointment, and therefore is removed from any prejudice or feeling that he might have that he has to favor anyone in order to secure his reelection. The figures that have been produced before the committee show that the valuations that he has put upon the property here in the District of Columbia are fair and equitable to all concerned. If you look at the tables that have been placed in the record, that have been produced before the committee, you will find that those tables show that practically the sales, and all of the available data from the sales, show that the tax assessment has equaled, if not exceeded, the proceeds from the sales.

You will also find that based on the tax assessment and on the tax rate as established by law, that the citizens of Washington are paying an equal if not a larger amount per capita than the citizens of most any other city of any of the States of the Union. Now, in our State of Rhode Island our assessors are sworn to assess the property according to its true fair market value, but as a matter of fact they do not. As a matter of fact they assess it as low as 50 per cent, and in some cases lower. Our State tax is based upon our total assessment, and it is to the interest of the cities and towns to keep the assessment low in order to avoid the high State assessment. It has been the tendency throughout our cities and towns to keep the assessment down and the rate up. And so it has been demonstrated by the tables that have been furnished before our committee from a disinterested source, by Mr. Grogan, of the Census Bureau, that whereas in many cities and towns throughout the United States the State law requires the full fair cash value to be assessed that the tax was anywhere from 25 to 80 per cent, and not according to a true fair cash value. Therefore it seems to me that as this whole attack upon this present half-and-half system in the District here is founded upon a misunderstanding, upon the supposition that the taxpayers of the District of Columbia were not paying their full tax burden and were not sustaining their proper proportion as between the United States and the District, and as that has been absolutely demonstrated to my mind and the mind of many of the members of this committee to be wrong, that we ought not at this time to pass this bill to do away with that. As I understand the attitude of the citizens of this District they want to be sure of something definite. Now, if we are going to wipe away something that has been on the statute books of the United States for the last 40 years, we ought not to wipe that away unless we can show something better, and we ought to have a definite arrangement between the United States and the District in order that this great national city of ours may develop. Now, it has been said here there is a surplus of $4,000,000 in the Treasury. That $4,000,000 has not been taken from the taxpayers of the District, but it is money that the United States should have appropriated from year to year over the past 40 years. It seems to me that is a very small amount for that time, since 1878.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question; will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I will yield.

Mr. JUUL. Does the gentleman maintain that there is an obligation on the part of the United States Government to appropriate money to pay for purely local matters?

Mr. BURDICK. Purely local matters?

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. BURDICK. I do not call anything that goes on with regard to the maintenance of the District of Columbia as a purely local matter; I call it a national matter.

Mr. JUUL. Does the gentleman maintain that if some real estate men start a new subdivision in Washington it is part of the business of the National Government for your State and my State to put down pavements, sewers, and furnish water?

Mr. BURDICK. No; I do not maintain and have not so maintained——

Mr. JUUL. But the gentleman advocates 50 cents on the dollar for such improvements all right.

Mr. BURDICK. I do not maintain that the United States Government should develop private property, and I do not understand that it so does; but I do maintain that the United States should pay a fair proportion of all the expenses of maintaining the government of the District of Columbia, and I do maintain that there are many things here in the District of Columbia that need attention and need large sums of money expended in the development, not only of waterworks that has been referred to, but schools, the fire department, and so forth.

Mr. JUUL. How does the gentleman get waterworks in his town——

Mr. BURDICK. In my particular city——

Mr. JUUL. Your people pay for that?

Mr. BURDICK. In my particular city it is run by a private corporation and not by the city. But this unexpended balance that has accumulated in the Treasury is not an indication that the money is not needed here. We need here in the District more schools; we need a better system of waterworks; we need a better fire department; we need more attention to our streets, and there are various ways in which double the amount which is now raised by taxation can be well and economically spent, because this is the national city, and it ought to be the model city of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SMITH of Illinois having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3317) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1726) granting pensions and increases of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. WALSH of Montana as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 484. An act to provide for the erection of a Federal office building on the site acquired for the Subtreasury in St. Louis, Mo.; and

H. R. 7752. An act relating to detached service of officers of the Regular Army.

EXPENSES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN].

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the majority membership of the Committee on the District of Columbia in reporting this bill, which is to abolish the present fiscal arrangement between the Government and the District of Columbia, which arrangement has been in successful operation since 1878, base their reasons for the passage of this bill upon two propositions.

One is that there has grown up, because of the present system of the District of Columbia collecting one half of the expenses of the District government and the Federal Government contributing the other half, a surplus in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District; and, second, that property in the District of Columbia is very much underassessed.

Now, in reference to the first proposition, it is inevitable under the present system that there should be a surplus in the Treasury, because the District Commissioners are prohibited by the act of 1909 from submitting estimates to Congress in excess of the revenues of the District, and when these estimates are cut by the Appropriation Committee the money goes into the Federal Treasury as a surplus.

The present assessable basis for taxation purposes yields an annual revenue of some $9,000,000, and under the present law the Federal Government appropriates a like sum, making a total revenue for the District for the ensuing year of $18,000,000, in round figures.

The Commissioners of the District state in their annual report that when they were preparing their estimates to the Congress for the ensuing fiscal year they made material reductions in the estimates submitted to them, and they made no estimates for increase in salaries, because that matter was being considered by the Joint Commission for Reclassification of Salaries, and when the total of these reduced estimates was reached the revenue needs of the District for the ensuing fiscal year were $22,865,676, yet, because of the limitation of the law above referred to, it was found necessary to reduce them to $18,000,000 plus.

These estimates therefore fall short of the actual needs of the District by $4,623,670, although there is at this time a surplus of District revenues, made up of accumulations over a period of years, of $4,063,922.

Now, if the District Commissioners had not been prohibited by the act of 1909 from submitting the actual revenue needs of the District to the Appropriation Committee, they would have submitted estimates of $22,000,000 plus, and if the present bill is enacted into law at this time, and the Appropriation Committee was to allow the actual needs of the District, the Government's share of expenses under these estimated revenues would be $13,000,000, in round figures, and the contribution of the District to the expenses of the government would only be $9,000,000, so that under the present plan proposed by the Mapes bill the expenses of conducting the business of the District of Columbia would be $4,000,000 in excess of what we will contribute because of the limitation above referred to.

The surplus, upon which so much stress has been laid by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], has grown up over a series of years. The money is not in the District treasury; it is in the Treasury of the United States. It is true it is credited to the District, but the District Commissioners can not use this money until authority is given by Congress to do so.

Now, there have been no estimates made, no figures given, as to the surplus for this year, the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920. I have just talked with the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations and he informs me that owing to numerous deficiency appropriations which must be made during the balance of the present fiscal year there is hardly a possibility of there being a cent of surplus during the present year. And the very efficient clerk to that committee also advises me that if the revenues of the District during the coming year are sufficient to pay the expenses of conducting the District government, the people of the District are going to be mighty lucky.

Therefore, what reason can be advanced for the passage of this bill at this time?

The system proposed, under which Congress can appropriate liberally during one year and meagerly or parsimoniously during another year, was tried unsuccessfully in the District for more than 70 years.

And the wise statesmen who framed the organic act for the District of Columbia, believing that the people of the United States wished to contribute liberally to the upkeep and upbuilding and beautification of their Nation's Capital, decreed by law that the Government should contribute one-half, or 50 per cent.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield.

Mr. JUUL. I want to know if the gentleman thinks it is fair and just to the country and the other cities of the country that one-half should be paid out of the National Treasury if that one-half reduces much more than what the Government ought to pay in taxes if it was a taxpayer?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I have stated to the gentleman that the revenues of the District and the contribution of the Federal Government are not going to be sufficient during the coming fiscal year to meet the actual needs and expenses of the Government, as I have just read from a report of the commissioners.

Mr. JUUL. May I just ask the gentleman is there anything constitutional or religious in the 1½ per cent? Out in my town and in yours if 1½ per cent does not pay revenue enough they raise it to 6.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman there is nothing to prohibit Congress in its wisdom raising the tax rate which is fixed by law in the District of Columbia at any time without the passage of the pending bill. If the rate is not sufficient, let us raise the rate. But the estimates made by the District Commissioners are in excess of $22,000,000. The actual revenues from all property taxed in the District are, in round figures, $9,000,000. If the Government contributes 50 per cent, an equal amount, the actual revenues of the District are going to be during the coming fiscal year $18,000,000. Therefore the needs of the District are to-day $4,000,000 in excess of the revenues, even taking into consideration the $9,000,000 contributed from the Federal Treasury for the upbuilding, beautification, and maintenance of the Nation's Capital.

It is well known that because of this limitation, because the District Commissioners are restricted in their estimates to the acual revenues of the District, or one-half of the actual revenues of the District, they are unable to provide in their Book of Estimates for the very necessary school improvements. It has been stated in the daily press of this city, and a report was made by a committee representing the Washington Board of Trade, that the school conditions of the District of Columbia at the present time are a disgrace to this city and the Nation.

Mr. JUUL. Can not we levy more taxes?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Congress can increase the tax rate of 1902 at any time.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I do not think the gentleman's questions are relevant, and therefore I decline to yield further.

It is well known that money is needed for necessary highway improvements. The District Commissioners in their report state that the highways leading out into the States should at least be kept up in as good a condition as the highways of the neighboring States. And I heard a gentleman say the other day, one who is not at all interested in this subject, and who knew nothing about it coming up here to-day, that you can tell the moment you hit the District line, coming in from the State of Maryland, by the condition of the roads.

The District Commissioners have outlined a very elaborate plan of park improvements here in the District which they are unable to carry forward or to undertake at this time because of insufficient revenues.

There is need for a greatly augmented street and highway improvement program; there should be prompt provision for modern bridges, as set forth in the District Commissioners' report, where existing structures are not fitted to carry the burdens of modern traffic; and there is need for modern equipment and accommodations for the several refuse disposal systems, which have greatly come under the direct supervision of the District government.

Increases in the personnel of the police department as well as in the salaries of its members are made imperative by the growth of the city; the fire department needs not only better salaries, but it should be expanded by the provision of additional fire houses in newly built-up sections of the city, and, above all, it should be modernized by the substitution of motor equipment for horse-drawn apparatus; all of which is covered on page 6 of the report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

They also point out that funds are urgently needed that the Commissioners may proceed with the construction of the Gal-linger Municipal Hospital, and should be placed in operation as soon as it is humanly possible.

Money is needed for the care of the feeble-minded, and for a new institution to take the place of the antiquated Industrial Home School.

It is necessary, according to the Commissioners, and the engineers of the War Department, that there should be plans developed for an additonal water supply, as the District is to-day using the safe maximum capacity of the present conduit.

A bill providing for the investigation of this subject has already passed the House and is now on the calendar of the Senate.

Now, there is another very important matter that should be considered in this connection, and that is that a great majority of the employees of the District are receiving the same rate of compensation that they received in 1874.

There are 934 employees in the District government who receive less than $1,000 per year; 166 of them only receive $600 per year; 43 receive less than $700 per year; 111 receive less than $800 per year and more than $700; and 247 of them receive between $800 and $900 per year.

These are men on the statutory pay roll, and, in addition to these, there are a great many per diem employees who receive less than is paid in other branches of the Federal Government.

The Congress of the United States has appointed a commission to investigate this matter. The time under which they can make their report has been extended 60 days. No estimate has been made by the District Commissioners providing for an increase in their compensation, which must be given in order to enable them to live.

The Congress, through its proper functioning committee, has regulated and conducted the affairs of the District of Columbia in a most satisfactory manner, and there is no necessity of abolishing the present system, which has been in operation for more than 30 years, and substituting a method of raising revenues which has been found unsatisfactory and discarded.

The very able chairman of the committee—and I call attention to this fact to illustrate the haphazard and reckless method by which the committee attempts to strike down the present system and set up in its stead a new system—makes a report, and on page 3 of that report it is stated that in 1922 the bonded indebtedness of the District of Columbia is going to be paid off, and that there is going to be an additional surplus in that year of $487,704.

It is a far-seeing financier and statesman who can so accurately figure out a surplus which will occur in 1922, in the face of the rapidly mounting cost of materials and the mounting cost of government, and if the predictions which have been made as to the successful operation of the plans provided for in the present bill are no more definite than the statements contained in this report, then I make the prophecy that in a very few years Congress will be glad to restore the present system.

Therefore the matter of the surplus is inevitable under the present system. The District Commissioners are prohibited by law from submitting estimates of their actual needs, and can only submit estimates equal to the revenues, and as Congress is bound to cut down these estimates in various particulars, a surplus is the inevitable result.

Congress should appropriate the existing surplus to meet some of the pressing needs of the District, and the limitation as provided in the act of 1909 should be repealed, as recommended in the District Commissioner's annual report.

Now, as to the statements which have been made as to the undervaluation of property in the District, I find that in 1889 the total assessable basis of land and improvements in the District of Columbia was $115,000,000 plus. In 1919 it was $414,000,000 plus, so that there has been an increase in the assessable basis of the District in the past 29 years of nearly 300 per cent.

In the figures which have been submitted by the District Assessor's office I find a table of sales which have been made in the downtown or business section of Washington, which is the best barometer of values and actual values and assessments in any community.

In 1916 the consideration of the sales in this section of the ctiy were $3,481,650, while the basis of assessment, which is the full value, taxes being paid on two-thirds of this amount, was $4,280,268. In 1917 the consideration of sales in the business section was $4,105,353, while the basis of assessment was $4,502,190. In 1918 the consideration of sales was $5,102,880, while the basis for assessment was $5,144,776. In 1919 it reached $13,507,667 in the matter of considerations, and the basis of assessment was $13,394,569. The total consideration for sales in the four years was $26,197,550 and the basis of assessment $27,321,803.

The Southern Building, at Fifteenth and H Streets, was assessed for $1,794,540, and the consideration of the sale in 1919 was $1,800,000. The site of the Cosmus Club, at 21 Madison Place, was assessed at $269,250, and the consideration of the sale was $250,000. The Washington Hotel site, at Pennsylvania Avenue and Fifteenth Street, was assessed for $960,000 and sold for $800,000 in 1916. The Ames Building, in the 1400 block on G Street, was assessed for $193,230 and sold for $155,000. The Y. M. C. A. Building, on F Street, was assessed for $286,940 and sold for $250,000. The Lawrence Building, on G Street, was assessed for $382,160 and sold for $332,500.

I venture the assertion that in no other city in the country will the assessment reach the proportion of the sales price as here shown.

The assessor's office has also submitted transfers made in 1916 and the assessments as of that date, which show that the assessments total more than the consideration given.

Since 1916 we have entered the war, and resident property has doubled and trebled in value, and it is impossible for the assessor's office to accurately determine the cash value.

A great deal has been said here to-day about the low rate of taxation in the city, and, in view of the fact that each city has its own methods and own laws governing the assessment of property, this would hardly seem a fair standard in determining property values in the District of Columbia, where one-third of the real estate is owned by the Government.

Taking the cities of 30,000 and over which are near the city of Washington we find that the per capita receipts for all taxes in Baltimore, Md., is $21.05; Norfolk, Va., $21.03; Roanoke, Va., $12.87; Wilmington, Del., $11.56; and in Washington, D. C., $23.79. These figures are taken from the United States census report.

The per capita property tax levies in 1918 show that Baltimore made a per capita tax levy of $20.02; New Orleans, $14.91; Chicago, $22.48; Cleveland, $26.28; Indianapolis, $17.13; Louisville, $17.02; Grand Rapids, $16.93; and Nashville, $10.58.

When it is considered that one-third of Washington's population is colored, and that a great element of this colored population are comparatively poor, it would seem that the assessable basis in Washington and the taxes paid compare favorably with the amounts levied and collected in like cities.

The needs of the District are many and pressing, and if the present rate, which was fixed in 1902, is not sufficient to meet these needs it should be increased in order that Washington, the Capital of a Nation of more than a hundred million people, may continue to be a source of pride to the people of a great Nation.

Above all things, the citizens of the District are entitled to more, whether the Government is going to contribute to the maintenance of the District; and if so, as to what percentage the Federal Government will contribute, and it should not be left to the whim or caprice of each succeeding Congress.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS].

Mr. MAPES. I also yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS], with the understanding that he intends to yield to other Members on his side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I came to Congress seven years ago. I got on the "town council" by accident when I got here and stayed. I have read everything that I have heard these gentlemen say in opposition to this bill, when it was published in the papers the first year I got here. It is an absolute waste of good white paper for gentlemen to extend their remarks in the RECORD, because all they have said was in the Evening Star yesterday and the day before and the day before that. It has all appeared in the Star and the Post and the other papers every time a measure has been before this Congress that sought to abolish the sacred "hahf-and-hahf." I hope you notice how it is pronounced. Some of you have made the mistake of calling it "haf-and-haf." [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] said that all his people, if I understood him correctly, were perjurers when they swore that their property was assessed at 50 per cent. He said it was really assessed at 8 per cent. Of course, that does not apply to the gentleman's own property. I presume he has some property to assess. But this does not deal with the question of the rate of taxation. That is not really involved in this bill. I should like to say this: Every man on this floor who pays his taxes in his own city and pays taxes here pays twice as much on the same valuation of property in his home city as he pays here, and I shall pause to let anybody rise and deny that who may wish to do so. I have paid taxes in two jurisdictions myself, and I know. Yet there is not another place anywhere in the United States where the advantages are so great as they are here. The rate of taxation in my home town, a place of about 12,000 people, an ordinary town of that kind and size, is three times as high as it is here and the advantages are not a third as great.

These gentlemen talk to you about the vast areas of the Government's property in the District of Columbia. Practically every foot of that land consists of highly developed parks, which the people here have been relieved of the expense of acquiring and improving. Now, who of you would think of complaining if somebody would donate to your city a beautiful park like Rock Creek Park? Yet they want to charge the people living in every town and village and on every farm and ranch in America, levy tribute upon them to help maintain Rock Creek Park, because they say it is Government property, although it is exclusively enjoyed by the people who live here or who happen to be temporarily residing here.

Just in passing, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] was talking about the rate of taxation and that the people of the District of Columbia were overtaxed. I do not know about that. I know that if the property is worth anything like the rent that they charge for it, it is not assessed at 5 cents on a dollar of its actual value. I have been a renter occasionally myself, and I know that. And if I am not mistaken the rate of increase in taxation in the District of Columbia has been only 4 per cent in six years.

Mr. ROWE. Six per cent.

Mr. CARAWAY. Six per cent. Yet the value on real estate has increased more than 100 per cent in that time.

Therefore if they were assessed 75 per cent four years ago, they are not assessed 35 per cent now and everybody knows it.

But I am going to make this assertion, that the Government ought not to contribute one 5-cent piece to the maintenance of local improvements in the District of Columbia. [Applause.] It ought to keep up its own property and it ought not to do anything more. There is not a city in America that would not be glad to duplicate every improvement that the Government has in the District of Columbia, give the Government a free title to it and exempt it from any contribution to local improvements, and then be the gainer by getting the Government's activities. The Government is the greatest employer and it has the greatest pay roll of any institution in the world, and it makes the prosperity of the District of Columbia. Yet they say that it is a great burden for them to carry. There are counties in my State where more than 50 per cent of all the land in the county is in a Government forest reserve, growing timber in order that the people in the District of Columbia and in your State and in every other State in this Union may have lumber. Yet the Government does not contribute 5 cents toward maintaining the local government in those counties, and the people owning the 50 per cent of the property must bear all this expense. Yet the forests make no local returns, the people there get no advantage you do not enjoy with them. It does not furnish employment, it does not maintain a pay roll or increase the prosperity of the people living near it. It is simply maintained for the benefit of all the people, and if I should introduce a bill to-day asking you to pay half the expenses of those counties you would not vote for it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] would not do it. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] would not do it, and these other gentlemen who spoke here would not vote to pay 5 cents of the expenses of the local government there, although the Government of the United States owns one-half of all the taxable property in the county if it were listed for taxation. There are States in this Union where the Government owns nearly 90 per cent of all the lands in the State, and yet the other 10 per cent in value and area are required to keep up all the expenses of the State, county, and municipal governments, and these reserves add nothing to the local revenues at all. If there is a man here who will say that he will vote for a bill to pay 90 per cent of the expenses of those local governments, because 90 per cent of the property in those States belongs to the Government of the United States, I wish that man would stand up and say so. And yet, if you are not willing to do that, you are not willing to do exact justice under similar conditions. For instance, the people in the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I have appeared before the House a great many times in the discussion of this question, and I can not add anything to what I have already said. To the membership of the House who have kept up with the discussion this bill is a very simple one. It does not attempt, as explained by the chairman of the committee, to change the rate of taxation, it does not attempt to change the basis or the rule of valuation of property. It simply provides that the money collected for the District of Columbia under the present rule of assessment, under the present rate of taxation, shall be first used before the Federal Treasury responds toward its part of the expenses of the District of Columbia.

Now, in the short time that is allotted to me I can not go into all the details; but the amount of money which the Federal Government responds to in the maintenance of this government does not all appear in the District of Columbia appropriation bill. There is more than a million dollars included in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, in the sundry civil bill, and in the deficiency bills. Of course, the items in the deficiency bills are items that appear in the legislative and the sundry civil, where there has not been enough money appropriated to conduct the activities.

Gentlemen, when you understand the history of this legislation, when you go back to that time when the District of Columbia was overwhelmingly involved in debt, when there was something like 50,000 or 60,000 people in the District, when they owed between forty and fifty million dollars, you will know that the time had come when the bonds issued under the existing government were about to mature and they were having great difficulty in having the bonds refunded. The government was so corrupt that it was a stench in the nostrils of the American people.

Congress regarded itself as responsible because the State of Maryland and the State of Virginia had ceded to the National Government the sovereignty over this little spot called the District of Columbia; and when the Government of the United States felt that it did not want to be troubled with local government it had passed an enabling act for the District of Columbia to run its own affairs. When the Government found itself confronted with the proposition that this was not a decent and safe place for people to live in, that it was a place where they would steal all the property belonging to the District, as was argued by Mr. Blaine in the Senate and Mr. Blackburn in the House, who went into all the details in discussing this question, it was proposed that the Federal Government should assume the payment of the indebtedness of the Distirct of Columbia, and they issued what is known as the 3.65 bonds. That is, they would take over the government, collect all the money, and guarantee the payment of that enormous debt. By the way, in 1922 that debt will be liquidated, for the Federal Treasury responded not only to the half of the forty-odd million dollars but in addition the Federal Government responded in its half of the interest.

Now, the District of Columbia, in that dire condition where they could not pay the debt without an overwhelming taxation that would amount to confiscation, under that condition the Federal Government, in order to relieve the burden then on the taxpayers, passed this 50-50 proposition. And yet you will find these gentlemen who have been enjoying that benefit for nearly 50 years say that this is a sacred right. Gentlemen, I deny that. Under that system they have greatly reduced the rate of taxation in the District of Columbia, until the last legislative act provided that there should be only 15 mills tax on a two-thirds valuation, which is the same as 1 mill on a full valuation. The newspapers are beginning in a mild method to say that the rate of taxation should be reduced in the District of Columbia because the District of Columbia pays more taxes than it ought to pay.

Gentlemen, I make this statement after one year's investigation. I wrote to all the cities of 150,000 inhabitants and over, and I say without hesitation that, with the State and county taxation, those people pay over two and a half, three, and in a few instances nearly four times as much as they pay in the District of Columbia. No juggling of figures can change that fact. If you want to find out—I shall not call names—but certain newspapers in the city of Washington contend that the difference is in the assessed valuation. I went to some gentlemen of the House, some Members of the House and some outside, and asked them how much they had invested in the city, and they told me. I asked them how the taxation of property here compared with the taxation at home, and in every instance they said that their home city tax was twice what the whole tax was here, and in addition they had to pay the county and State tax. Now, the county and State tax is all merged into one in the District of Columbia.

This bill is the fairest, in my judgment, that the people of the District of Columbia can ever get. We do not change the rate of taxation nor the rate of assessment. We change no law. We simply say by this bill which is before this House—and the question has been before the House before and was passed first by a large majority, second by a two-thirds, and third by a great many more than two-thirds. The first time the House was unable to get a roll call, the next time the advocates of the half and half did not even ask for a roll call. There has been only one attempt when it was seriously discussed in the Senate by Senator KENYON and Senator James, the only two men who did discuss it. The vote in the Senate was astounding.

From that date to this they have not dared to submit that matter to the Senate under a fair discussion. Not only that, but in conference—and I am not betraying any secrets, because I made the statement once before in this House—I told the Senate conferees, "If you will make a clear statement in writing, stating your reasons for adhering to the half-and-half plan, I will take that written statement of fact to the House of Representatives and I will read that written statement as your reason and not open my mouth, and simply say to the House that that is the reason upon which the Senate proposes to stand," and the conferees on the part of the Senate declined to make a statement, and no man who knows the facts can go back home to his people and justify this system of taxation. [Applause.]

Now, a word with reference to the people living in the District of Columbia. I told one of those citizens who came to me and asked what measure of taxation they were going to have, that of course we wanted a just and reasonable rate, as the other people throughout the country pay, and I said that that was all that they ought to pay. He replied that this half and half simply fixed the amount, and that it was a protection to the people of the District. I said, "You talk about the half and half, but suppose for the sake of argument that the people of the District of Columbia should find themselves confronted by a Congress that had determined to make Washington one of the most beautiful cities in the world; suppose that they had decided to spend $100,000,000 in the beautification of parks and various portions of the city and called upon you to put up another $100,000,000. It would practically be confiscation, and you would then cry out against the half-and-half plan." I said further to him that it was only because he was paying about half the rate of taxation that the other people pay that he wanted this continued, and suggested that he would better accept the proposition that Congress was now making, because if they do not, if it ever gets to be an issue in congressional districts, my prediction was that there would be many a strange face here, because it is the simple things in Congress that frequently determine the result of elections more often than the large ones. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I think we all concede, and certainly the majority of the committee concede, and it is their disposition, that the people of the city of Washington should not be taxed more than the people of the country and other cities of similar size. We all believe that the National Capital should be an object of pride—in its upkeep, in its beauty, in its living conditions, in its advantages and opportunities, of every American citizen, and I have seen no disposition manifested on the part of any member of the committee to discriminate or to tolerate discrimination against the National Capital. It is admitted, however, by the citizens' committee opposing this measure that they are taxed 1 per cent on actual valuation. It is actually less than that, but we will take that for the sake of argument. They have marshaled a mass of figures of per capita tax, and different kinds of taxes compared with other cities, but I have only to ask the members of this committee to use their own observation in their own cities, and I will venture to say that in the country over there is hardly a Congressman here who will not say that cities of this size in his State pay an ad valorem tax of at least 2 per cent or practically that. Not only that, but the other cities pay different kinds of taxes which do not prevail here. You pay an income tax and there is none to pay here, for municipal purposes. You pay an inheritance tax in your own State and none here. You pay an occupational tax and there is none here. This ad valorem tax is practically the only tax that the citizens of Washington pay. Take your automobile——

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. I have not any doubt that the people of Washington get off very easily, but is there not some merit in the contention that the proportion should be definitely determined, instead of being left up in the air, as I assume it is by the provisions of this bill?

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. I think that would be most desirable, and if the gentleman can tell me an act of Congress can be passed which another Congress can not change, I would be very glad to have him do so. I think the proportion is unfair to the country. I do not think the people of the city of Washington are paying taxes commensurate with the citizens of other cities throughout the country.

Mr. HUSTED. Of course, you can not pass an act of Congress that some other Congress can not change, but it seems to me that it would be desirable for the people of the District who own real estate here to have some idea as to the proportion which the Government will pay and the proportion which the city will pay.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. That would be desirable.

Mr. HUSTED. It would seem to me a bad thing to leave it up in the air, leave it to some committee to determine each year what it shall be.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. I take it that if the Congress fixed the proportion that proportion would be maintained for a number of years, certainly until conditions changed. I started to say something about the automobile privilege tax. You know what you pay at your home. You pay only $5 here.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, more than that.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. I am not talking about the ad valorem tax.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I would suggest to the gentleman that he has overlooked the poll tax, such as he pays in Virginia.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Yes; and we find it a very helpful thing. It gives us a better electorate. Let us take the intangible tax alone. These gentleman have marshaled here a set of figures to disprove a fact that all of us know when we come to look at the conditions in regard to making up this intangible tax. This intangible tax here for the year 1919 was $880,000. Down in my district in the city of Lynchburg, with a population in 1910 of 29,000 plus—it has increased since—the taxpayers pay an intangible tax of $253,000, and intangibles are taxed at a rate lower—nearly one-third as much as is paid in this wealthy city—than any other property. I think that this submission of figures is a species of legerdemain to disprove a fact. The property owners of the District of Columbia are not paying a tax commensurate with the tax paid by other people. They ought to pay more, according to the privileges they enjoy, and inasmuch as they have no voice in the Government Congress ought to be very careful to see to it that they are not unjustly treated.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Yes; for the question, because my time is limited.

Mr. JUUL. The gentleman stated they should pay no more than a fair tax. Does not the gentleman think that they should pay a sufficient tax to pay for what is absolutely local?

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. No; I think in view of the fact that a good deal of Government property is not taxed here, in view of the fact we want to maintain this city on a high plane, I think the Federal Government should contribute to the expense.

Mr. JUUL. That is exactly what I said, that the Government should pay that part that the buildings here would justify and the rest should be paid by the city.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. The city should certainly pay more than it is paying. Mr. Chairman, I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have heard the arguments in reference to the half-and-half proposition during a period now of something like 14 years, but have never heretofore taken any part in the debate. It seems to me, however, that this insistence on the part of the citizens of the city of Washington that they have some sort of moral right to this exact proportion of 50 to 50, is so illogical and so unreasonable that it justifies a few words on my part in opposition to this contention. I understand that some gentlemen have stated that should the House discontinue the present plan of making appropriations for the District they propose to carry the fight into their districts. I would advise them against this course. [Applause.] If the people in the country districts come to a full realization of the meaning of the half-and-half system, namely, that it is such an appropriation of the national funds that it has served to make Washington the Mecca of the tax dodgers, I imagine that the voters will not be slow to rebuke the men who are responsible for the continuance of this unjust and vicious system. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, that is precisely what Washington is to-day. Men from all over the United States come to this city by reason of the favorable tax conditions that prevail here, as compared with conditions at home.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to suggest this to my colleagues, that perhaps we are talking about one thing here which is taxation, but not legislating about that thing, but, on the other hand, legislating in reference to something else, and that is the matter of proportion.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We are legislating in this bill in a way to make possible hereafter a just and adequate system of taxation to meet local needs. Our present complaint is that the United States is called upon to furnish one-half of the money required for purely local necessities. I have in mind a case from Virginia that will illustrate the point I made a few moments ago. A very large property owner in that State from the district represented by my colleague, Mr. WOODS, was required to make a return of his intangible property for taxation. This gentleman had a very small amount of real estate, but a very large fortune otherwise, and the city of Lynchburg saw no reason why he should not pay his taxes on this property, and thereby contribute to the general fund for civic purposes. At the very moment that the city of Lynchburg was preparing to take practical steps to enforce its tax laws against this taxpayer, he hied himself to the city of Washington, where there was no tax on intangibles to vex him, or limit him in the enjoyment of his large estate. He lived here for the balance of his days. What was true of that particular gentleman, is true of very many others who have come here from the various States of the Union to escape local taxation. It is not just to these localities that Washington should offer a comparatively tax-free haven to great wealth. My colleague, Col. WOODS, mentioned various taxes not found here, but which exist in the States, the inheritance tax, the income tax, the poll tax as suggested by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN], and still other taxes paid by the taxpayers at home but not a part of the tax system of Washington. In spite of the fact that all of these taxes are essentially just, and paid elsewhere we are asked to maintain a system which renders these taxes unnecessary, so long as the Nation pays one-half of the sum required for the municipal purposes of Washington. The taxpayers of Washington should be fairly taxed for civic requirements, leaving the Government free to supplement the fund thereby raised, to such an extent as may be deemed proper.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Where does this bill change that?

Mr. SAUNDERS or Virginia. This bill does not change that at all. But as soon as we change the absolute fifty-fifty relationship, the legislation will follow by which we will impose a just system of taxation. The first thing however to be done is to terminate the present arbitrary and illogical relationship. That is what we propose to do now. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly agreeable to the proposition that by reason of the fact that the Capital of the Nation is here, we ought to make a contribution out of the Treasury to make this a city beautiful, but I deny that with reference to schools, and other purely local features of the city government, they should be maintained in part out of the national funds. Why should we pay for them? Continually Congress is being upbraided by the newspapers of this Capital, for not increasing the pay of the policemen, for not increasing the pay of the firemen, for not increasing the pay of the school-teachers. Discontinue the arbitrary and unjust fifty-fifty plan, and then the people who desire increases in these directions, can be taxed to provide the funds necessary. The money required, will appropriately be provided by the very people who insist that these increases should be made.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not know that I have any time remaining. If the gentleman will give me half a minute, I will try to answer his question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I consider it a privilege as well as the duty to oppose the passage of this bill. For several years I have followed the course of the propaganda resting behind this proposition. This bill is the direct product of certain ideas that were distilled in the mountain dews of Kentucky. Just why they have now got a home in the State of Michigan I am unable to explain——

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska (continuing). Unless perchance that is the home of the great idealist, Henry Ford.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Yes; for a question.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. To what does the gentleman refer?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I refer to the fourth Kentucky district.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Well, that is all right.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Certainly it is; the gentleman recognizes the history and the story.

Mr. Chairman, when this discussion was commenced some eight or nine years ago, I noted that many allegations were made that marked dishonesty had been practiced against the United States in the final settlements between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government under the law of 1878. I turned to the files of my office in the Treasury and drew up the accounts to which those charges related. I called for the clerk that made the examinations. I went through the story and reached the conclusion that the charges were untrue. Very soon after that the Secretary of the Treasury directed a reexamination of that question, and the decision of the chief law officer of the department sustained my conclusion in relation to it.

Now, I want to say that, so far as the Treasury is concerned, so far as the expenses of the District may be concerned, that I do not see any grave danger in the surplus to which the majority report refers. When I read that report and noted the uneasiness of mind with which the chairman penned those lines it occurred to me that he must have been the campaign manager of the national campaign of 1884, charging that a surplus in the Treasury was a national menace. Here we meet again with a surplus of $4,063,000, a great menace to the District, a great menace to the taxpayers of the Nation! Why do we have that surplus of $4,063,000? Simply because, and only because, Congress has refused to appropriate the required amount of money to take that portion out along with other moneys to pay the bills estimated for by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell the gentleman why it is there. It is because $4,063,000 has been taken out of the people's pockets and put into the Treasury.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Here is the answer, and I want the gentleman to notice: Beginning with 1910, including 1920 and the years intervening, on the District bill alone the commissioners asked for $22,640,000 more than Congress appropriated. There is the reason, and that is the only reason. Necessary improvements were refused from year to year. The public schools have suffered seriously.

Now, let us turn for a moment to some of the by-products of this propaganda. What are they? When this propaganda commenced many of the people loaning money from the various States to people of moderate means in the District of Columbia who were trying to build moderate homes served notice that the loans would be recalled at maturity. When the loans could not be paid the rates of interest were advanced, so that clerks in the departments drawing moderate salaries, clerks in the stores, and in the shops, and the factories, were compelled to pay increased rates of interest, from 4½ to 5 and 5½ to 6 per cent. It would have been higher than that if the law had not made 6 per cent the maximum. Increased rates of rent followed necessarily. There, Mr. Chairman, is the explanation of the paralysis in the real estate market of the District of Columbia. That answers why there has been no appreciable advance in the real estate market on property sold in the major part of the District of Columbia.

Now, I have heard men directly responsible for this propaganda on the floor of this House talk against profiteering, when, as a matter of fact, the propaganda initiated and promulgated by those very men have taken from the pockets of people of moderate means millions upon millions of dollars in the District. I know these things, because I was right in the midst of the men and the women who had to meet them. That is the actual result of this vicious propaganda. That is one reason why I consider it a privilege and a duty to vote against this bill. We should have something fixed and definite, as we were supposed to have before this propaganda began.

Turn for a moment to the early history of the Nation and the founding of the Capital here. Read the words of George Washington, Alexander Hamilton, Thomas Jefferson. What was the idea of building the National Capital on a small tract of ground? What was logically involved in the plan? That plan directly involved the necessity on the part of the General Government to provide for the expenses of its own National Capital. There was no other course available. It was absolutely unquestioned. Washington and Hamilton and Jefferson saw growing up on a small section of land a National Capital of dignity and power, commensurate with the dignity of the American Republic. How could it be provided for outside of the National Treasury? On this basis I assert this proposition, that it is, Mr. Chairman, the primary duty of the Federal Government to support the National Capital. [Applause.] Mark you, that principle is involved in the original idea. But in the development of the plan under the law now in force, who is it that does the work? The President of the United States and the Senate furnish the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Through executive power of the Federal Government the District government is created. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the judges of the courts, the policemen on the streets, the school board, and the teachers in the public schools are the representatives of the Federal Government of the United States. They are not the representatives of the people who live permanently in the District of Columbia, because no one votes here. There are no elections here, the government being under the direct control of the President and Congress. The President appoints the principal executive and court officials and Congress enacts the laws, including what are commonly called city ordinances. Presidents, members of Cabinets, Senators, Congressmen, officers, and clerks in the departments go home to their respective States to vote, just as though the District of Columbia, including Washington, were a part of each voting precinct in the United States. For that reason it is the duty of the Federal Government to support the government it has created to manage and control affairs in the District of Columbia.

But the people who come into the District and hold property here should help the Federal Government pay the bills. Now, I want to call attention to this fact. We should reverse our ordinary method of reasoning. Frequently it is said that the Government should help the people of the District finance the enterprise. Not so. The people of the District should help the Federal Government finance the enterprise; and if $1.50 on each $100 will not meet the needs of the National Capital, make the rate still higher until it does. And let the Federal Government and the people of the Nation and of the District of Columbia stand side by side and furnish the money to do the work.

How much have we heard, even from the chairman of the committee, in regard to the improvement of our schools? Scarcely a word. Who uses the schools? The children of the Members of Congress, of Senators, and clerks in the departments. Uncle Sam does business here. His people and his servants are the ones that receive the largest benefits. But let the property located here come side by side with the needs of the District. Develop the water system as it ought to be; develop the schools as they ought to be developed. And, my friends, upon that basis the present law will not furnish us any more money than we need. I doubt whether it will furnish enough. If I were voting for a change in existing law and conditions, I would say advance the rate of taxation and let the Federal Government meet it, and put in the water system, enlarge your schools, until the National Capital shall stand as a model to the nations of the world in education, in beauty, in attractiveness everywhere. And if we reverse this little by-play in mathematical gymnastics in trying to prove something and hitting nothing we will get somewhere in the advancement of the great work of the National Capital.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the rest of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I have never until now participated on the floor in these discussions over the half-and-half proposition. But five years ago I served on the Joint Committee on Fiscal Relations to investigate this subject. We deliberated nearly all summer of the year 1915 and the major portion of the fall. We took nearly 2,000 pages of testimony and prepared and signed and presented a unanimous report on the subject to the House of Representatives and to the Senate. My colleague from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS], with the diligence which always characterizes him in everything he undertakes, copies portions of that report in which it appears that the members of the joint commission said:

> The annual tax rate in Washington is approximately $16 per capita.
> In the judgment of your committee this is a reasonable tax levy at this time, especially when we consider, as we must, that a large proportion of the population here pays but a small amount of taxes imposed.
> We find from the evidence of fair-minded men, residents of Washington, familiar with real-estate values in general, that the present assessment of real estate for taxation is fair and reasonable.

This portion of that report is quoted as a reason why this bill should not pass.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That portion is quoted to disprove the statement that the citizens of the District of Columbia are undertaxed.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes. The three Senators on the joint commission are no longer Members of that body. The only members of that joint commission are Judge GARD, of Ohio, and myself. He will confirm what I am now prepared to say, that although the investigation was ex parte in character, and we heard the gentlemen who principally represented the District of Columbia and presented matters from their viewpoint, every member of that joint commission reached the conclusion that the half-and-half proposition ought to be repealed. In our report, which was prepared by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD]—every word of it was written by him, and he will confirm what I say—we recommended in the report the very legislation which is now pending before this House.

Now, I note also—and I have not much time—that my colleague from Illinois, Mr. WILLIAMS, quotes from Gov. Blackburn, of Kentucky, referring to a speech he made on May 7, 1878, speaking in the House in favor of the half-and-half bill, and he correctly quotes from his speech. Gov. Blackburn at that time was chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia and prepared that half-and-half bill. He himself drew this measure which is called the fundamental law of the District on the subject, and he spoke in its favor, and largely on account of the fight he made his bill was written into the law.

Now, Gov. Blackburn appeared before our committee in 1915, 37 years after he made this speech. When he appeared he was a member of the Lincoln Memorial Commission, residing here in the city of Washington. Gov. Blackburn on that occasion, in 1915, referring to the subject, said—and what Gov. Blackburn thought about it in 1915 is of more value now than the argument he used in 1878:

> The status of 1878 no longer exists here now. For that reason I believe that the time has come to abolish the 50 per cent division of expenses between the private property holders and the Federal Government.

I am reading from page 1426 of Document No. 247, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

> If the half-and-half division of the expenditures was fair in 1878, it certainly is not fair now.
>
> There are other reasons that commend themselves to my judgment. I do not believe that the Federal Government ought to be in a business partnership with anybody. I do not think it comports with the dignity of a nation of 100,000,000 people to maintain a business partnership with those who pay taxes in the District.
>
> * * * * * * *
> I do not believe that any man should be benefited by or penalized because of his living in the Capital City. * * *
>
> I believe that that partnership ought to be dissolved. The law of 1878 has stood the test of experience for more than one-third of a century. It has lasted longer than I thought it would endure at the time of its enactment. * * *
> I have no regrets to express and no apology to offer for the act of 1878. For 36 years it has answered the purposes of those who framed it and answered those purposes well, I think; but I think the time has come now when a different condition should obtain.

And then Col. Worthington, representing the District organizations, called his attention to this very speech, a portion of which my colleague has embodied in this report, and Gov. Blackburn said:

> I repeat every word of that now, and indorse every word of it now. I have stated to the joint committee that at that time I believed that the act of 1878 was the best solution that could then be had. I am satisfied beyond all peradventure of doubt that that conclusion was correct; more than the act of 1878 got could not have been passed through the two Houses. If conditions as to holdings of real estate in the District of Columbia were to-day what they were 36 years ago, I would still insist that the equal division of municipal expenditures was approximately fair between the Federal Government and the private taxpayer.

Gov. Blackburn—and this was among his last official acts before his death—appeared before our committee and asked that the act of which he was the father, which he had succeeded in getting through Congress, should be repealed.

I think his opinion in 1915 is worthy now of more serious consideration than his opinion in 1878 should now receive. The citizens of the District of Columbia ought to pay as much in taxes to-day as they would pay for public purposes if they lived in any other city with similar surroundings; and they ought to pay that much, no matter how much the Government pays, and they ought to pay no more than that, no matter how much the Government pays. This city belongs to the people of this Nation. It does not belong to those who happen to live here. It does not belong to the Government employees who live here. It is a national city, created for the purpose of being a national city, and created originally in order that it might be maintained without any form of local government; and since Congress conclusively took charge of the affairs of this city, it has been the best-governed city in the United States. When it tried to govern itself, after the act of 1871, there were scandals greater than any other city of this country ever developed, and after three years of attempting to govern itself in the early seventies it came out with a debt of over $25,000,000, which the Government was compelled practically to assume and guarantee, and the National Government has been paying half of it ever since, and the Government would have to pay all of it, of course, if the District did not pay half of it.

I am not one of those who think that the taxpayers who live here in the District of Columbia ought to pay all the expenses of maintaining this beautiful Capital.

This city ought to be maintained as the most beautiful capital in the world. The people who live here ought not to be required to pay all the expense of maintaining its broad boulevards, its magnificent park systems, its hundreds of miles of sewers, but they ought to be required to pay as much as they would pay in other cities similar in population. Of course, there is no city in the United States, no city in the world, that will afford to the people who live within its boundaries the cultural opportunities, the educational opportunities, the social opportunities, open to the people who live here in this great Capital of this great Nation. But it is not too much to require them to pay what they would pay on the property they own here if they lived in Newark, N. J., or New Orleans, La., the two cities which in population most nearly approximate the city of Washington.

If the citizens who live here pay as much as they would pay if they lived elsewhere, or in the cities I have mentioned, we ought not to attempt to maintain this beautiful Capital on the amount they contribute, and there is not the slightest danger that any attempt of that kind will be made. This is a national city and Congress will appropriate always whatever balance is needed. In order to indicate what I mean when I say that the conditions in no other city will apply to the conditions here, I might call attention to the fact that just a few years ago when we had here in Washington a windstorm, which many of you will remember, and which blew down trees all over the city, I obtained figures at that time as to the number of trees destroyed. They were hardly missed when the débris was cleared away, and there are no marks of that storm now. There were as many trees destroyed in that storm as there are in any other city in the world.

Washington is not a large city, but we have here more square yards of asphalt paving than they have in the neighboring city of Baltimore, which is one of the great cities of the country. We have here more miles of sewers than they have in Baltimore. I present these facts to show how impossible it is to expect the people who live here to bear all the expenses of maintaining this city. The newspapers of Washington seem to think that some such movement as that is ultimately contemplated. Many of the citizens of Washington seem to think that this legislation would be the first step in that direction. But let me say to the citizens of Washington and to the newspapers of Washington they need have no such fears. This city belongs as much to the people who live in Illinois as it does to the people who happen to live here. The people of this country, without any assistance or suggestions from that portion of the population which lives in Washington, will maintain their Capital as the greatest capital of the greatest Nation in the world ought to be maintained.

For a long time there have been many Members of Congress who have been compelled to face in their elections the charge that they have voted to appropriate out of money contributed by the taxpayers from their districts funds for moving ashes and garbage from the back doors of residents in the city of Washington and that they are compelled to help maintain million-dollar high schools here; that they are compelled to help maintain here great manual-training schools. As a matter of fact, all of you know the fallacy of an argument like that, but the time has come to stop it. Members of Congress ought to be compelled no longer to face this charge, and the only way to relieve the membership of this burden is to abolish this half-and-half proposition, by which the National Government contributes one-half the expenses of maintaining this Capital.

The history of the support by the Federal Government of the National Capital is interesting. The capital was located here in Washington in order that the affairs of the District might be administered by Members of Congress and not by any local government. Delegates to the Constitutional Convention—many of them—had been Members of the Congress which in 1783 was compelled by a riotous mob of Revolutionary soldiers to move the capital of the United States from Philadelphia, Pa., to Princeton, N. J., after the governor of Pennsylvania had assured them that his State militia would not be able to cope with the disciplined veterans of the War of the Revolution. As the result of the experience Congress had in 1783 in Philadelphia it was easy to place in the fundamental law of the land the provision for this District. President Washington was authorized to lay out the city here where it is. He required the landowners—there were 19 or 20 of them, I think, who owned the site of the original city of Washington—to deed to him the 6,111 acres upon which the city was built. After laying out the city streets and the alleys and the avenues, and after laying out the lots, George Washington deeded back to the former owners 10,136 lots, that number being one-half of the total number of lots laid out. The people who lived here at that time were anxious to undertake the burden of a national city. They knew that here was to be located the greatest business in the world, the business of conducting this great Government, with its tens of thousands of employees, and they did maintain the city—it was not an expensive proposition to maintain the city in those days—until early in the last century, when the first considerable municipal improvement was undertaken, and this improvement consisted in the building of a "path from the President's house to Georgetown."

My recollection is that the Federal Government paid one-half of that expense, and from that time on the Federal Government has contributed to the support of the District perhaps as much as the Federal Government ought to have contributed. From 1790 to 1835 it cost about $5,500,000 to pay the municipal expenses of the District of Columbia. During that period of time the Government contributed about one-half of this amount, but during 22 years of that time the Government made no contribution at all; in fact, during that period of time no contribution was requested by the citizens who lived here; but in 1835 the city had developed to such an extent that maintaining it was a burden the citizens who lived here ought not to be compelled to sustain. They appealed then to Congress and from that time on a large contribution was made by the Federal Government. Contributions were made when the Federal Government deemed contributions were necessary and they were usually made when the citizens demanded contributions.

But in 1871 under Gen. Grant's administration, when an era of good feeling was commencing following the Civil War, and when there were steps taken to restore the rights of citizenship of Southern States, it was considered opportune to give the District of Columbia local self-government and under the suggestion of the Grant administration a governor was appointed for the District of Columbia, and a legislative body was established, composed of 22 members, half of that number being appointed by the citizens of the District and the other half appointed by the President. As the result of this local self-government in three years of time the city was plunged into debt to the amount of $25,000,000, a debt which amounted to $150 per capita for the people who happened to live here, and this was $30 per capita more than the debt of any other city in the United States. The Government was compelled to take away from the city its self-governing organization and to resume again the burdens of governing this city, and from that time on the city of Washington has been the best governed city in the world. The scandals of the Shepherd administration, from 1871 to 1873, are still remembered. No other city ever experienced anything like it. It is not likely that the District of Columbia will be again self-governing. Self-government for this city is an impossibility for the simple reason that they depend too much upon the Treasury of the United States. The Government will not permit its Capital to incur debts which it will not pay, and for that reason the civic restraints which govern citizens of other cities will never prevail here. In 1878 the organic act was passed providing that the Government pay half and the citizens pay half of the expenses of maintaining this city upon the theory at that time that the Government owned in value perhaps one-half of the property, but the Government built its own buildings and the Government maintained its own buildings. The Government provided the magnificent grounds which surround these buildings, and the Government maintained these grounds. The Government polices its own buildings and the grounds about them, and these items are not included as a part of municipal expenses. The Government will be discharging its full duty to the National Capital if after the people who live here pay the taxes they ought to pay—the taxes they would pay if they lived in other cities of similar size—the Government pays the balance, whatever it may be, whether that balance be more than the citizens pay or less than the citizens pay. From 1835 to 1870 it cost to maintain the National Capital, in round numbers, $20,000,000, of which amount the citizens contributed $5,000,000 more than was contibuted by the Federal Government, and this was about the proportion the citizens ought to have contributed during that period of time.

The argument usually made by the newspapers published here and by the citizens who live here in favor of the half-and-half proposition is that the city did not become a great and beautiful city until after the Government fixed the exact ratio of 50–50 in the matter of paying expenses. They say that from 1878 to the present time the greatest growth and the greatest development in the Capital occurred. Of course, the fact they state is true, but it is a fact that every city in the Union, including even the old cities of the East, much older than Washington, made the greatest growth and development after 1878. During that period of time street railways abandoned the old system of horse cars and attained their present comfort in the matter of transit. During that period of time electricity came into use. During that period of time gardens and parks made their greatest development. During that period of time, I remember that the city of Chicago was entirely rebuilt, even the buildings in that great city were torn down and renewed. There is nothing in this argument. There is no alchemy in the half-and-half proposition which insures to this city its continued development in beauty and in every other thing which makes a city magnificent and great. The citizens of Washington take themselves too seriously. The editorial staffs of Washington newspapers take themselves too seriously. Men who favor a continuance of this illogical half-and-half proposition will have their pictures printed on the front pages of Washington newspapers indefinitely in the future. Their names will appear in the front page headlines after this discussion is over. Those of us who stand for a more logical system expect nothing of this kind. So far as I am concerned in the future I expect to vote for those appropriations from the Federal Treasury needed to maintain the magnificence of this Capital city, and I expect at all times to vote to compel taxpayers who live here to pay as much as they would pay on their property if they lived in any other city of similar size.

The Federal Government assumed the payment of one-half of the indebtedness contracted by the Shepherd government in the city of Washington and the Government has been paying one-half of the sums paid on that account ever since. The bonds issued at that time—the 3.65 bonds—are not yet paid. Nine hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars will be paid this year on those bonds; $975,000 will be paid next year, and $975,000 will be paid in the fiscal year of 1922, and when the 1922 payment is made the bonds will all be paid. This will release the citizens of Washington from paying one-half every year of the $975,000. The citizens who live here have nothing of which to complain. They have been treated fairly and liberally by the Federal Government. We have paid one-half of the debt contracted by the District during the three years it was a self-governing city, and it is to be hoped it will never be a self-governing city again. After the citizens have paid the taxes they ought to pay, Congress will pay what balance is necessary. The Federal Government ought to do that much; it ought not to do more than that.

I am surprised that the half-and-half proposition receives at this time so much support in this body. It never before received support similar to the support given it now. Nearly one-half the members of the District Committee have signed the minority report. We have been appropriating so many billions of dollars during the war that the conscience of Congress in the matter of appropriations may be blunted to a certain degree, but I will be surprised indeed if the proposition of the committee to abandon the half-and-half proposition and to adopt a logical plan does not again pass this House. As far as I am concerned, I expect to vote for the committee bill.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for many years as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia I have listened to arguments for and against this half-and-half method of taxation, until finally, when the bill was reported to the House by the vote of the committee, I am constrained to believe that as the years go by the arguments become more confounding and confusing instead of enlightening. The bill came here with nine names attached to what was called a minority report, which, in fact, was a majority report against any change. As for myself, I might say to the several gentlemen who talked about going home to your constituents and facing them on this little proposition of taxation in Washington, or the District of Columbia, that I have been to see those folks many times, and I expect to go to see them many times in the future, and I want to say to those gentlemen that those very people are glad indeed that there is some inducement for people to come to live in Washington, even if residents are given a small shade of reduction in taxation. They are proud of their great Capital city. They are willing that it shall be beautified; that there shall be better accommodations here; that it may become an example to the whole world; that we may have that good government here spoken of a minute ago.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will my friend yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Briefly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is this city going to be beautified by bringing tax dodgers here?

Mr. FOCHT. They can not dodge taxes when they have property here. It is your fault and mine if we do not get them. But you will not get them under this bill, and I will tell you why. If they are half as crooked and venal as they are claimed to be, the best way is to make them pay a definite and fixed amount. I should like to know how you are going to get them under an assessment system, if they control the assessor. You gentlemen are all wise enough to know what happens under an assessment system. You know that the assessment of property is sometimes very much a matter of sentiment, sometimes a matter of judgment and viewpoint, often a matter of necessity. So how are you going to get at it? We do know that when we get the 50 per cent from them we get a fixed and sure amount; but if you are going into this haphazard, indefinite, unbusinesslike proposition which is offered in this bill, you are saying to them, "Give us what you please, what the assessors choose to assess, and we, like easy marks, will give them the balance." That reminds me of how the late Senator Quay once jocularly replied to the importunities of a soliciting promotor. He said, "You go out and see what you can make and I will give you half of it," and that is the way with this sort of a proposition.

This is no time to make the change, anyhow. You see the sentiment of the committee expressed in their negative recommendation on this bill, which ought to be an expression of value. But while the bill may pass the House, it will not pass the body at the other end of this Capitol. With the present disturbed condition of values, especially in Washington, this is no time to tamper with assessments. Anyhow, one thing that we always try to arrive at in a city or county or any division of government is to reach the point where we have ample funds, and certainly we have enough here when they say they have a surplus of $4,000,000, which indicates good housekeeping.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAPES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the purpose of this bill is to establish complete and ample justice between the residents of the District of Columbia and the taxpaying residents of all the cities of the American Union and to clear away the most marked feature of special privilege which exists on the statute books to-day. There has been a singular unanimity of every board and of all persons who have had occasion to investigate this matter, until now we come to the carrying out, by the language of this bill, of the action of chairmen of Committees on Appropriations, Messrs. Fitzgerald, Sherley, and GOOD, and the action of chairmen of the District of Columbia Committee, Messrs. JOHNSON and MAPES, and of the report of the Fiscal Relations Commission of 1915, of whom there are two members now in the House and who vouch for what that means. It is the carrying out of what this District of Columbia Committee has done in the last two or three weeks, and of the action of this House of Representatives seven times repeated, which has declared that this fictitious principle of the so-called half and half is absolutely no longer necessary and should not be tolerated upon the statute books of the United States.

Now, the Fiscal Relations Commission found—and the House has followed their finding a number of times—that it was impossible to determine whether 20 per cent or 30 per cent or 40 per cent or 50 per cent was an adequate contribution by the General Government, but they found, and found justly, that the people here should pay a fair and reasonable tax upon their taxable property, and that beyond that every cent necessary to maintain this Capital as the model city not alone of the United States but of the world should be made up by the General Government. That is the report of the Fiscal Relations Commission; that is the plan that I think should be followed; and that is what is applied here. Now, the last time we considered it we found there was an immense surplus credited to the funds of the District of Columbia standing unexpended, useless for any municipal purpose, over $4,000,000 of the people's money lying idle. No State, no municipality anywhere except here in the District of Columbia, has any such fund of the people's money lying idle. When we sought to avoid that, we were told that it is all a matter of bookkeeping; that it would not be appropriated, anyhow. But now we find by this publication issued yesterday in the District of Columbia, where the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD]—by adoption, I believe—takes on a statement. We find that there should be two things, one that the law of limitation should be removed, and the other that the surplus should be expended. This is the development that everybody anticipated. We were told that the surplus was a matter of bookkeeping; that it did not amount to anything; and now here we find as the entering wedge the two things, remove the limitation on appropriations, throw open wide the door to estimates no matter how radical or useless, and, more than that, spend the $4,000,000—no matter what you spend it for, but get rid of it; it belongs to the people of the United States; take it from the Treasury and spend it; throw it to the winds so that we will not be charged with having a surplus. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration proposes to abolish the half-and-half system by which the people of Washington and the Federal Treasury contribute equal amounts to the maintenance of the District government. The method of establishing and governing the city of Washington and the District of Columbia is unique in comparison with the history of any other national capital. Here the scheme and plan for a Federal seat of government was conceived and drafted long before the city became a reality. In all of the older nations the capitals were established in existing cities, but in the United States the Capital was first designed and the city followed.

The preliminary steps to create a national reserve for the seat of government were taken in 1778, when the Congress was in session in the city of Philadelphia. Thereafter followed such legislation and consummation of plans as resulted in laying off the District of Columbia separate and apart from the jurisdiction of any of the sovereign States in America. In the year 1800 the offices and departments of our National Government were duly established in the city of Washington and within the District of Columbia. Two years later the city itself was incorporated. From the time the seat of government was established here down to the year 1878 there was no fixed and determined understanding between the people of the Nation and the people of the District of Columbia as to what portion each should bear in meeting the expenses of municipal development and maintenance. During all of those years the people submitted to a burden of heavy taxation, and all of the money so paid was spent for public improvement purposes. The tax money was supplemented by sporadic appropriations by Congress. Some years Congress appropriated much, some years it appropriated little, and some years it appropriated nothing at all. The results of that uncertain situation were disastrous in the extreme. The city government became heavily involved in debt; municipal bankruptcy was threatened. With all their abundant outlay of cash, the streets were dilapidated and municipal progress was halted. Property values fluctuated with the varying uncertainty of tax levies. Public spirit was in a chaotic condition and municipal progress had stopped. Congress at last realized the impending calamity and appointed a commission to ascertain the facts and define the causes and to suggest a legislative remedy. Many months of hard labor by the wisest men of the Nation was given to this task, and when their report was made it was followed by the enactment of what is known as the organic act of July, 1878, which provided a new form of government for the District of Columbia and the city of Washington. That organic law provided, among other reforms, that the expense of maintaining the municipal government should be divided half and half between taxation against the citizens of the District and appropriations from the Treasury of the United States.

During all preceding years the tax money paid out by the people of the District in developing a Capital for the whole United States had exceeded the amount of money contributed by the Government for that purpose to the extent of more than $9,000,000. Since that time, however, the District and the Government have been matching dollars in meeting that expense.

The proponents of the pending bill propose to abolish the half-and-half provision without substituting anything better in its place. The natural result of the passage of this bill would be a reversion to the unsettled conditions formerly prevailing with all the attendant uncertainty as to the amount of taxation, the comprehensiveness of the improvements, and the whim and caprice of varying congressional appropriations.

In all of the hearings held on this bill and in the arguments submitted by its advocates the whole fight seems to be bottomed on the theory that the people of Washington are not taxed as heavily as the citizens of certain other municipalities in the United States. That general statement may be true, although the facts do not seem to bear it out. But whether it is true or not is unimportant, because it does not involve the fundamental principle to which we should look in settling this controversy.

If it be true that Washington citizens pay less taxes than the people of other cities, remember that this is not a commercial city; that it is not maintained by mines or factories, or farming interests, or shipping facilities, or any of the other peculiarly local conditions that build up cities of their own accord. If it be true that these citizens bear light tax burdens, it is also true that in no other city of America is so large a proportion of the most valuable real estate entirely excluded from responding to any tax whatever. If it be true that they pay less tax, it is also true that what they do pay is expended for the benefit of the whole Nation as well as for themselves. In every other American city the taxes are paid for purely local benefit, but here the taxes are largely paid for the national benefit.

If it be true that they pay less taxes, it is also true that they receive less in return for what they pay. In every other city of America the people who pay taxes for governmental purposes enjoy the right of administering their own government according to their own will. They determine through appropriate representation how the taxes they pay shall be expended. When we remember the impositions practiced upon the colonies before the days of the Revolution, and when we remember that the unjust burden of taxation without representation was one of the primary causes of the birth of this infant Republic, it seems to be the very irony of fate that this city, which is presumed to typify in its magnificence the soul of Americanism, should be the only spot in the Nation subject to taxation without representation.

The people of Washington and the District of Columbia have no voice in choosing the people who make their laws; they have no part in framing those laws; they are not consulted as to who shall be the officers to enforce their laws; they do not determine the amount of their own taxation; and they are utterly helpless in determining how their tax money shall be spent. Congress makes all the laws for the District of Columbia, and the officers and boards appointed by the President administer those laws. The people of the District have no vote in determining the Membership in Congress nor in electing the President.

I am not concerned about the relative rate of taxation in Washington and in other cities. Whether these people pay a higher tax rate or a lower tax rate than the people of Cincinnati, or San Francisco, or New Orleans, or Detroit, is neither here nor there in determining the fundamental problem in hand. That comparison is irrelevant and immaterial and far afield from the real issue involved here.

One important question is: Who is benefited by the money that is spent in maintaining the Capital City of the Nation? The obvious answer must be that the benefits accrue to the inhabitants of Washington on one hand and to the citizens of the Nation on the other hand. To determine the respective needs of these two bodies of people in that behalf reaches the real crux of this inquiry. Consider, if you please, the relative disadvantages they would suffer without such expenditures. If the streets are neglected, if the parks become unsightly, if the water supply is cut off, if fire protection fails, if the police organization ceases to function, would not the calamity to the whole body of the American public be vastly greater than the mere inconvenience suffered by the population of this city? Then, gentlemen, it is but reasonable that the Government should bear at least an equal portion of the expense incurred in the upkeep of these municipal requirements so important to our national welfare.

Another important fact that should not be forgotten is that the Government has made necessary a much heavier maintenance account than is the case in the average American city. The splendid magnificence of the District as laid out by Gen. Washington, with its broad thoroughfares, with its graceful parks and squares and circles, require improvements of such expense and elegance as to harmonize with the artistic scheme upon which the city has been planned.

It costs large sums to pave the wide streets; ornate bridges are required; and everything must be on a larger and more extensive scale than elsewhere to conform to the artistic dignity of a city designed with national pride for the home of our Federal Government. And remember, the people of Washington have no voice in saying whether these things will be so or not. These expenses were determined for us in plans approved more than a century ago and handed down to us as a mandate from the founders of this Federal City.

Justice and equity demand that the people of the Nation should join with the people of the District in meeting the expense of maintaining the Capital City in ratable proportion to their respective needs. Certainly it can not be said that our National Government has less interest in its only established and permanent home than has a changing resident population.

The District of Columbia is primarily the seat of government for the United States; the growth and development of a great municipality within the District was a probable and a necessary incident; but Washington as a city is secondary in importance to Washington as a Capital. The Federal Government is not located in the city of Washington for the benefit of the citizens of this city; the Federal Government is located here for the benefit of the whole people of the United States.

In the ordinary city the interest of the people of that city is the supreme purpose of its municipal existence; but in the case of our Federal seat of government the place is primarily a capital and only incidentally a city. The magnitude of the plan of the city of Washington, with the number and the length and width of its thoroughfares to be built and maintained, imposes a burden vastly greater than a city planned by local interests would undertake; moreover, the greatness of the improvements as to beauty and expense must be harmonious with the original design, and the cost is vastly more than the ordinary city would afford.

Here is another fact absolutely unique in the history of city building. The seat of government is confined to the present boundary limits of the District of Columbia. Congress itself has no power to extend those limits. In other municipalities the amount of taxable real estate increases in area with the extension of city boundaries, but the very reverse is true in the District of Columbia. The Federal Constitution prevents an increase in acreage; but it grants to Congress, regardless of the will of the local people, the right to reduce the amount of that acreage for the purposes of taxation. Year by year more and more of this land is purchased or condemned by Congress, and is laid off for public highways and taken for public parks and building grounds. Every acre so taken reduces the source of tax production, and at the same time it increases the need of money for the upkeep of the city and the District.

When these facts are fairly considered it seems just and reasonable that the United States should bear at least half of the burden of development and upkeep in the District of Columbia. Moreover, for the sake of quietude and certainty on the part of the Government, as well as on the part of the District, the relative proportions of the money to be paid for this purpose should remain definitely fixed by law. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I oppose the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, in five minutes one can not discuss the real merits of the pending measure. Gentlemen say they are not concerned with regard to the relative amount of taxes that the taxpayers of the city of Washington shall pay into the Treasury for the support of the city, and yet, as a business proposition, that is all that this bill is to do. The city of Washington to-day has an indebtedness of about $3,000,000, and under the sinking fund requirements that debt will be all paid in 1922. There is not another city in the United States anywhere that can show a financial condition to compare with that.

This matter has been before the House for several years, and about every time it has been before the House two-thirds of the membership have been in favor of repealing the law and in favor of a proposition such as that carried in the pending bill. It seems to me that the measure is entirely fair. It ought to be fair to the District of Columbia. We ought not to enact any legislation that is unfair, and those who would claim that Members who favor this legislation are inclined to be unfair to the District I think are misstating the question altogether.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the passage of this bill of itself increase the taxes of the citizens of the District?

Mr. GOOD. It would not of itself. It might make it necessary to increase the taxes, and I am not sure but what it should. In my city, a town of less than 50,000, I have to pay taxes at the rate of more than 2 per cent upon a fair cash valuation of my property. I think our rate is about the experience in other cities of that size and larger. Here we assess the property at two-thirds of its valuation, and the actual assessment figures out about 1 per cent of the actual value. It seems to me, in all justice to the property owners here, that it will not be treating them unfairly, enjoying all the benefits of what I believe is destined to be the greatest city in America in many respects, if we require them to pay a tax equal to that paid by people in other cities. I believe Washington is destined in many respects to be the center of great activities; it is destined to become the center of art, literature, and science in the United States. It is recognized as the political center. I believe it is destined to be that, but I do not believe that Washington is soon to be the city it is destined to become if we do not change this method of taxation. The sooner we change this system, the better for Washington. I think our schoolhouses in Washington do not measure up to the requirements and needs of the city. The character of buildings on Pennsylvania Avenue would be a disgrace to a town of 10,000 people, and yet they continue, and will continue, until we adopt a business plan of taxing the city of Washington. Adopt a business plan, adopt the same plan that other cities adopt, and let property, whether it is Government property or other property, bear its just proportion of carrying on the activities of the city, and I think you will see a more healthy growth in the city of Washington. Those who are opposing this legislation in 10 or 20 years from now will acknowledge the fact that it is bottomed upon good business principles and will mean more for the growth of Washington than any legislation that Congress could possibly pass.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. CRISP (interrupting the count). Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, Washington has been called the most beautiful city in the world. I have not traveled abroad, so I can not from personal knowledge say that Washington is the most beatiful city in the world, but I do know that as the Capital of this great Republic it is destined to be the most beautiful city in the world. It was excellently planned, and while its builders have not followed the original plan intelligently at all times, we are gradually coming back to the old plan, and eventually this city will be developed in a manner in keeping with the might and majesty and strength of the Republic. I have never met a Member of Congress who was not kindly disposed toward the Capital of the United States. I have never known one who remained here for any length of time who was not enthusiastic with regard to its development and anxious to do what he could to promote its growth along the finest and best lines.

Some years ago conditions arose in the city of Washington under which it became necessary for the Federal Government to come to the relief of the inhabitants of the city. A local government, unfortunately administered, had plunged the city into debt in the sum of about $150 per capita. There was no possible way to meet this indebtedness, and to insure the growth and development of the city otherwise than by the aid of the Federal Government and the Federal Treasury. A plan was adopted under which the Federal Government was to contribute one-half of the expenses of the city. It was a good plan, it was a sound plan, at the time and under conditions then existing. For some time the Federal contribution was scarcely enough; it was difficult to pay the debt, to provide for the administration of the city, and to extend its streets as they were needed with the 50 per cent contribution made by the Government. But gradually conditions changed, the debt was steadily reduced, and is now almost extinguished, and the city has grown wonderfully; great wealth has been brought here from the ends of the Union, and conditions are such and will continue to be such that a contribution of 50 per cent toward the running expenses of the city by the Federal Government is not necessary. It has not been necessary for a number of years past. The old plan has outlived its usefulness. While good and useful at the time adopted, it no longer fits the conditions. It is neither fair to the people of the country generally nor is it fair to the District of Columbia that there should be this fixed one-half contribution from the Federal Treasury. The plan that is proposed is fair, equitable, reasonable. Under it the people of the District will contribute a reasonable sum to the maintenance of their Government, and all the amount needed to run the District government and meet the District needs over and above that fair contribution is to be paid out of the Federal Treasury. As a matter of fact, it is exactly what we have been doing in the past. It is what we are doing now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then why change it?

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. There is no such thing as a District of Columbia fund or a District of Columbia treasury.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman explain to the House on what he bases the assumption that future Congresses will be more generous when they have no such sum to draw from than the present Congress is with the $4,000,000 that belongs to the people of the Nation to be spent on their Capital City, which remains in the Treasury?

Mr. MONDELL. I was not talking about generosity or lack of generosity of the Congress to the District of Columbia. I take it for granted that the Congress will always be generous to the District; but I say that it is not fair to the taxpayers of the district which my friend represents to say to them, "You shall help pay half toward the maintenance of the government in the District of Columbia, whether that sum is needed or not."

Mr. Chairman, this is not a question of the rate of taxation in the District of Columbia, though one might judge it to be so from the argument that certain gentlemen make. I have expressed no opinion with regard to the present assessment or tax rates, because that is a matter not necessarily involved in this discussion. Years ago when the question of the fiscal relations of the District with the Federal Government were discussed I did not favor a change from the half-and-half rule because, while I believed we we were reaching a period when the old rule was not equitable, I was not certain what rule should be adopted. I gave the matter considerable thought and study, and I was for a time of the opinion that while the half-and-half rule no longer provided a fair apportionment of expenditure there should be some definite rule of apportionment; but as time has passed I have changed my mind in regard to that and have come to the conclusion that it is impossible to fix any hard and fast rule of division of expenditure and that the plan now proposed is not only fair and equitable but that it is the only workable plan.

I think our experience in dealing with the District in the matter of appropriations for the last few years makes it very clear that the present rule or plan is not sound. We have appropriated all that should have been appropriated under the circumstances, and yet up to the 1st of last July the District revenues have exceeded one-half of the appropriations by over $4,000,000. As a matter of fact, we have not been following the half-and-half plan.

I am in hopes that before long conditions will justify considerably increased expenditures by the District government and we may reach a condition where for a time the appropriations are equal to or even exceed double the revenues of the District. I for one should not hesitate to vote for a District bill simply because its sum total was double the income of the District, but I do not believe that it is practical or wise to have a hard and fast rule. For one thing, it handicaps the commissioners of the District in making their estimates, which is not fair to the District. Under the rule proposed the limitation which now exists on estimates would naturally be removed. The commissioners would estimate for the needs of the District, the Congress would appropriate such sums as in their opinion were wise, the District funds would flow into the National Treasury as now, and we would be free from the ever-recurrent question as to whether or not the appropriations were double the District revenue; and if not, whether or not there was a sum in the Treasury representing the difference and who it belonged to.

The plan proposed is simple, sane, and sound, and with a Congress disposed to deal with the District fairly, as I believe the Congress always will be, will afford the basis of more harmonious relations between the District and the Congress than now exists.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all appropriations of money to provide for the payment of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid, from and after July 1, 1920, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that such revenues shall be sufficient therefor and the remainder shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That the amounts to pay the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of the District of Columbia shall be paid one-half out of the revenues of the said District and one-half out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I can not make any argument in five minutes and neither can I hope to add anything to the splendid presentation of the case made by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]. It seems to me that his argument is conclusive in the matter; but, speaking to my new colleagues, let me say that in the Sixty-third Congress I introduced a bill to repeal this half-and-half law, which was the first bill ever introduced in Congress on that subject. In that Congress the House passed the bill repealing the law, and in each Congress thereafter the House has passed an act repealing the law, but it has been defeated in the Senate. Now, gentlemen of the committee, I believe that the people of the city of Washington pay the lowest tax rate of any city anywhere near the size of the city of Washington in the world. That belief is based upon comparative figures furnished me by an impartial source.

Gentlemen of the committee, you will bear in mind that in Washington there is only one tax levied, which is the city tax. They have no State and county taxes, as we have in all States of the Union. So when they pay one tax that is the only tax they do pay. The figures were furnished me by the United States Census Office, and I used them in a speech here about two years ago; I do not think there has been any change since then, and I will take the liberty of calling the attention of my colleagues to these comparative figures, showing what taxes the citizens of the United States pay in cities of approximately the size of the city of Washington:

	Nominal tax rates.			Total.	Reported basis assessment.	Reported true tax rates.	Rate per hundred.
	City.	County.	State.

Newark	13,700	4,076	2,564	20,400	100	20,400	2.04
New Orleans	22,000	.....	6,450	28,450	75	21,338	2.13
Washington	15,000	.....	.....	15,000	66⅔	10,000	1.09

Louisville	17,900	2,800	5,000	25,700	70	17,990	1.73
Atlanta	12,500	.....	5,000	.....	60	.....	.....

I do not think it just to the people of your district and mine that we should continue to pay one-half the operating expenses of the District of Columbia when the property owners here are undertaxed. Some gentleman seems to think it is wickedly wrong to amend this so-called half-and-half act, the act of June 11, 1878, which the people of the District of Columbia delight to call their constitution. Let me say to you, my friends, that law has been amended in several instances, but in every instance the amendment was to lighten the tax burden of the citizens of Washington instead of lightening any of the tax burdens of the people of the United States by reducing the amount appropriated out of the people's treasury as a gratuity to the local taxpayers. When this half-and-half act was passed on June 11, 1878, this provision was in it:

That the rate of taxation on all real and personal property shall be $1.50 per hundred.

(See Stat., vol. 20, p. 105, 45th Cong.)

Under this law the original tax rate on all real and personal property was $1.50 per hundred, and it was levied on property assessed at its full value. On July 1, 1902—Statute, volume 32, pages 616, 618—this half-and-half act was amended, but that amendment was to reduce the tax on local real estate by reducing the assessment basis from the full value to two-thirds of the value, and in addition to that the tax law relating to personal property was amended so as to exempt all intangible personal property—money, stocks, notes, accounts, and so forth—from all taxation. It was taxed under the original half-and-half act. Upon the passage of this act all intangible personal property in the District was exempt from all taxation from that time, July 1, 1902, until this agitation started resulting in remedial legislation in 1916.

September 1, 1916 (Stats., 39, p. 717, 64th Cong.), Congress passed a law putting a tax of four-tenths of 1 per cent on intangible personal property, and that is the law to-day, a mere bagatelle compared to what your constituents pay. Some gentlemen say that if we repeal this law it is not just to the taxpayers of Washington, for they would be uncertain as to what amount of taxes they shall pay. My friends, the amount they will pay is just as certain, just as definitely fixed, if this law is repealed as it is to-day. Under the law as it is to-day the commissioners make their estimates of expenditures, and it is for the Congress to say whether they will approve them, how much the Congress will appropriate, and under the existing law one-half of the amount Congress determines is paid out of taxes from the District and the Federal Government pays the other half of the amount. If you repeal this law, the tax paid by the people of Washington will remain just exactly what it is to-day, $1 on the hundred on real estate——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRISP. May I ask for five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to continue for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRISP. You see the tax rate is just as fixed, just as certain as it is to-day. Local property owners will pay the tax rate of $1 on real estate and four-tenths on intangible property, just as they do now, and then it will be for the Congress to say what other amount shall be appropriated for the use of the District. This bill clearly works no hardship, no injustice upon the people of the District. Now, in conclusion, in my judgment if this law is repealed it will mean that no inequitable hardship will be imposed upon the people of the District of Columbia, but the people of your district and mine will be relieved of an unjust tax burden that they are now bearing for the people of the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the page: "Provided further, That hereafter there shall be no restrictions on the right of the District Commissioners to estimate the expenses of the District for any fiscal year."

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman is going to make the point of order, make it; I do not want any reservation.

Mr. MAPES. I make the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the point of order? It is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. MAPES. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to this bill, which simply provides for the use of money raised by taxation within the District, and can not be amended by an amendment in the nature of that which the gentleman offers.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that this bill seeks to amend the present law only in one particular, and the gentleman's amendment seeks to amend it in another particular, which is not germane to the present bill before the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This bill does not seek to amend the law in any particular.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think either gentleman has stated a reason why this amendment should not be made a part of the bill or submitted to the committee for consideration. The bill itself provides that all appropriations of money to provide for the payment of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid from and after July 1, 1920, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that such revenues shall be sufficient therefor and the remainder shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and this amendment simply seeks to provide that the District Commissioners shall have the unrestricted right to estimate what the expenses are to be, a function absolutely necessary for the proper conduct of the District government. The mere fact that the expenses are to be paid indicates that they must be estimated for before appropriated.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. BEGG. The question I would like to ask you and have made clear is, suppose that your amendment is incorporated, then would there be anything to prevent the District Commissioners estimating the expenditures for the year at, say, five times more than the rate of taxation would provide, and would not Congress be obligated at such time to make up whatever deficit they would find?

Mr. MADDEN. There is nothing to prevent the District Commissioners under this provision, if it should become a part of the law, from making any estimates they please, to the extent that they please, for any improvements that might be required legitimately in the District. For example, if we have not schools enough to accommodate the children who happen to live here, they would have a right to estimate for an additional number of schools, and they have been restricted in that right under the law as it now exists. If we have not a sufficient water supply, they would have a right to estimate for the cost of creating a water supply. If we have not a sufficient sewerage system to meet the needs of sanitation in the District, they would have the right to estimate for the cost of that. But it would still be within the power of the Congress of the United States to say what part of the recommendations would be adopted.

It seems to me that the most salutary thing that could be done, Mr. Chairman, is to give the District Commissioners the power to make the estimates for the important and vital needs of the District. And if this is not a part of a law which provides how the money raised shall be expended I do not know what could be a part of the law. If this is subject to a point of order, why, you can not offer an amendment to this bill that would not be subject to a point of order. My judgment is that the one thing most vitally needed in the District to-day is the power sought to be given to the commissioners by the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Is not the language of the gentleman's amendment recommended to Congress by the commissioners?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know. The language I offer is not recommended by anybody. It is from my own fertile brain, and can not, in my judgment, be considered as not germane, as not appropriate, or in any way subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not recall the exact language of the recent law limiting the authority of the commissioners to make estimates, but I know this, that it contemplates and provides that the estimated expenditures made by the District Commissioners shall not exceed more than twice the estimated amount raised by taxes in the District. So that it is indirectly bound up with the half-and-half proposition. The whole theory of the law in reference to limiting the estimates by the commissioners is based on that proposition, to the effect that the estimates shall not be greater than the amount estimated to be raised by the District as one half and the amount contributed by the Government as the other half.

Now, if that were not the case, I do not think this amendment would be germane to the bill. But that is the whole theory of that provision of the law. It is directly based upon the half-and-half proposition. It seems to me that an amendment to change the provision of the law is germane to a proposition to abolish the half and half, as the two are bound up together.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is correct as to the rule in reference to the estimates of the District Commissioners. Their estimates shall not be more than double the amount of taxation that is raised by the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The estimated amount.

Mr. SISSON. The estimated amount. Therefore the limit of appropriations would be twice the amount of money raised in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You mean the estimates?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Which is all based on the half-and-half plan.

Mr. SISSON. That is true. And if, as a matter of fact, at the end of the year money had actually been appropriated by Congress which exceeded the amount that was raised in the District of Columbia, the District of Columbia, of course, would then be indebted to the Federal Treasury an amount of money over and above this 50 per cent that was raised. But in order that the District Commissioners shall not go beyond that the law provides that the estimates shall not go beyond the amount of money that will be raised under the present half-and-half system—that is, the present rate of taxation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And that provision was all based on the half and half?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I understand this amendment, the amount of money that is to be contributed out of the Federal Treasury shall not exceed the amount now paid in the District of Columbia. Now, if that is true, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois would change the present law, because, as I understand, this bill does not change the present law as to the rate of assessment or as to the method of assessing the property.

The single thing that is done in this bill is to provide that the money raised in the District of Columbia shall first be appropriated toward the payment of whatever amount Congress may appropriate before any money can be paid out of the Federal Treasury.

Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] fixing the amount that Congress would be obligated to appropriate would, to the extent that his amendment in the future might be binding upon Congress, place the moral obligation upon Congress, to appropriate the amount of money that the District Commissioners might say was needed.

Mr. MADDEN. No; not at all. It simply gives an opportunity, if it becomes a part of the act, for the commissioners to express an opinion as to vital improvements that are necessary in the District, whereas they have not that opportunity now.

Mr. SISSON. I think they do that now, Mr. Chairman. For example, I have this estimate before me now. Last year they asked for money to be appropriated to the extent of something like $19,000,000. We actually appropriated about $15,000,000. This year they ask for more than $19,000,000, and there is more than $1,000,000 in addition to that carried in the sundry civil bill and in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, which is now pending in our committee. They are asking for over $19,000,000. In these other bills the clerk to the committee told me the amount ran to considerably over $1,000,000, which they are now demanding of the subcommittee of which my friend from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is chairman, and that, together with what is being demanded of the other committee, amounts to over $2,000,000, which is asked for by the District Commissioners.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SISSON. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. It may be essential that they should have $20,000,000.
Mr. SISSON. Of course, Congress in the last analysis would be the final judge.
Mr. MADDEN. Surely.
Mr. SISSON. But we are discussing the question of whether the gentleman's amendment changes the existing law. The only change made, as has been contended always with reference to this particular legislation, is the application of the funds collected from the District of Columbia. Therefore all the other law with reference to assessments, with reference to rates of taxation and methods of collecting taxes, remains just as it is now. The only provision is in this law that the money collected first from the District of Columbia shall be expended from the Treasury before any warrants are drawn from the General Treasury of the Federal Government to pay the bills of the District.
Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say one word about the point of order, and it occurs to me that there can be no question but that the point of order is well taken.
In every fiscal arrangement there are two things that are to be considered. One is the question of raising revenues, either by taxation or in some other way.
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TOWNER. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. This does not provide for raising revenue. This provides for appropriating revenue.
Mr. TOWNER. I was just going to try to show that that is the vital difficulty with your amendment. This bill has nothing to do with raising revenue. It has nothing whatever to do with estimates of revenues. It has nothing to do with the method of taxation of the District of Columbia. There is only one thing that this bill does. It provides how these taxes that are collected, these revenues that are provided upon the estimates that are now made, shall be paid. To say now that because we provide a method of payment you can put upon this kind of a bill a proposition also in regard to the manner of raising revenue is certainly not germane to this bill.
There is no question whatever but that this bill has nothing to do with the raising of revenue. It does not change the existing law in any way whatever in regard to the raising of revenue, in regard to the taxation of the District.
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?
Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.
Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman contend that the amendment that I have offered has anything to do with the raising of revenue?
Mr. TOWNER. I certainly do.
Mr. MADDEN. It simply estimates how much of the money already raised is to be expended for the District expenses.
Mr. TOWNER. Oh, I think not. The gentleman is still one further removed from the proposition of raising revenue. Estimates are made for the purpose of determining how the revenues shall be raised. The estimates are made by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the purpose of basing taxation upon them.
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?
Mr. TOWNER. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. If I understand the situation, certainly the gentleman must misconceive the purpose of the amendment. The law under which taxes are levied fixes the rate, the method. It is already in existence. This amendment does not seek to amend that law in any respect. This bill deals with the revenues that are already collected under the tax levy, and my amendment provides that in the distribution of the funds already collected under the levy and sought to be appropriated it shall be within the power of the Commissioners of the District to estimate the purposes for which this money shall be expended.
Mr. TOWNER. Yes; and the estimates of how much money shall be expended for any particular purpose have not any reference to the manner in which these funds shall be paid, and the proposition involved in this bill is simply as to how they should be paid. The language of the bill is that—

All appropriations of money to provide for the payment of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid from and after July 1, 1920—

And so forth. It seems to me that anything that has not to do immediately with the method and manner of payment, as expressly provided in this bill, is not germane.
Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe that I am in sympathy with the proposition embodied in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], but I am not able to see how it is germane to this bill.
It has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the provision with reference to the limitation upon the estimates and the half-and-half principle are so bound up together that one could not exist without the other.
As a matter of fact, the half-and-half principle was in legislation for 30 years before the limitation as to estimates was adopted, and it might very well be that Congress would desire to have the limit remain upon the estimates, even if the bill before us should become a law. The present revenues of the District approximate about $10,000,000 a year. If the present limitation is continued upon the estimates the commissioners can not send to Congress estimates for appropriations for more than $20,000,000. Now, if this bill becomes a law Congress might desire to have that continue to be the case, because under this bill Congress assumes the responsibility of paying what the revenues of this District will not furnish, whatever that amount may be, and we might still desire to put a check upon the estimates of the commissioners. Whether we desire to do so or not will be for Congress to decide. The point I want to make is that the proposition of a limitation upon estimates is not so bound up with the half-and-half principle that neither could exist without the other. Now, as to its being germane to this bill, not being essentially tied up with it, the bill has to do entirely with a function of the Treasury Department in determining to what fund to charge these expenditures after Congress has made the appropriation and the money has been spent, but the amendment has to do with a function of the Commissioners of the District in the estimates they make to Congress as to the amount of money required for the use of the District. It seems to me it deals with another function with reference to District finances. There really are the three functions—first, the estimate of the commissioners; second, the appropriation of the money by Congress; and third, the settlement of the bills by the Treasury Department. Hence it seems to me it is not germane to the bill before us.
The CHAIRMAN. It appears to the Chair to be rather far-fetched to claim that this particular amendment is germane to the bill, which has to do with the appropriation, while the amendment is a limitation on the ability of the commissioners to say what shall be estimated. Consequently the Chair feels impelled to sustain the point of order.
Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I should like to see if we can arrive at some agreement as to the debate on the bill under the five-minute rule. I ask that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto be limited to 35 minutes, 10 minutes to be used by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], reserving 5 minutes for myself.
Mr. MANN of Illinois. I should like to inquire whether under that provision 30 minutes are to be devoted to debate in favor of the bill and only 5 minutes against it? It is a little strenuous, I think, to close debate so soon on so important a proposition.
Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman desire any further time?
Mr. MANN of Illinois. I want as much time as you take in favor of the bill.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the debate on this particular section and all amendments thereto be limited to 35 minutes.
Mr. MADDEN. I object.
Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have listened to the arguments presented, and as far as I have been able to gather, the main argument that has been presented in favor of the bill is that the tax rate in the District of Columbia is too low. Gentlemen have said in one breath that the tax rate in the District is too low, but they say, "Holy horror, we are not interfering with it." Well, if the tax rate in the District of Columbia is too low, why do not gentlemen who have made that argument propose to increase the tax rate? If the taxes which are raised are too low, it seems to me the orderly method would be for Congress to provide for increasing them, because they are raised under an act of Congress, and the jurisdiction of the subject matter is in the District of Columbia Committee of the House of Representatives.
Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will yield, but I shall want a little more time.
Mr. MAPES. What would be the sense of raising the tax rate and thereby increasing the revenues obtained through taxation, as long as Congress has adopted the policy of appropriating less than twice what has been raised?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I supposed somebody would ask that question. That has nothing to do with it. Under the system now in force under the limitation of estimates it is inevitable that there will always be a surplus left over, because we always cut the estimates, and you can not estimate more than the amount that is raised. If the taxes are too low here, they should be raised, and then if there is too much surplus it will be time to dispose of that proposition.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will, but I have not much time, and I hope that gentlemen will not fritter away my time.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not taken any time so far, and I will not take any of the gentleman's time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now, I think that it may be possible that there should be a difference in the rate from 50-50 to some other rate. I think that there ought to be a fixed relationship between the taxes raised by the people of the District of Columbia toward the expenditures here and the amount contributed out of the General Treasury.

I believe in Washington. I believe it is the duty of the people of the United States to maintain a well-ordered, well-governed, well-provided, beautiful city. [Applause.] It can not be done without paying something out of the Federal Treasury. Under the proposition now pending it will be urged every time an appropriation is proposed in the House of Representatives that all of this money is to be paid out of the Federal Treasury because the amount raised in the District will never be more than enough to pay the undisputed and uncontroverted items, and it will be constantly urged not to appropriate money to help the city along because it will have to be paid out of taxes raised by our people.

I think we ought to maintain a city in Washington, and not on a niggardly plan. I have no doubt whatever that the people of my district pay their proportion of taxes for the benefit of the Capital City of the Nation more freely than they pay any other tax of the Government, and my people pay a considerable proportion of the taxes, a great deal more than many of the States represented in this House. We do not feel niggardly toward Washington. In the old days, when Washington was an old, run-down city, dirty and unkempt, the people were not proud of it. They are proud of it to-day, and a large share of the expenditures in Washington is made because of the great number of your constituents and my constituents who come to this beautiful city to visit it, and no one comes here and goes home who is not prouder of his Government after he has been here than he was before he came. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 72, noes 1.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMS: Page 1, strike out lines 1 and 2.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The motion comes too late. The motion to strike out the enacting clause should be offered before a motion to amend had been concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken and the Chair announced himself in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 63.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts in so far as they conflict with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I tried to answer the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] when he asked why this $4,063,000 is still in the Treasury. It is in the Treasury because a similar amount of $4,063,000 has been taken out of the pockets of the whole people of this country and has made good that pro tanto part of the taxes of the District of Columbia. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. REED] stated that this bill should be defeated and the half-and-half plan continued, because he said the people of France are willing to be taxed to keep up the beauty and grandeur of Paris, that the people of Italy were willing to be taxed to keep up the great city of Rome, and, therefore, that the people of the United States ought to be willing to be taxed to keep up the city of Washington. The people of the United States are perfectly willing to be taxed to keep up the beauty of this great city, but they are not willing to be taxed to pay a great big per cent of the taxes of the people who live in this city of Washington. I want to give you a few facts that the people of the United States, the common people, have begun to realize, and one of them is that there is one city, the expense of which is not borne by the people of that city, and that that is the city of Washington. The expense of every other city is borne by levying a tax upon its inhabitants.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry I can not yield now, I have not the time.

Mr. BLANTON. Another thing that the people of the United States know is that while the people of Washington live here and enjoy these magnificent public buildings and the numerous other attractions they do not pay a just proportion of taxation to maintain any great city. They enjoy the beauty of the Congressional Library, they enjoy the splendor of our many public buildings of interest, they enjoy the beauty and enjoyments of the parks, and if you do not believe it, then go out to Rock Creek Park in the summer time, on any afternoon, and you will see thousands of people picnicking there. They enjoy swimming in the Tidal Basin in summer and skating upon it in winter. Go elsewhere in the city and you will see that they enjoy the miles and miles of splendid paved streets and driveways. They enjoy the splendid lighting system and the splendid water system, because we have the best water in the United States at a less rate than anywhere else in the whole United States; and they enjoy the good artificial gas system here, because they do get artificial gas here at as low a rate almost as you do almost anywhere else in the United States.

They enjoy every single benefit imaginable we provide here in the city of Washington. And what is it that they pay in taxes? One dollar on real estate. What do they pay on their intangible personal property? The people of the United States have begun to know, and they do know, that the people in Washington pay the little, pitiful sum of four-tenths of 1 per cent on their intangible personal property, such as stocks, bonds, notes, and so forth, and they do it because we permit them to do it. We sit here and take out of the pockets of the people of the United States the balance to make up their taxes year after year. I am not going to do it any longer. Are you?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FESS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7158, had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a division having been had, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MAPES. Is this on the final passage?

The SPEAKER. Yes; it is on the final passage. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and the Chair thinks that no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 209, nays 115, not voting 104, as follows:

On motion of Mr. MAPES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
January 12, 1920.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I wish to tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Pensions. Trusting this may be accepted at once, I am, Very respectfully, JAMES V. McCLINTIC.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HUTCHINSON, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ROWAN, for five days, on account of sickness of his son.

To Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan (at the request of Mr. SCOTT), for three days, on account of illness.

To Mr. SCOTT (at the request of Mr. MAPES), for two days, on account of illness.

PENSIONS.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 1726, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill, which the Clerk will report, adhere to the amendments of the House, and agree to a conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1726) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. SELLS, Mr. KIESS, and Mr. MEAD.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those Members of the House who desire to do so shall have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that all Members of the House who desire to do so shall have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, unless it is restricted to Members' own remarks and not to include newspaper articles and other dissertations, I shall object.

Mr. MAPES. I am perfectly willing to agree to that.

The SPEAKER. With the restriction suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 13, 1920.

Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, we bless Thee that through the passing years Thou dost remain the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. We thank Thee for all the privileges of life, and beseech of Thee to sanctify to us every high engagement of duty and enable each to understand the dignity of service. Regard Thy servants before Thee this morning with all the manifold demands upon them. Give wisdom to each, and such direction to the great interests of the country that Thy glory may be served and the good of the Nation and of the world may be enlarged and increased. We ask it for Thy name's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Post of this morning.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NO COMPROMISE ON AMERICANISM.

"The most persistent and skillful efforts have been made for months to convince Americans that the welfare of the United States and Europe was bound up in the treaty with the Germans. Those efforts have been successful in such measure that many American citizens of the most devoted patriotism are somewhat impressed by such talk as this: 'There, you see the nations of Europe going forward with the peace treaty and the league of nations, while the United States hangs back with Turkey and Russia. The United States helped to end the war, but it becomes a slacker in the work of making peace.'

"But such statements have no weight with those Americans who have studied the situation carefully and are capable of judging the duty of the United States as based upon its peculiar structure, its traditions, and its relations with Europe. The first and most important point to be borne in mind is that the treaty of Versailles was never authorized or approved by the people of the United States and is contrary to the policy of the United States in declaring and prosecuting the war, in this respect, that while war was declared separately and while the United States refrained from allying itself with the nations arrayed against Germany, the treaty attempts to commit the United States to all European settlements, exactly as if this country had been an ally and had committed itself to all the allied treaties and agreements.

"There was no authority, no excuse, and no necessity for making the United States a party to the settlements in Europe. The United States went to war for a specific purpose, and throughout the war it scrupulously refrained from entangling itself in the engagements of the Allies. President Wilson was so consistent and precise in distinguishing the relations between this Government and the Allies that he received unmerited criticism, including criticism from this newspaper. He was right and his critics were wrong. But as he was right in maintaining the distinction at that time, he was wrong in cutting away from it at Paris and attempting to make the United States a full-fledged ally of the Allies in all European political questions, notwithstanding the fact that the United States had never contracted or authorized such alliance.

"It is beyond the power of a President to contract an alliance between this Government and any other. If he attempts to make a treaty of alliance with Europe, which is the real nature of the treaty of Versailles, he invites the opposition of all Americans who cherish the traditions of their country as bodied forth in the Monroe doctrine and other American principles. If the people and the Senate approve of his proposal there is nothing more to be said; but until they do approve, it is as offensive as it is injudicious to assert that the United States is a slacker in the work of world peace.

"The assertion that it is the duty of the United States to ratify the treaty of Versailles is a gratuitous and impudent assumption which has no basis of justification in the history or present purpose of the people of this Nation. There is not a shred of evidence which shows that the United States is bound to reverse itself and enter into European quarrels. On the contrary, all that has been done by the United States Government since it declared its independence, including the war against Germany, has been contrary to the idea of participating in European politics.

"The treaty of Versailles concerns the United States very little and very remotely, except as to the proposed league of nations, which is a plan for permanently entangling the United States in European affairs. Aside from the league of nations covenant, the treaty can be executed without the United States as well or better than with it, and the nations concerned are proceeding to execute it. The only portions that affect the United States are certain provisions in section 10 (not article 10), which are not of sufficient importance to consume more than a week's time in a separate adjustment between the United States and Germany.

"The demand for ratification of the treaty is not because of the peace settlements with Germany. It is because the league of nations will be a failure unless the United States can be drawn into European politics. The statements are made that 'the world will break down' and that 'Europe will fall into chaos' and that 'the little freed nations will be destroyed' unless the United States joins the league of nations. There is not a word of truth in these statements. They are utterly without effect upon Americans who know wherein the true strength of America lies as a defender of liberty. It is not in the entanglement of its free will that the United States is strong, but in its independence and unfettered freedom of decision and action.

"There is still talk of 'compromise' on the question whether the United States shall remain master of its will or surrender it to a combination of foreign nations. There will be no compromise, because there can not be one. If Democratic Senators wish to get the treaty out of the way before it wrecks their party they can vote for reservations which will safeguard the independence, honor, and vital interests of the United States. If they do not wish to do that, the treaty will remain as it is—unratified and inapplicable to the United States."

EXCHANGE OF LABOR-SAVING DEVICES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, the exchanges made by the department and its several bureaus and offices of typewriters, adding machines, and other similar labor-saving devices, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 1726) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SELLS, Mr. KIESS, and Mr. MEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7158) to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 3175) authorizing local drainage districts to drain certain public lands in the State of Arkansas, counties of Mississippi and Poinsett, and subjecting said lands to taxation, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

JOSEPH A. PRAT.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3210) for the relief of Joseph A. Prat, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3706) authorizing the Secretary of War to make settlement with the lessees who erected buildings under a five-year lease on the zone at Camp Funston, Kans., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEWBERRY:

A bill (S. 3707) for the relief of Burdett O'Connor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McNARY (by request):

A bill (S. 3708) to punish violation of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution by American citizens in certain foreign countries; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:

A bill (S. 3709) for the relief of Capt. James G. Oakley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 3710) for the erection of a public building at Ocilla, Ga.;

A bill (S. 3711) to provide for the erection of a public building at the city of Buford, Ga.;

A bill (S. 3712) authorizing the erection of a post-office building at Commerce, Ga.; and

A bill (S. 3713) for the erection of a public building at Baxley, Ga.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. PHIPPS:

A bill (S. 3714) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Montrose, Colo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMNESTY TO PRISONERS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I propose the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. If it evokes any discussion, I will withdraw it.

The resolution (S. Res. 278) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to procure and furnish to the Senate information showing what, if anything, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium, or either of these Governments, have done, through legislation or executive proclamation or otherwise, looking to the granting of amnesty to military, political, or other prisoners since the signing of the armistice November 11, 1918.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I simply desire to get information from these Governments ascertaining what has been done with reference to granting amnesty; that is all.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVER ROUGE, MICH.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 279), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Whereas an appropriation has been heretofore made for the improvement of the River Rouge, Mich.; and
Whereas it now appears that this improvement is solely for the benefit of Henry Ford and the Ford Motor Co.; and
Whereas it appears that Henry Ford is attempting to use this appropriation contrary to the intention of Congress, and is using the name and sovereign rights of the United States of America and the powers of the Secretary of War for his own private benefit; and
Whereas there are certain reports, charges, and rumors tending to show the unlawful use of influence, which should be fully investigated and their truth or falsity ascertained: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Appropriations is hereby directed to inquire into and completely investigate the whole subject matter of the River Rouge improvement, including in particular the interests and influence of Henry Ford and his agents therein, and the use of the name of the United States of America and powers of the Secretary of War in condemnation proceedings therefor.

Resolved further, That pending this investigation and the report of the committee thereon the Secretary of War and the Attorney General of the United States be hereby requested and called upon to suspend and withhold all acts and proceedings, whether in court or elsewhere, directed toward the widening of the River Rouge or the appropriation of property therefor.

REMOVAL OF SOLDIER DEAD FROM FRANCE.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have no doubt that every Senator has received a communication from Mabel Fonda Gareissen, of New York City, bearing date the 1st of January, relating to the desire, very naturally entertained by relatives of those sacrificed during the recent war and whose bodies are reposing in French soil, to have them transported to America for permanent interment. That is a sentiment with which every man must deeply sympathize and in his official action as well as his personal conduct accede to as far as possible. If, consistently with the policy of the French Government and its ultimate consent, the bodies of those whose relatives desire their transportation across the ocean can be brought back, it should be done. But the situation seems to have developed a commercial enterprise known to the world as The Purple Cross, said by this lady to include the American Undertakers' Association, whose purpose, seemingly, is to commercialize the grief and affliction of parents and widows and children of those who have offered up their lives for their country across the sea.

I do not, Mr. President, indorse this recital or affirm that it is true, but it is in line with a number of circumstances that have developed since the close of the war, indicating that The Purple Cross is an organization designed to profit from this sentiment and secure appropriate legislation to enable them to effectuate their purpose. However that may be, the public is entitled to know what the views of this lady upon the subject may be, particularly as she assumes to give an interview that occurred between a representative of The Purple Cross and a lady speaking in behalf of what is called a "gold-star mother." If The Purple Cross is not the sort of organization that is here disclosed, then it is as much concerned in having the truth known as the country can be. If, on the other hand, it is true, then certainly it should be known and the facts considered in any legislation that we may undertake regarding this very important subject. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, for the insertion of this letter in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I merely wish to say that I have received a letter similar to that just presented by him. I believe it to be written in good faith, and I think the subject ought to be referred to some appropriate committee to inquire into it. If there is any truth in the statement, it is a scandal.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator's suggestion is a very pertinent one, and instead of merely asking that the letter be inserted in the RECORD——

Mr. LODGE. I think the letter had better be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS. I will supplement that request, and I ask that the letter be also referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with a request that the committee investigate the subject and make report to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. That is the committee to which it should be referred.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Senator from Colorado will remember that legislation in reference to this matter has been heretofore considered, and that even at the commencement of the war, before there was any use for such a service, mothers of soldiers came before the Military Committee in regard to the matter. It seemed then, with the slight information which we had upon the subject—and we were not impressed that it was then necessary to go further—that there was a sort of trust that proposed to take over the entire situation.

Mr. THOMAS. The Purple Cross?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; The Purple Cross.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I think its adjective description might well be amended.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 1, 1920—8 P. M.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am a gold-star mother and vitally interested in what is to be done with the bodies of our soldiers who lie in France.

Therefore I decided to discover for myself the truth of the persistent rumors that "The Purple Cross" (American Undertakers' Association) is back of the movement to bring to America the bodies of our heroes.

After some thought, I asked Miss Jane O'Ryan, sister of Gen. O'Ryan, if she would go with me to Campbell's, 1970 Broadway, New York City—the leading undertaker of America. She consented, and at about 5.15 p. m., January 1, we entered, Miss O'Ryan preceding me.

A man came forward to meet us. The following is the gist of the conversation that ensued:

"Miss O'RYAN. My friend is a gold-star mother, and I hope you can tell us something definite concerning the return from France of our dead soldiers.

"MAN (politely, but with hesitation). I don't know. I can't say, but I'll see. Won't you be seated?"

Very soon a tall, pale-faced, youngish man with a kindly expression entered. He wore horn-rimmed glasses and a well-made cutaway suit. He spoke with authority, as one of the proprietors or managers.

Miss O'Ryan repeated the statement she made upon entering.

After observing us closely, the man said:

"MAN. Yes; the dead in France are to be returned. We are now working in England.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. Are all the bodies to be brought over from England?

"MAN. Yes; and from Italy; from all the countries but France.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. But when will you begin in France?

"MAN. It's a little hard to say, for the French Government has not yet given permission.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. But the papers have announced that France had given permission.

"MAN. It's a mistake. We have definite news from Washington. France is, as you know, in a terrible condition since the war. Think of the ruined cities, and labor is hard to get. We were even willing to supply the labor, but without result. If we asked to have our dead returned now, England and the other countries would also.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. But when do you think you can get France's permission?

"MAN. Her own people have to be thought of first, naturally, and the transportation is very difficult. You can see France's viewpoint. Everything can't be done at once. But I think we can begin by spring.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. Spring is a long time. Are you doing everything in your power to hasten this?

"MAN. Every pressure is being brought to bear.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. What, for instance?

"MAN. We have powerful representatives at Washington.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. Do you mean your own representatives?

"MAN. Yes; and not only our own but Congressmen.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. That is interesting. Have you been trying to persuade Congressmen for any length of time?

"MAN. Indeed we have. We have been after them from the very beginning. Every pressure has been brought to bear.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. Are you sending embalmers over?

"MAN. No; the dead are in no condition for embalming. We will use strong disinfectants, place the bodies in hermetically sealed caskets, and they will not be reopened.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. Where will you get these caskets?

"MAN. We will take them to France from America.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. You mean you will ship all these caskets from America?

"MAN. Yes; we will use our own caskets, made in America.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. How much is it going to cost to do all this?

"MAN. It isn't going to cost you people anything. The Government is going to pay us."

A repetition of the question as to what the cost would be brought no response.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. After our dead arrive, can we be certain they are our own?"

The man hesitated and cleared his throat, "Well," he said (with very evident doubt as to the result), "we are going to be as careful as possible.

"Mrs. GAREISSEN. You are very honest.

"MAN. I mean to be honest."

As we left he gave us each a beautiful pink rose and bade me stop in from time to time and he would keep me posted.

We dropped the roses on the sidewalk when out of sight.

I send you this as a gold-star mother who protests against such activities as are described above.

Is it possible that the undertakers of this country would profiteer and use to that end the bodies of our American boys, one of whom is my own son?

I appeal to you for an answer.

Respectfully, MABEL FONDA GAREISSEN.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 7158. An act to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McLean	Simmons
Beckham	Harding	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Harris	Moses	Smith, Md.
Capper	Harrison	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Henderson	New	Smoot
Colt	Hitchcock	Newberry	Spencer
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Sterling
Curtis	Kendrick	Nugent	Sutherland
Dial	Kenyon	Overman	Thomas
Dillingham	King	Page	Trammell
Fernald	Kirby	Phelan	Underwood
France	Lenroot	Pittman	Wadsworth
Gay	Lodge	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Gerry	McCormick	Ransdell	Warren
Gore	McCumber	Robinson	Williams
Gronna	McKellar	Sheppard	Wolcott

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MOSES. I announce the absence from the city of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] on account of illness in his family. I make the announcement for the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. TRAMMELL. My colleague the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is detained by illness.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] are detained from the Senate by illness in their families.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] are absent on official business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, House bill 3184.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the pending question is upon the amendment reported by the committee. I will briefly explain what the amendment is about. I refer to section 15, page 26 of the bill, in line 17, commencing with the proviso. As we have amended the bill it reads:

That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over, or does not issue a license to a new licensee, or tender a new license to the original licensee, upon the terms and conditions aforesaid, which is accepted.

The words "which is accepted" are the words that are to be voted upon. That is an amendment recommended by the committee, and the question is on adopting the words "which is accepted."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have been too busily engaged in committee work to give much personal attention to the pending measure, which has occupied the attention of the Senate for several days past. I do not now intend to discuss the subject at any length, because I am sure I could add nothing to what has been said concerning it, and also because I am not sufficiently familiar with the details of the bill to entitle me to speak even with familiarity, to say nothing of speaking by authority.

I am in sympathy with the general proposition of the bill, of course, and have always contended that the water powers of the country should be utilized and developed to a state of the highest efficiency; but I have objected to the limitations that all bills which have referred to the subject since I have been a Member of the Senate have carried. I have also protested against the extension of the national authority over the running streams of the country, whether navigable or not. I am, therefore, opposed to the general purview of the bill, which, assuming that jurisdiction to exist, establishes a commission and endows it with jurisdiction over the whole subject. However, that seems to be the trend of public opinion, and I am satisfied that if any legislation at all is to be enacted upon the subject, only such legislation as recognizes that sentiment and embodies it within its details is possible. The bill, therefore, if I had had the responsibility of framing it, is essentially different from such a measure as I would have presented for the consideration of the Senate.

I desire to say a word, and a word only, regarding the amendment now pending. I have only heard a part of the discussion upon it; but I have read the report contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of what took place yesterday afternoon. I have come to the conclusion that the Senate committee amendment is a very necessary one, and one which is very properly designed to safeguard the rights of existing lessees under the bill. The ease with which men might negotiate for a new lease, accede to such terms as the Government might exact, and then, by their silence, fail to act affirmatively upon it and thereby suspend or defeat an existing lease is quite apparent. It may be that the words are superfluous—the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] thinks they are—but if they are superfluous, then it will certainly do no harm to incorporate them in the bill. Those who desire to expunge them not only do not regard them as superfluous but as extremely important.

Mr. President, I think that when the Government makes a lease of any of its property—and I am very sorry to see the Government of the United States become a universal landlord—it should treat its lessee with the same consideration that a private lessor is required by the laws of the country to treat a private lessee. It is perfectly proper, if we are going into the leasing business, that a specific limitation should be placed upon leases of this character; it is perfectly proper, if the Government desires to exercise the right of recapture, that the right should be clearly given it in whatever statute we may enact; it is perfectly proper that at the close of the lease the landlord should have the power to renew that lease upon such terms as a third person may be willing to offer, failing which, to grant a lease to the proposed lessee offering better terms therefor. That is a very simple process. If at the end of a lease the lessee does not desire to continue it, or is unwilling to continue it upon terms that are satisfactory to third persons, he can, of course, retire, and the enterprise will continue under the new arrangement; but to provide that some outsider may go in and negotiate a lease and then decline to accept it, and thereby terminate the existing lease, is not only unjust and inequitable, but to my mind it is morally and legally wrong.

It will not do to say, Mr. President, that such a result would not follow the excision of these words, because there are adventurers in every country, and they are prone to attack any business that is either profitable or speculative, and, unless the requirement of acceptance specifically appears, particularly after the discussion over the amendment which becomes a part of the public records, to my mind the bill would not only offer but invite the activities of men having no purpose in the world other than to profit by the unfortunate or inconvenient position or attitude of others.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. In just a moment. We have some illustrations arising under the operation of other laws that justify my apprehensions regarding this measure. I now yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think the Senator has quite the correct construction of the language as it now stands.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be.

Mr. LENROOT. The words "which is accepted" do not apply to a lease to a new licensee; they only apply to a tender of a lease to the original licensee.

Mr. THOMAS. If that is the case—and I will accept the Senator's construction of it—I think the words should be there, because acceptance of terms necessarily must be the expression of an acceptance of the contract, either by acquiescence or by express action.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. The matter as to whether the words apply simply to the original licensee or to the new licensee can be easily cleared up. The words "which is accepted" can be made to qualify both, if they do not now do so.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, if they do not apply to both, they should apply to both. My reading of the provision, together with the comments which were offered upon it, must be my excuse, if any is needed, for my construction of the clause. If, however, its effect is as stated by the Senator from Wisconsin, I shall say no more about the subject, but simply content myself by voting. It was my purpose to direct the attention of the Senate to certain instances, occurring under previous legislation, justifying the apprehension which I have expressed as to what might follow in the event the words were excluded from the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to state to the Senator just what the language is; and I am sure he will agree with me that the language as it now stands is, "if a new lease is not issued to a new licensee, or tendered to the original licensee." Now, I want to ask the question whether the use of those two words, "issued" and "tendered," does not clearly imply that in the case of the issue it must have been accepted, and in the case of a tender, of course, there would be no acceptance?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I think so; but it should be made to apply to both.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, for the benefit of some of the Senators who were not present during the discussion yesterday, I wish to occupy just a few moments upon this amendment; and I want to repeat that notwithstanding the specious arguments that were made here yesterday afternoon, if this amendment is adopted it becomes for all practical purposes a perpetual license to licensees under this bill, because, under the terms of the bill, it is made practically impossible—yes, I will say it is made impossible—for a new licensee ever to come in and take this property, because, in addition to paying the value of the property, in addition to paying every dollar that the licensee has invested in the property, he must pay severance damages for which he will get no return or no value whatever.

The Senator from Colorado said the same rule ought to apply in business of this character that a landlord and tenant should pursue in private business, and I agree with him, and that is all that I am asking for; but let us see if the Senator would apply to private business, if he were himself a landlord, the rule that is proposed to be adopted in this bill.

Would the Senator from Colorado, as a landlord, make a lease of a piece of real estate for 50 years, with a provision that at the end of 50 years, unless he purchased the improvements made upon that real estate by the lessee and in addition paid the lessee all damages that he might sustain by reason of finding a new location or loss to his business, in the event he was unwilling to do that he, the landlord, would not be permitted to make new terms for that lease? I want to ask the Senator from Colorado that question, and I shall be glad to have him reply.

Mr. THOMAS. Why, Mr. President, assuming the Senator's premise to be correct, the answer is obvious—I would not.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly it is obvious, and that is what I am complaining about in this bill. The Senator in his argument has assumed that this recapture clause will permit the Government or a new lessee to take over the project for what it is worth, or what it had cost the licensee, and that is not true at all. On the contrary, under the provisions of this bill, for the Government or a new lessee to take over the property he might be compelled to pay twice what the property was worth either to him or to the Government. He might be compelled to pay twice the amount of money that was invested in the property by the licensee. Now, if Senators representing the people are willing to apply the same business principles to the Government's business that they would to private business, I say to the Senator from Colorado that I do not see how he can favor this amendment.

Now, let us see as to whether or not I am right in the statement I make.

Later on in this bill it is provided that in addition to paying the net investment of the licensee the licensee shall also be entitled to severance damages. And what will "severance damages" mean? It will mean just this as the bill now stands: If a licensee is enabled to produce water power for $10 per horsepower and steam costs him $20 per horsepower, and by reason of the expiration of this license a new licensee comes in and takes it over, the licensee will have to build a steam plant to supply that amount of power, which will cost him twice as much as the water power. What will the severance damages be to him? It will be the difference between $10 per horsepower and $20 per horsepower. The new licensee or the Government, in order to take over this property, must then, in addition to paying every dollar that has been invested in the property, pay to the licensee $10 per horsepower for an indefinite time in the future. Why, Mr. President, no private citizen would ever think of making such an unconscionable contract; and yet on the floor of the Senate it is urged that the Government, by the acceptance of this amendment, make such an unconscionable contract as that!

So, Mr. President, the right to take over this property by the Government or the right to issue a new license is nothing but words, and there is no substance to it. It is no protection whatever to the public.

I want to say again that, strange as it may seem, the very Senators who urge that this is a right that is a protection to the Government are usually the same Senators who, the moment it was proposed, would shout "socialism" and declare that the Government must never undertake it.

No, Mr. President; if this amendment be adopted, for all practical purposes this is a perpetual license; and I challenge any Senator who is supporting this amendment to say that in his private business, himself acting as a landlord, he would ever think of making such a contract as he asks the Government to make in this amendment.

Is it a perpetual license? Let us see.

Under the language of the amendment, if at the end of the term the Government does not take it over, does not issue a new license—which, I have just shown, is practically impossible of contemplation—and does not tender a new license, under the terms as they then exist, to the original licensee which is accepted, then the licensee is entitled to a license from year to year for all time to come. There can not be any doubt about it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, why does the Senator say that the licensee is entitled to a license for all time to come, when the Government, under the very terms of the bill, may take it over at any time?

Mr. LENROOT. Just the same as the Senator would say that this is a license for 50 years. He says that, does he not? The Senator would say that this is a license for 50 years?

Mr. STERLING. Originally; yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Originally, it is a license for 50 years. Well, why does the Senator say that? At any time during the 50 years the Government may take it over, and it is expressly so provided in the bill. Why does the Senator, then, say that this is a license for 50 years?

Mr. STERLING. Because in the first instance it is a license for 50 years, with the condition that the Government may take it over at any time on two years' notice, as I understand the terms of the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; they may take it over at any time.

Mr. STERLING. Well, the Government may take it over at any time.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. Then I will modify my statement by saying that this is a perpetual license, conditioned upon the right of the Government to take it over and pay not only the value of the property but any severance damages in addition. In other words, the Government will have the same right to take over this property at the end of 50 years that it has at the end of 5 years or 10 years or 20 years. So when the Senator from South Dakota says that this is a license for 50 years then by the same reasoning it is a perpetual license, because if I am entitled to a license from year to year for a thousand years without my possession being possible of being disturbed except through the right of the landlord to take it over under the conditions named, it makes no difference whether you say from year to year or a thousand years in the first instance. So this is a perpetual license; and what is it proposed to do? Instead of the Government, the people, determining the terms of the new license, we, representing the public, supposed to be safeguarding the public interests here, deliberately propose to let the water-power corporations determine the terms of the new license. That is the whole issue here: Shall the people represented in the Congress of the United States at that time determine the conditions of a new license or shall we let the water-power utility dictate to the people of the country what kind of a license they shall have?

That is the situation. The Senate can make this kind of a record if it desires to do so; but I am satisfied that if this amendment should be adopted and agreed to in conference this bill never will become a law, and it ought not to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, does Mr. Pinchot have a veto of the bill if we pass it?

Mr. LENROOT. No; but President Wilson does have a veto of the bill, and I think I know President Wilson's attitude upon this very proposition, and if this amendment does go into the bill and is agreed to in conference, and this bill is sent to him, President Wilson never will have rendered a greater service in the conservation of our natural resources than in the veto of this bill.

It so happens that for many years I have been very closely connected with this legislation, and I want to say to the Senator from Minnesota that I am not speaking from hearsay or speaking in the air. If Senators here really desire water-power legislation at this session of Congress they will not adopt this amendment, and all the arguments that may be made that this is a year-to-year license will not deceive the public, because the public will well understand that what is being protected here is not the public interest but is private interest—not intentionally; I do not charge the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, of course, with consciously or knowingly favoring private interest—but that is the effect of the position that he takes, and it is clearly contrary, as I see it, to the public interest.

What will be the result if this amendment is not adopted? At the end of 50 years, instead of the licensee sitting still and saying, "I will not accept a new license unless it is more liberal than the one issued under this law," instead of his being able to continue forever under the terms of this law made 50 years before, the people of the United States, represented in the Congress of the United States, will have the opportunity to say what the terms of that new license shall be, and the licensee will then be under the constraint to accept such terms as the Government may tender him at that time.

Does the Senator from Minnesota take the position that the Government is going to be unfair to these licensees, that the Government can not be trusted, that the people of this country can not be trusted, and that private interests must be protected against injustice upon the part of the Congress of the United States? That is the position that the Senator from Minnesota takes. It is a position that I absolutely refuse to take upon this or any other measure.

Mr. President, if there is to be any advantage between private interests and public interests the advantage should lie with the public interests. I want to repeat that it is only a few months ago when the water-power interests represented here, some of them in the galleries this morning, said they were perfectly willing to take this legislation without the amendment which the Senator from Minnesota now asks for. Why, then, should we give to private interests more and greater privileges than they themselves asked for in March? That will be a question which will have to be answered some day to the people of the United States if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Intensely interested as I am in seeing this legislation enacted, I am very deeply concerned in the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin in his remarks just now that the adoption of this amendment would kill this bill. I repeat that I am going to vote against the amendment; I am going to vote with the Senator from Wisconsin to eliminate it; but I am sure he attaches too much importance to it, and I want to ask him a question. He repeats that with the amendment the lease becomes perpetual, except for the right of the Government to take it at any time when it sees fit, as provided in the recapture clause. Let me ask the Senator whether in exactly the same sense the lease would not be perpetual if this provision were not put in; that is to say, the 50 years would expire and the lessee or licensee would remain in possession of the property, operating it, as I suggested yesterday, and continuing to operate it in perpetuity until some other provision was made for either the Government to take it over or to turn it over to some other lincensee? Would not that be the situation?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not. It would be operated, I have no sort of doubt——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But how?

Mr. LENROOT. It would be operated under a lease which the Government would then tender.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But we will suppose that the clause we are considering assumes that the lease or license tendered by the Government is not accepted by the licensee. That is the condition which puts it into operation. He will not accept it. If this clause is not in he can not get a lease from year to year. What would happen? He would still remain in possession of the property, and he would continue to operate it, being obliged to pay to the Government, so long as he occupied it, the reasonable value of the occupation of the Government property. If no one else came on to take it, and the Government did not take it over, he, of course, would hold it in perpetuity, just exactly as the other fellow would hold it in perpetuity in that same sense if he had a lease from year to year. The only thing that would interrupt that, of course, would be that the Government might say to him, "We are going to blow up this dam; it is an obstruction in the navigable stream," or "it is upon the public land and we will go out and destroy this dam."

That is the only chance there is. But, of course, it is unthinkable that the Government would do anything of that kind, and constantly we must dismiss that. So, as suggested by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] yesterday, it is simply the difference between a lessee from year to year and lessee by sufferance. In one case he is a tenant by sufferance and in the other he is a tenant from year to year, and in either case, as the Senator from Wisconsin has suggested, the thing may go on perpetually, unless the Government takes it over or some one else takes it over. So, while I am with the Senator from Wisconsin, I am apprehensive that some one will attach importance to the matter sufficient to defeat this legislation, and I should like to relieve the public mind of that idea if I could do so.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, the mere existence of a project perpetually is not anything I am objecting to. It is the continuation of a project under a law that has been passed 50 years before, and under a license that has been issued 50 years before, the terms of which at the end of 50 years may be very unfair to the public, which under this amendment would go on perpetually, under this unfair license or lease.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator in that, and that is why I am going to vote against the amendment. The terms prescribed 50 years from now may not be reasonable terms, and I want reasonable terms at that time. That is all there is to it. It is a question as to whether it shall go on under the terms prescribed from year to year or go on upon terms that are held, either by mutual agreement or by determination of the court, to be reasonable. .

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, that is the whole contention, whether there shall be a perpetual license, although in form running from year to year, under the terms of the original lease; or whether it shall be subject to new terms. That is the whole controversy.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The point I am making is that if the one is a lease in perpetuity, the other is equally so.

Mr. LENROOT. No; it is not. Of course, there are two things that might occur. In the first place, even assuming that the Government did not take it, and they were a tenant by sufferance, and the Government offers them reasonable terms, I think a court would compel them in the operation of that utility to accept and go on and pay the Government whatever was reasonable. I think the Senator will agree with me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I fully agree with that. The court would compel them to operate it, and then there would be determined what charge is a fair and reasonable charge to pay to the Government.

Mr. LENROOT. Then in addition, Mr. President, the very power of the Government to say to the licensee, "You shall remove your works," the Senator knows in this public business, as he knows in private business, would be most influential upon the licensee in deciding the question whether he would accept such terms as the Government may then offer. There can not be any possible doubt about that. So it all resolves itself back to the question whether the licensee, under the amendment that is proposed, shall have a perpetual right to go under the terms of the original lease or whether, if the amendment is not adopted, the Government at the end of 50 years will have the right to make new terms that will be fair both to the licensee and to the public.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gore	McKellar	Robinson
Bankhead	Gronna	Moses	Sheppard
Beckham	Hale	Myers	Simmons
Borah	Harding	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Harris	New	Smoot
Capper	Harrison	Newberry	Spencer
Chamberlain	Henderson	Norris	Sterling
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Sutherland
Culberson	Kellogg	Overman	Trammell
Dial	Kendrick	Page	Underwood
Dillingham	Kenyon	Phelan	Wadsworth
Fernald	King	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
France	Kirby	Pittman	Warren
Gay	Lenroot	Pomerene	Watson
Gerry	McCumber	Ransdell	Wolcott

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on account of illness. I will let that announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment, on which the yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I do not see him in the Chamber, but on this question I am assured that I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and vote "nay."

Mr. KING (when the name of Mr. KEYES was called). The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is detained on account of serious illness in his family. I have a general pair with that Senator. Not knowing how he would vote on the pending amendment, I withhold my vote.

Mr. NEWBERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. In his absence I do not feel at liberty to vote. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and let my vote stand.

Mr. BALL. I have a pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is confined at his home by illness. On this question he would vote the same way I do, and I shall therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and let my vote stand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] on official business.

I desire also to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] are detained from the Senate by illness in their families.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—40.

Ball	Lodge	Page	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	McCumber	Phelan	Smoot
Brandegee	McLean	Phipps	Spencer
Chamberlain	McNary	Pittman	Sterling
Dillingham	Moses	Poindexter	Underwood
Fernald	Myers	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Gerry	Nelson	Sherman	Warren
Hale	New	Simmons	Watson
Harding	Newberry	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Kellogg	Overman	Smith, Md.	Wolcott

NAYS—23.

Beckham	Gay	Kendrick	Pomerene
Borah	Gore	Kenyon	Sutherland
Capper	Gronna	Lenroot	Trammell
Cummins	Harris	McKellar	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Harrison	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
France	Henderson	Nugent

NOT VOTING—32.

Ashurst	Fletcher	King	Robinson
Calder	Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Sheppard
Colt	Hitchcock	Knox	Shields
Culberson	Johnson, Calif.	La Follette	Smith, Ariz.

Elkins	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Thomas
Fall	Keyes	Reed	Townsend

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The next committee amendment passed over was, on page 27, after line 22, to strike out section 17 in the following words:

SEC. 17. That the charges arising from licenses hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. Fifty per cent of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of national forests is hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture in the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within such national forests. Fifty per cent of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of national parks is hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the improvement and development of such parks. Fifty per cent of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of public lands, and of national monuments, and power site or other reserves outside of national forests, shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act. All proceeds from any Indian reservation shall be placed to the credit of the Indians of such reservation. Fifty per cent of the charges arising from all other licenses hereunder is hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the maintenance and operation of dams and other navigation structures owned by the United States, or in the construction, maintenance, or operation of head water or other improvements of navigable waters of the United States.

And to insert in lieu the following:

SEC. 17. That the charges arising from licenses hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and shall be reserved as a special fund therein. Such part of said fund as Congress may from time to time direct shall be appropriated toward paying the costs of administration of this act and of conducting the investigations authorized by this act. The remainder of said fund, if any, shall be expendable under the direction of the commission in the maintenance and operation of dams or other navigation structures owned by the United States or in the construction, maintenance, and operation of headwater or other improvements of streams upon which the commission is authorized to issue licenses under this act: Provided, That all proceeds from any Indian reservation shall be placed to the credit of the Indians of such reservation.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am not going very seriously to object to the proposed amendment, but I do want to call the attention of western Senators from public-land States to what the amendment does. First, the bill does provide that there shall be some remuneration from those who use the water power, but within the public-land States they can not use any of it if the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have presented an amendment to cover the point suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, and I ask for its consideration at this time. There would be several amendments necessary in order to accomplish what I have in mind.

On page 29, in line 9, after the word "any," insert in the first place, "in so far as the same may be derived from dams in navigable streams," so that the same shall read:

The remainder of said fund, if any, in so far as the same may be derived from dams in navigable streams, shall be expendable under the direction of the commission in the maintenance and operation of dams or other navigation structures owned by the United States or in the construction, maintenance, and operation of headwater or other improvements of streams upon which the commission is authorized to issue licenses under this act.

In other words, Mr. President, I think nobody will insist that the revenues derived from the dams upon the public lands should be utilized in the construction of works in navigable streams. Whatever revenue is derived from the dams in navigable streams may very properly be put to the construction of other works in navigable streams.

I ask that the amendment which I have offered be followed up by the following amendment: After the word "act," in line 15, on the same page, I move to insert the following: "and in so far as the same may be derived from licenses to occupy portions of the public lands under this act the one-half thereof shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, and the other one-half paid to the States in which are located the lands occupied, in the proportion to each that the amount derived from lands within its bounds shall bear to the whole amount derived from such occupancy of all such lands."

In other words, the point is that there shall be taken out of this fund, in the first place, whatever is necessary for administrative purposes. Then whatever is left, of so much of it as is derived from dams in navigable streams, shall be devoted to the construction of works of improvement upon such streams; so much of it as is left derived from dams upon public lands shall be divided into two equal parts, one half going into the reclamation fund and the other half to the States in which the improvements are located. This principle was adopted in what is known as the oil-leasing bill with reference to the distribution of the proceeds from the lands coming under that measure.

It will be remembered that under the act of 1902 the entire proceeds derived from the sales of public lands are placed in the reclamation fund, and there become a revolving fund for the construction of great works of irrigation in the arid section; in other words, all the proceeds of the public lands are pledged and devoted to that purpose. On the public lands, all of the lands of value for water-power purposes have been reserved and they no longer contribute anything to the reclamation fund. Under the provisions of this bill they never will be sold; but, instead of selling them, it is expected that an annual rental or royalty will be derived from such lands, and by every just rule and reason the proceeds derived from the leases should go into the reclamation fund, just the same as the proceeds would go if the lands had been sold in the way in which it was expected they would be and in the manner in which the public lands generally have been disposed of.

There is, however, another element to be considered, and that is the element of the water itself. For many years a contest was waged in both branches of Congress to a very large extent upon the question as to whether the water in the streams flowing through the public lands belonged to the Government of the United States or belonged to the States in which the rivers flow. Objection was made for many years against any provision in the disposition of these lands which contemplated the payment of a royalty to the Federal Government, it being insisted that the water, which was really the source of the revenue, belonged to the States, respectively, and not to the Government. However, upon further consideration it was conceded upon all hands that whether that were true or untrue the Government, as a matter of fact, does own the lands upon which the dams are to be constructed, and the Government, owning the lands upon which the dams are to be constructed, may impose just exactly what terms and conditions it may deem fit for the occupancy of those lands.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Montana that, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to accept the amendment and have it go to conference.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then I have no purpose of speaking further.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator from Montana resumes his seat I should like to ask him a question. To bring it to a concrete case, where the Government owns large areas of land on both sides of a stream, but at the particular place where the dam is to be constructed the lands have been acquired by private parties—and that is true in many cases in the West; the available dam sites have been appropriated by individuals and they own the lands—under the Senator's amendment what would become of the proceeds in that case?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In that case, if the land upon which the dam was built belonged to private parties, no permission for occupancy of the lands upon which the dam was constructed would be needed at all; one would not be obliged to go to the commission to get any permission whatever, assuming, of course, that it was a nonnavigable stream.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is speaking of a nonnavigable stream?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Assuming that it was a nonnavigable stream and the land upon which the dam was to be constructed belonged to private parties.

However, there is another consideration; the reservoir may conceivably cover public lands, and in that case it would become necessary to come to the Government in order to get permission to cover, by the reservoir, the public lands.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will pardon me further, I have followed the Senator and I agree with the statement which he makes, but under the definition of navigable streams as found in the bill it seems to me quite apparent that practically every stream which finds its way sooner or later into the ocean would be denominated a navigable stream. We know that now the Government of the United States under appropriations made in river and harbor bills has selected little rivulets and brooks and streams that do not contain one second-foot of water and denominated them, if not navigable streams directly, parts of navigable streams and have assumed jurisdiction over them because they were necessary to navigation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the remarks of the Senator from Utah are now directed to the propriety of the definition of navigable streams found on pages 4 and 5 of the bill, and do not in any wise affect the feature of the bill to which we are now referring.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, they affect the feature of the bill to which we are now referring only in this, that in the instance which I gave a few moments ago, where the land might be owned by private individuals and the stream be really insignificant, yet under this bill and under the rulings now of the Federal authorities such a stream would be denominated a navigable stream and jurisdiction would be assumed of it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I must say to the Senator from Utah that I have not been able to satisfy myself that the definition of navigable streams given in the bill corresponds to the definition as it has been laid down by the court; in fact, my own disposition about the matter is to believe that the definition of navigable streams as given in this bill does not go quite so far as the definition actually given by the court; but, of course, it is a rather difficult matter frequently to decide whether a stream is or is not navigable according to the definition in this act or under the definition of the court, and we must repose in some body eventually the question of determining whether a particular stream at a particular place is or is not navigable. I do not know where we could repose it any more safely than in the heads of three great departments—the Department of War necessarily looking after the navigable streams; the Department of the Interior necessarily looking after the rights of the public in the public lands; and the Secretary of Agriculture, of course, interested so far as there are forest reserves. I do not know where we could repose better than in such a commission the question of determining for the purpose of legislation what is a navigable stream and what is not a navigable stream. I thank the Senator from Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the four amendments in the printed copy presented by the Senator from Montana are offered?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There are two of those amendments that relate to another feature of the bill, although connected with the feature now under discussion. I think it would be advisable to act upon the two amendments already read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Upon the first two. The Senator from Minnesota has accepted them?

Mr. NELSON. I accept the amendments to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the committee.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The next two amendments relate to the same question.

Mr. NELSON. Is not the question now upon agreeing to the amendment as amended?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands there are two more amendments to be offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The amendment proposed by the committee continues:

Provided, That all proceeds from any Indian reservation—

And so forth.

I think that should read "proceeds from licenses authorizing the occupancy of any part of any Indian reservation."

Mr. NELSON. I could not catch what the Senator said. What is the amendment he now proposes?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is very largely a matter of language. After the word "Provided," in line 15, the language is, "That all proceeds from any Indian reservation." I ask that, after the word "from," there be inserted the words "licenses authorizing the occupancy of any part of," so that the amendment will read:

Provided, That all proceeds from licenses authorizing the occupancy of any part of any Indian reservation.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Suppose there was a license granted affecting in part public lands and in part lands outside of public ownership.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am about to tender an amendment to cover that situation.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That would come in at the end of the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I now offer an amendment on page 29, line 17, after the word "reservation," to insert "and when the license authorizes the occupancy of both public lands and lands within an Indian reservation the charges shall be allotted as between the Indian owners and the Treasury of the United States as the said commission shall direct."

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Minnesota having the bill in charge——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, there is one little committee amendment which has been passed over, I think; it is the last committee amendment but one.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will excuse me, I am directing attention to section 17. I do not understand that that has been agreed to as yet.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not as yet been agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I understand the amendment as amended has been agreed to.

Mr. KING. I do not so understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been agreed to as yet.

Mr. KING. I am directing the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to a portion of this section, which reads as follows:

The remainder of said fund, if any—

Then follows the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, the exact language of which I do not have before me—shall be expendable under the direction of the commission in the maintenance and operation of dams or other navigation structures owned by the United States or in the construction, maintenance, and operation of headwater or other improvements of streams upon which the commission is authorized to issue licenses under this act.

The point upon which I desire the opinion of the Senator from Minnesota is this: Is it the intention of the committee, without restriction, without any limitation whatever, to commit to this commission the right to determine where these expenses shall be made, the streams upon which they shall be made, the headwaters of streams where the money shall be expended, and to keep out of the hands of Congress the determination of such questions? It seems to me too great a power to lodge in a commission, without any restriction or limitation, to say to them that they may spend money wherever they please upon any stream. With respect to the improvement of the streams of the United States, authorization has to be made by Congress of improvement upon a particular stream.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks Congress, as constituted, would spend the money any more wisely or any more fairly than a commission? It is still one-man power, as a rule; namely, the chairman of a committee.

Mr. KING. Well, Mr. President, I do not know that the suggestion which I have made calls for the institution of a comparison as to the relative wisdom of the two bodies.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It necessarily does, because the Senator says that it ought to be transferred to Congress because we could not trust the commission; so the question as to whether we could trust Congress any more is absolutely relevant.

Mr. KING. I will say, if the Senator wants an answer, that, in my opinion, I would not trust the commission. I would rather trust Congress, notwithstanding the sins of omission and commission upon the part of Congress. I would prefer that the Congress of the United States determine the streams upon which these improvements shall be made.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me say to the Senator from Utah that he perhaps has in mind the fact that we turned over the entire proceeds of all the sales of the public lands for the reclamation of the arid lands, and we reposed in the Secretary of the Interior the entire discretion as to where he should spend that money. He, and he alone, determines whether a project in the State of Utah or in the State of Montana is sufficiently meritorious to warrant the expenditure of money on it. The Senator will remember that when the bill was originally enacted the Secretary of the Interior was restricted in this respect, that he was obliged to spend in each State an amount substantially equal to the amount which was derived from the sale of lands in that State, although he was permitted to exercise unrestrained discretion within the particular State as to where he would spend the money; but even that restriction was taken off subsequently by an act of Congress, and now he is at liberty to spend in the State of Utah money the greater part of which comes from the State of Montana; but we have not had any cause to complain about it. I have discovered, by a comparison of the figures, that it works out pretty much the same as it did before; that on the whole each State is getting about the same proportion of the entire fund that it contributes to the entire fund. Now, I say that that has been our experience with it. There we have reposed the whole thing in the judgment and discretion of one man, the Secretary of the Interior. Here we have reposed it in the three.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I make no criticism of the legislation to which the Senator from Montana has alluded. I am familiar with that legislation, and I express no opinion as to whether the legislation is wise or unwise, or whether it has worked satisfactorily or otherwise. I rose simply for the purpose of inquiring whether the committee had considered the matter to which I called the Senator's attention, and whether it was his understanding that this bill committed without limitation to the commission created by the bill the authority to spend the money wherever it pleased.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the committee considered it, and they conceived that this commission ought to have the right to determine where this money should go; but the Senator will remember that under the amendment of the Senator from Montana, just adopted, it is limited to navigable streams. As I understood the amendment of the Senator from Montana, it applies only to the funds that are derived from water power on navigable streams. Am I not correct?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NELSON. On all other streams the distribution is made according to his second amendment.

Mr. KING. Oh, I appreciate that fact; but I wanted to know whether the committee was willing, and whether that was their intention, to commit without any limitation whatever the power of expending these proceeds to that commission.

Mr. NELSON. That was the intention of the committee, I think.

Mr. KING. I do not approve of the plan.

Mr. NELSON. I do not recall that there was any particular discussion about the particular question to which the Senator refers; but the Senator can readily see that it would be wiser to commit to the commission the determination as to where that surplus should go in the case of navigable streams than to any other body. I can not conceive of any other body or tribunal that it could well be accorded to or that could be given that power.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to this fact: When this amendment was adopted by the committee it was upon the theory that the amendment as to compensation by the committee would be adopted, whereby there would be only a nominal charge; there would be no substantial funds expected to be derived from issuing these licenses in the case of navigable streams. Up to the present stage of the bill, however, the Senate has refused to adopt that amendment without making very substantial charges; and that being so, I think the Senator will concede that while we might well repose in the commission the discretion to expend those proceeds of very small amounts, and where it contemplated only a nominal charge, discretion ought not to be reposed if there may be substantial funds derived from these licenses. Therefore I would suggest to the Senator that this be amended, in line 10, after the word "commission," by inserting the words "as may be authorized by Congress."

Mr. NELSON. I can not agree to that amendment. I do not think it is appropriate under the circumstances. The question will come up on the amendment to section 10, which was defeated in Committee of the Whole by a majority of one. That question has been reserved for a separate vote in the Senate, and we will know better when that is finally disposed of what final disposition to make of this amendment. For the present, I think it ought to be agreed to as amended by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator this question, then: If the Senate shall concur in the action of the Committee of the Whole at that time, he would have no objection to——

Mr. NELSON. Why, the Senator can reserve this amendment. I suggest that he reserve it.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

Mr. NELSON. Let the Senator reserve the right to a separate vote on this amendment in the Senate, and then we will see what we do with the other one. That is the best way.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I should like to make a further suggestion with respect to this matter before it is disposed of.

I have in mind the importance of the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin, in view of the attitude taken by the Senate. The fund may be a larger fund than was originally contemplated, but I want to add that I do not believe anybody ought to have any apprehension about lodging this power, without restraint, in this commission, no matter how large the fund may be. I want to say, further, that three and one-half years ago the policy which had been observed and pursued and followed down to that time with respect to the disposition of the reclamation fund was departed from. Down to that time the fund was apportioned among the various projects just exactly as the Secretary of the Interior directed. In 1916, however, the House of Representatives introduced an amendment, which eventually became law, under which no money could be expended from the fund except in pursuance of appropriations made by Congress—that is, specific appropriations made by Congress—the idea being that Congress wanted to retain, in a way, the control over this fund.

I opposed that amendment, and I opposed it with all the power I could command, and I opposed it upon the ground that then we would have the reprehensible logrolling that characterizes the disposition of the funds for the improvement of rivers and harbors; that I could get an appropriation for reclamation projects for Montana if I would stand in with the Senator from Utah to get an appropriation for reclamation projects in his State; and of course we would have to stand in with the Senator from Nevada, who would want appropriations for projects in his State; and so on down the line, and eventually we would take in a lot of projects that none of us could approve in any way whatever.

Now, fortunately, the system has not worked out that way, and it has not worked out that way because, apparently, the House Appropriations Committee has been quite willing to make these appropriations strictly in accordance with the recommendations and allotments that are made by the Reclamation Service and approved by the Department of the Interior; so that the logrolling process is not followed just simply because the change has been made nominally while really the old system remains in effect, the approval of the Congress down to the present time being simply formal.

Now, suppose that we do get a very considerable fund here. There is not a question in the world that every Member of Congress who can make any kind of an excuse for getting a part of that fund to improve the navigation of some alleged navigable stream in his State will be importuned by his constituents to go after that fund and get some of it. That, I think, will be a vicious system; so that I am quite willing, no matter how big that fund is, to allow it to be utilized for the improvement of rivers and harbors as this commission desires. But, Mr. President, I do not understand that the amendment proposed by the committee goes even to that extent.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Senator from Wisconsin has not yet offered the amendment. He has simply suggested it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I merely want to add that my understanding of this amendment, as it reads, is that it confines the utilization of this fund to the construction of work on dams that are authorized by Congress; but this would merely be supplemental in its character.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I reserve this amendment for a separate vote in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is one more amendment that was passed over, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 26, line 23, the committee proposes to strike out the words "as aforesaid."

Mr. NELSON. I ask that that amendment be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NELSON. That disposes of the committee amendments.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment that I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me first to offer an amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly. I understood, however, that the committee amendments were all disposed of.

Mr. NELSON. They are all disposed of, but I have a small amendment that I should like to submit.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 33, commencing on line 14, it is proposed to strike out all the language down to the word "can," in line 17, and to insert in lieu thereof "That when any licensee," so that, if amended, it will read:

That when any licensee can not acquire by contract or pledges—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not object to this amendment going to conference, as I have the assurance of the Senator from Minnesota that it will be carefully considered there. I think there is some merit in the amendment, provided that in all cases to which it applies the licensee is a public utility, subject to the fullest regulation upon the part of the State.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator that I have no doubt the conferees will consider the amendment, and if it needs an amendment in the direction the Senator has suggested, such an amendment will undoubtedly be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I submit the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The READING CLERK. After line 21, page 14, insert:

The commission is hereby authorized and directed within one year after the approval of this act to construct or cause to be constructed on the Potomac River the power plant outlined in project No. 3, House Document No. 1400, Sixty-second Congress, third session, including each and every detail and plan outlined and specified in said document or any of the exhibits, plans, and specifications attached thereto. And for such purpose the commission is hereby authorized to construct said project under its direct supervision or to enter into contracts for materials and labor for the construction of the same or any part of the same as in its judgment may be the most practical and economical, not exceeding a limitation of cost for all the items connected with and mentioned in said project of the sum of $25,000,000: Provided, That the commission may from time to time modify or change any of the plans or specifications in said document as it may deem advisable or practicable for the better carrying out of the purposes of this legislation; and if in the judgment of the commission the object to be attained by said project can be better or more economically brought about it is hereby authorized to change the location of said dam or to build two or more dams instead of the one specified in said document.

And the commission is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise a suitable site for said dam or dams and for all other real estate necessary to the carrying out in detail of said project, including all real estate that will be overflowed by the formation of the lake mentioned in said project. And whenever in any case the commission is unable to acquire by purchase at a fair value any land, property, or property rights necessary to be acquired in the carrying out of said project it is hereby authorized and directed, in the name of the United States, to begin and prosecute to final adjudication all necessary suits for the acquisition of such property in any court having jurisdiction.

In the construction of said project a separate account shall be kept of the expenditure necessary on account of the increased water supply for the city of Washington and the expenditure on account of the power development.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care at this time, Mr. President, to go into a lengthy discussion of this proposition. I have discussed it on numerous occasions in the Senate, and it has been debated by other Senators at some length during the last four or five years at various times. I have tried in drawing the amendment to give this commission authority that, as far as the details of the construction of this project are concerned, is practically unlimited.

The amendment first directs the commission to construct a power plant at Great Falls in accordance with a certain document. That is House Document No. 1400, of the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska be kind enough to yield to allow the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to offer an amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield for that purpose and temporarily withhold this amendment. I understand the Senator from Alabama can not remain in the Chamber.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank the Senator from Nebraska. I offer the following amendment and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 5, in section 2, strike out the words "that the commission shall appoint an executive secretary, who shall receive a salary of $6,000 a year, and prescribe his duties," and amend so as to make the clause read:

That the commission shall request the Chief of Engineers to detail an officer from the United States Engineer Corps to serve the commission as executive secretary and engineer officer, his duties to be prescribed by the commission.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I regard this executive officer as the most important officer connected with the board. I think it is highly important that the person selected should have expert knowledge of the work in hand, and it occurred to me that in order that the board might have an efficient secretary or executive officer, he ought to come from the Corps of Engineers, the members of which have expert knowledge of matters of this sort.

Of course, Mr. President, I have no idea, and I do not suppose anyone has, as to the person who would be selected by the board as its executive officer and what his qualifications are to be, whether he is to have any knowledge of the work that he is to have charge of. I think every Senator in the Chamber is ready to admit that the members of the board, the secretaries composing this board and having control of this work, can not give it their personal attention and will not give it their personal attention. Therefore, it occurs to me that it is highly important that the board having charge of this immense amount of work, having charge of this greatest of all developments, perhaps, in the United States, if we are to have the development that we hope will follow the enactment of this law, should have an executive officer or a secretary who is in a measure, and in a large measure, familiar with the duties of engineering, planning, and so forth, especially hydroelectric engineering. For that reason I offer the amendment. It does not add anything in the way of expenses.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to ask the Senator a question. I just read his amendment. The object, I understand, is to have appointed some member of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; that is what I hope will be done.

Mr. HARRISON. I am in entire sympathy with what the Senator is trying to do, and I think without question the secretary should come from the Army Engineers. But it seems to me that if we take a man out of the Army Engineers, we should offer some inducement to him. The salary provided is $6,000. I have drafted an amendment which I will read, so that the Senator can understand what I am trying to accomplish. I was going to suggest the following:

Amend the section in line 6, page 2, by striking out the words "shall receive a salary of $6,000 a year," and inserting the following: "who shall be appointed from the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, and who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier general on the active list."

The pay of a brigadier general on the active list, as I understand it, is $6,000 a year. It seems to me that we ought to give him that rank and ought to keep him on the active list, because to appoint some person with the rank of colonel, for instance, would be to give him too low a rank, in my opinion, and holding this office he ought to get the pay and allowances of a brigadier general. I was in hopes that the Senator would reform his amendment so that we could carry out that idea.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I discussed this amendment with the Senator from Mississippi, and I have no objection in the world to his suggestion. I think perhaps it is wise for an amendment of that sort to be added to my amendment, if it can be adopted. What I want, and I think what the country wants, is the most efficient service that we can possibly get from this board that is to control and direct the operations of dam building, water development, and all that sort of business. The officer ought to be an able man, he ought to be an experienced man, and his surroundings and conditions ought to be such that he will know that he is not going to be changed with every administration that comes in, which might be possible. This is to be a temporary board. It can only serve during the present administration, or in case another Democratic administration should come in it might be reappointed.

This executive officer is the very backbone of the whole institution, and if it is going to be a success, as we hope it will, this man who is going to have control, direction, and supervison of this great work ought to be eminently qualified for the work. I take it nothing more disastrous could happen to this great piece of legislation than to permit it to pass the Senate in such a way that the board might go out and select some favorite, some eighteen hundred or twenty-five hundred dollar clerk, and give him the salary of $6,000. Of course, I do not mean to say that the board would not make the best effort they could to get a competent man, but there will be in a measure some guaranty if this most important of all the officers connected with the board shall come from the Army Engineers, a man who is educated in the work, a man whose whole life has been devoted to it, and a man whose future life is to be devoted to it.

I think the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi is a very good one, that he shall come from the Army, with the rank of brigadier general, which rank, I am sure, receives the rate of pay inserted in the bill. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to one question raised by his amendment. Incidentally let me say that I am in entire sympathy with both the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Alabama in desiring to have an Engineer officer as executive secretary; but, as I understand it, the Senator's amendment will make the language read as follows:

That the commission shall request the Chief of Engineers to detail an officer from the United States Engineer Corps to serve the commission as executive secretary and engineer officer.

I doubt our power to accomplish our purpose in that way. I think we must remember that the President is Commander in Chief of the Army. You can not delegate to the Chief of Engineers, on the recommendation of an outside commission, the power to designate an Army officer to work outside of the Army. I think it would be better, more in conformity with our form of Government, as it were, if you say that the President may designate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that. I do not care who designates him. All I want is a designation that is going to meet the requirements of the board and the service.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that he accept the amendment substituting the President of the United States for the Chief Engineer.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It seems that at least three Senators have had this very matter in mind. I, too, have an amendment on this very point. I do not intend to press it as against the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi. I will just read it:

Provided, That the President may, on request of the commission, designate and assign a commissioned officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army to act as such executive secretary, without compensation other than the pay and allowances of his grade.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Suppose he should be a colonel or a major?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, majors ought not to be paid more than majors, and colonels ought not to be paid more than colonels. I do not object, however, to the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi that he shall be a brigadier general.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That ought to get a better man.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But he should be taken from among the brigadier generals.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all right.

Mr. WADSWORTH. However, that is not the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi. As I understand the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, it is that an Engineer officer may be chosen and assigned to this work and then that he shall get the pay of a brigadier general.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the idea. That pay is provided in the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me warn Senators that we are apt to have some trouble from that practice. If you commence the practice of detailing junior officers out of the Army to civilian employment with the rank and pay of grades higher than those they occupy in the Army, you are courting trouble, jealousy, and friction.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from New York knows so much more about the Army business than I do and has made such a study of it that I am willing to accept his version of it. I am willing to accept as an amendment whatever he may suggest that will meet the requirements and give us an engineer officer to do this important work. So far as his rank and pay and all that sort of thing are concerned, I am not extremely particular about it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would it be possible, may I ask the Senator from Minnesota, for the conference committee to look after a little point like that?

Mr. NELSON. I would suggest to the Senator from New York, the Senator from Alabama, and the Senator from Mississippi that the conference committee will consider the matter, and if the provision is adopted we will make arrangements for suitable pay.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from New York yield for a moment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. In answer to what the Senator from New York said, I do not think that the commission would possibly appoint some major or anyone to this place who did not have the rank of brigadier general. The reason why I made it the rank of brigadier general is that they might think that there was some colonel thoroughly qualified for the work and give him that rank.

I think the ambition of every man in the Engineer Corps of the Army generally is to become chief of the Army Board of Engineers. That is the high place to which they aspire. Take one of these men out of the active list of the Engineer Corps and give him this civilian employment and he becomes stationary; he is stopped. He will not get his promotion, like he would if he remained in the service. He is almost stopped from ever being Chief of the Army Board of Engineers.

I have in mind two men up there. I do not know from what States they come. One of them is Col. Taylor, one of the greatest experts on waterways in the country, I think. He has been before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House for a long time and before the Senate Committee on Commerce. I have in mind also an officer by the name of Col. Keller, thoroughly familiar with waterways. Both those officers have made it their particular business. If you should select one of those men, it occurs to me they should be given the rank of brigadier general, because the salary is $6,000 a year as brigadier general.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am in entire sympathy with the suggestion that the men should be well paid and should have the greatest possible ability, but you must remember when you legislate in this way to give an officer of the Army a rank that you are amending the military laws which govern promotion. You can not step in with measures introduced upon the floor of the Senate creating commissions and boards and bureaus of civilian character and provide by those laws that an Army officer shall be assigned to duty with them at a higher rank than he now has in the Army without tearing the Army all to pieces. The laws governing the promotions in the Army are the military laws, and we have always got to be consistent about it.

That is why I say if you want a brigadier general in this place you ought to take a brigadier general and not a colonel and promote him in this way to the rank of brigadier general. He would have to be confirmed by the Senate. There is another thing you must take care of. It will disturb the flow of promotion to make these special places and have them occupied by Army officers at advanced grades in rank. In my own amendment I make no mention of rank at all, but leave it to the President and the commission and the Chief of Engineers to select a man who is capable to fill the place and to have him draw the pay of his rank. Then we do not disturb the military situation at all.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator that they have in the Engineer Department a division that has charge of rivers and harbors, and my experience has been that they have never had a man of higher rank than colonel at the head of the division relating to rivers and harbors improvement. That is a division of the Engineer Department, and never that I have known of have they had anyone there of a rank higher than that of colonel. The committee on conference can readily adjust the question of salary without interfering with the question of rank.

Mr. HARRISON. If you should fix it at the rank of colonel and they should appoint a colonel to the place, then if he were trained in that particular line of work he would remain in that position and would not be promoted, because there would be no authority of law for him to be appointed to this place other than as a colonel.

Mr. NELSON. He is simply detailed. Of course, he would not lose his place and his rank. He would have the same chance for promotion.

Mr. HARRISON. I think we are all trying to arrive at the same proposition. I am sure it will be fixed in conference.

Mr. NELSON. I heartily approve of the amendment for two reasons. In the first place, we get rid of the salary of $6,000 a year for a clerk. In the next place, we get from the Engineer Department an expert man who is in that branch of the service and who is familiar with water power and familiar with river and harbor improvement. In the third place, we will not get a secretary who will come and go with the administrations and as to whom there will be a change every time there is a change in the administration. We will get an officer detailed from the Engineer Corps of the Army who is an expert, and he will remain there under his detail without regard to a change of administration, if any occurs. Furthermore, I want to say that we are now entering upon what I hope will be a long era of peace, and there will be an ample supply of Engineer officers who will be available for the work.

So, Mr. President, I think the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is in the right direction and in the right spirit and ought to be adopted with the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], substituting the word "President" for the words "Secretary of War."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York has been accepted. So the question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment——

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me? The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] had offered an amendment and had the floor when I requested him to withdraw his amendment temporarily that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] might offer the amendment which has just been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Nebraska yielded to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, for the benefit of those who just came in, I will say that the pending amendment is an amendment which provides for the development of power at Great Falls by the Government of the United States, and also provides for an increase in the water supply for the city of Washington.

The document referred to in the amendment which I was about to explain when I was interrupted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is House Document No. 1400, Sixty-second Congress. The particular project referred to is the one known as No. 3 in that document. There are three propositions outlined in detail in that document. I think it was the Sixtieth Congress which appropriated the sum of $20,000 and instructed its use by the War Department for the purpose of developing power at Great Falls, near the District of Columbia, and also an increase in the water supply for the city of Washington.

The engineer detailed by the Secretary of War to make that investigation employed out of civil life some of the best engineers in the United States, one of them I think as good as anywhere in the world. They spent $20,000 in making that survey and that investigation. They went into detail as completely and as fully, I believe, as ever was done in an investigation of any proposed improvement or development of water power. The House document referred to in the amendment is the result of their labors, so that it cost the Government $20,000 to prepare that document.

In my judgment, while there have been a great many investigations of Great Falls, this is the most comprehensive and the fullest that has ever been made either by public officials or under public authority or by private individuals or corporations.

I desire to have the commission given authority to deviate from that if upon subsequent investigation they consider it wise to do so. So that while I have used the project as outlined in that document as a basis for the amendment, Senators will observe on reading the amendment that it practically gives the commission a free hand. They can under their own supervision do the work, or they can let it out by contract, or they can do part of it and let it partly out by contract. Instead of building the one dam provided for in the document they can build two or more dams. Engineers do not all agree as to whether other plans would not be better.

This particular document—speaking from memory now—provided for the construction of a dam 115 feet high at or near the western line of the District of Columbia where it crosses the Potomac River. It would dam the water up to the base of Great Falls so that the falls proper would not be interfered with. The power could be greatly increased by utilizing the falls themselves, and the amendment will give the authority to do that if it is desired. By increasing the height of the dam—the Government already owns above the falls—and conducting the water around the falls and dropping it into the river below the falls a great deal of power, with comparatively a much less expenditure of money, could be developed. The amendment would give authority to do that.

From the base of the falls, without interfering with the falls, to the place where the dam proposed in this particular document would be constructed would give a fall of about 115 feet. It would not interfere with navigation, because there is no navigation above the point where the dam would be constructed.

The particular document referred to provided for the development of the power, for the payment of all damages of all kinds, including the relocation of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal now in operation between Georgetown and Cumberland, and including the payment of damages of all kinds occasioned by the overflowing of property. It also contemplated the construction of three plants in the city of Washington where the power would be distributed. In round numbers, as a result of that investigation as set forth in the document, it was shown that the project would cost $15,000,000, about one-third of which would be properly chargeable to the increase of the water supply of the District of Columbia. I have changed the amount from $15,000,000 to $25,000,000, because everybody realizes that the first figures were made before the war, and, if the present prices of material and labor shall be maintained, it will, of course, require a great deal more to construct it now.

In the amendment as printed and as it is on the desks of Senators it is provided that the work shall be done within one year. As I have offered the amendment, I have stricken that out, so as to leave those charged with the duty free to take a longer time if they deem best, but make it compulsory upon them either to construct or to cause to be constructed this project or some other project for the purpose of developing this water power.

Mr. President, every Senator is familiar with the power that has been going to waste through all these years at Great Falls. It is one of the great power possibilities of the country. Enough power can be developed if the falls proper should be utilized and also the fall between there and the boundary of the District of Columbia, to turn every wheel and to light every house in the District of Columbia. The power derived could be very greatly increased by the construction of dams farther up the stream to hold back its flood waters.

I believe that most Senators have at some time in their experience given attention to this particular proposition. I have talked with practically every Member of this body within the last four or five years in regard to the development of power at Great Falls. We now have a shortage of water in the city of Washington which has existed since the beginning of the war. At the time the appropriation was made for the particular investigation of which I have spoken, back in the Sixtieth or Sixty-first Congress, or perhaps the Fifty-ninth Congress, there was a shortage of water.

That, however, was before meters had been installed in the city of Washington. The officials lost interest in the proposition because about the time the report was made meters were installed and their installation saved a vast amount of water. We never had any difficulty so far as shortage of water is concerned until the recent war, when the population increased and necessarily a great deal more water was consumed by the citizens of Washington. Then the situation became very serious in the capital city, as it will continue to be, unless something is done to increase the water supply here. That is acknowledged and conceded, and it will not be possible to obviate it again by the installation of meters, for they have now been installed all over the District. It is a problem that must be met by working the two together as the amendment proposes to do by economies, both in the development of power and in the supply of water.

I do not want to take up the time of the Senate in discussing something which I believe is perfectly obvious. Every Senator is familiar more or less with the subject. In substance the amendment gives to this commission instructions to proceed to develop the power at Great Falls.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to say that the Senator from Nebraska has on many occasions pressed this proposition for consideration, and I think that everything he has said about it and urged with reference to its necessity exists. To my mind it is one of the most desirable and one of the most important and one of the most essential water-power developments, and ought to be included in the pending bill, if possible.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have given some study and attention to the water-power development at Great Falls and for several years I have been of the opinion that the power there ought to be developed. As the Senator from Nebraska has stated, there is a scarcity of water in the city of Washington. I noticed recently that there was a scheme on foot to secure water from the Patuxent River. That would involve a great deal of expense, the Patuxent River being quite a small stream, much smaller than is the Potomac.

One objection that can be urged against the amendment, and the most serious objection, is that it is not really germane and proper in this bill; that it ought not to be inserted in the bill. However, in view of the importance of the subject, I am willing to have the amendment adopted and go to conference, where the conferees may consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have a number of amendments which I should like the opportunity of proposing now and having disposed of, especially as I am compelled to attend an important committee meeting in a few moments. I present the most important one first and ask the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 21, after line 9, to insert the following:

(j) That the licensee hereunder shall not directly or indirectly discriminate or permit discrimination in the apportionment, allotment, transmission, distribution, sale, or lease of power or electrical energy or current in favor of any municipality as against any other or others in respect of service, rates, or the quantity of power or electrical energy or current transmitted or supplied to it or them; but the licensee shall fairly and equitably apportion, allot, transmit, and supply power, electrical energy and current among and to such municipalities as can be efficiently served and supplied directly or indirectly by the licensee in proportion, so far as practicable, to their respective populations, industrial or commercial importance and prospects, needs, and requirements, so as best to subserve the public interests. This condition shall be binding upon every person, association, and corporation receiving power or electrical energy or current from the licensee and engaged in developing, transmitting, distributing, selling, or leasing power, electrical energy, or current to any municipality or to its inhabitants, and shall inure to the benefit of such inhabitants. Every contract, agreement, or understanding between the licensee and such person, association, or corporation shall be expressly subject to and limited by the provisions of this subsection. That this condition may be enforced and regulated by the commissions or other agencies mentioned in, and in the manner and to the extent prescribed by, section 19 of this act.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I do not think I have any objection to the amendment, and I am quite willing that it shall go into the bill and be considered in conference.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question. I have never read the amendment, and heard it read a moment ago for the first time. It seems to me that the same rule provided in the amendment as to municipalities might apply to individuals. Will the Senator from New York state what objection there can be to making it apply to individuals as well as to municipalities?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To tell the truth, I had not thought of that. Let me say to the Senator in just a few words that the reason for the introduction by me of the amendment is that the city of Buffalo finds itself in a very peculiar position in relation to the power developed at Niagara Falls. The amendment is intended to apply not only to a municipality like Buffalo but to all municipalities and to protect them from discrimination in the distribution of power or electrical energy as contrasted with the treatment some neighboring city may receive and to make the agreement to refrain from discrimination a part of the conditions of the license.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I wish to say that I indorse that purpose very heartily; I think it is very proper, and the amendment should go in the bill by all means, but it seems to me that the amendment ought to be enlarged to apply the same principle to individuals, so that there can not be any discrimination of any kind.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not say that I should object to that; it suggests quite a debatable question, and I am not competent to debate it right here and now. The Senator from Minnesota says that the question can be discussed in conference whether the amendment should be broadened to that extent.

Mr. NELSON. I think the amendment will be carefully considered in conference, and I will suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that he see the conferees or communicate with them on the subject and we will give it consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. The thought occurred to me while hearing the amendment read. I hope the chairman of the committee will give the suggestion I have made consideration, and, with his assurance that it will be considered, I do not desire to detain the Senate regarding it.

Mr. NELSON. I am heartily in favor of the amendment and sympathize with its spirit, and also with the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 8, line 20, after the word "along," it is proposed to insert the word "from."

Mr. WADSWORTH. The object of that is obvious. Under the language on line 20, reading "the * * * utilization of power across, along, or in any navigable stream," it would seem that the word "from" should be added, so that in the event of diversion of water to a distance from the stream, which could not be called "along" the stream, the case would be covered.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment stated again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be restated.

The READING CLERK. On page 8, line 20, after the word "along," it is proposed to insert the word "from," so that, if amended, it will read:

Utilization of power across, along, from, or in any of the navigable waters of the United States.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is it the idea of the Senator to take care of or to remove any doubt that boundary streams should be included in this legislation? Is that the object of it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of this amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; this particular amendment would be applicable to all kinds of streams. If the Senator asks me if I am in favor of boundary streams remaining in this legislation, I say yes; but this legislation does not affect boundary streams in particular.

Mr. HARRISON. May we have the amendment stated again, please?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will restate the amendment.

The amendment was restated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I offer another amendment, which may be considered somewhat as a companion amendment of the last one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, lines 10 and 11, it is proposed to strike out the words "and other navigation structures" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "or other structures affecting navigation."

Mr. LENROOT rose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator desire an explanation of the amendment?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; I should like to know its purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The purpose of the amendment is very obvious. The provision now reads:

That no license affecting the navigable capacity of any navigable waters of the United States shall be issued until the plans of the dam and other navigation structures have been approved.

Some of these water powers are going to be developed by structures that are not navigation structures, but which may affect navigation; so I propose to change that language so that it shall read in the way indicated.

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection.

Mr. NELSON. There is no objection to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just one or two more, Mr. President. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 35, line 5, after the word "as," it is proposed to insert the words "confirming or otherwise affecting any claim, or as."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this amendment is rather important, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Minnesota and the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The bill now provides—

That the provisions of this act shall not be construed as affecting any permit or valid existing right of way heretofore granted.

I should like to see that same principle applied to claims that may now be pending, and that is the purpose of my amendment. I do not want this bill in any way to confirm a claim to a right.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think it would do that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It might do that just as well as it might affect a permit. You provide against its being construed as affecting a permit. Why not provide against its being construed as affecting a claim?

Mr. LENROOT. Because we have a repealing provision here that does repeal the law under which these rights are held.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have a difficult situation in mind. It is one that the Senator from Wisconsin has often spoken about—the Niagara Falls situation. It so happens that the rights that those companies received there years and years ago, as I understand and recollect, came as grants from the State of New York; and those companies—rightly or wrongly, I do not know which—have claimed, or have indicated that they might claim, certain continuing rights to the diversion of water and the generation of power. It might be said that that claim has been a constantly pending one, but it never has been settled. The Niagara situation always has been uncertain as to its future for that reason. Now, I do not want this bill in any way to confirm that claim.

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think incidentally that may have some bearing on some of the objections that the Senator from Wisconsin has in regard to boundary waters being included in this bill.

I have one more amendment, and then I shall not bother the Senate again on this question. I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 14, line 23, after the word "granted," it is proposed to insert "by sale, assignment, consolidation, merger, or otherwise."

Mr. NELSON. I ask to have that amendment stated again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will restate the amendment.

The amendment was restated.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 15, line 5, after the word "deed," it is proposed to insert "necessarily or in good faith executed."

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection.

Mr. NELSON. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 17, line 15, after the word "the," it is proposed to insert "actual legitimate."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I notice that that language is used in a prior section of the bill, and I thought it might well go in there.

Mr. LENROOT. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of section 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

And provided further, That severance damages allowed hereunder shall not exceed the aggregate actual expenses or loss for maintenance, depreciation, and interest upon such part of the property not taken as is made temporarily idle by the severance therefrom of the property taken; such aggregate expenses to be computed for a period reasonably necessary for providing a substitute source of power, and in no case to exceed the value of the works taken.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this relates to the portion of the bill that will require the Government, if it takes over the property, or a new licensee, if a new license is issued, to pay, in addition to every dollar that has been invested by the original licensee, damages to the original licensee arising through the severance of the property. I have stated here a number of times during the last two days that it might easily be that the severance damages allowed under the bill as it now stands would be greater than the entire value of the property taken over, and I have given illustrations of how that would readily occur, and I want to repeat one of them, because, in my judgment, to leave the language as it is in the bill would make it absolutely impossible either for the Government ever to take over the property or for a new licensee ever to be willing to accept a license at the end of the 50-year term.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am willing to accept the amendment and have it considered in conference.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very glad. I shall not discuss it further, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KIRBY. I ask to have the amendment stated again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will restate the amendment.

The amendment was restated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, line 9, after the word "authority," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to the waters of the St. Lawrence or Niagara Rivers.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota accept that amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say that the Senator from Utah can not accept it.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I hope to convince the Senator from Utah that it should be accepted.

Mr. President, I have offered this amendment on the strength of what the Senator from Wisconsin stated on the floor of the Senate a few days ago, namely, that the development at Niagara Falls is included in this legislation. I had no idea, and it came to me as quite a surprise, that the development at Niagara Falls was included in this legislation until the statement was made by the Senator from Wisconsin. Evidently the inclusion of the Niagara Falls power development is a matter of inadvertence, or on the theory that the Niagara Falls development is the same as every other development in the United States. I say it may be an inadvertence, because the committee may have ascertained without any consideration of that subject that it was included after the bill was drafted and presented to the Senate.

I hope that is true, because I dislike very much to believe that the committee could come to the conclusion that the development at Niagara Falls is the same as the development at other places throughout the United States. Now, if the Senator from Minnesota will hear me for a few minutes—of course, however, if the Senator wants to retire——

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is more familiar with Niagara Falls than I am.

Mr. HARRISON. But I wanted to state to the Senator from Minnesota something that has happened touching the consideration of legislation affecting Niagara Falls that perhaps has not come to the attention of the Senator from Minnesota. I have such a high regard for the Senator's ability on water-power legislation that I am quite sure he would very much dislike to have the Senate of the United States pass any legislation upon a subject so important as Niagara Falls without giving it any consideration; and the fact of the matter is that the committee has not given any consideration to Niagara Falls, or else one or two members of the Commerce Committee of the Senate are mistaken about it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a minute?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I want to state to the Senator in all frankness that I never have given any especial consideration to Niagara Falls, nor has the matter been especially before the Committee on Commerce, of which I am a member. The bills giving extensions of time for Niagara Falls have always come from another committee—if I remember rightly, from the Committee on Foreign Relations. Am I not right?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is right.

Mr. NELSON. That committee has considered that question, and our committee—the Committee on Commerce—has given no special consideration to it.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to have had that confession from the Senator from Minnesota, and if the Senator will permit me, and will listen, he will agree with me that for that reason it should be excluded from this bill, because there are certain conditions that attach to water-power development at Niagara Falls which attach to no other development at any other place in the United States. It is quite true that in the House of Representatives, I think two years ago—in the last Congress, at least—when various committees of the House had different bills before them, the Public Lands Committee, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the Committee on Agriculture, they could not get anywhere. So they thought it was the part of wisdom—and I think it was suggested by the President of the United States—that a special committee should be named in the House of Representatives, and that all bills touching water-power development on the public lands, in the navigable streams, or in the public domains should be thrown together, given to this committee, and that they should report a bill out of that special committee. So, acting upon that suggestion, and with agreement upon the part of the ranking members of the various committees which had water-power legislation before them, the Rules Committee of the House brought out a special rule creating a special committee, and referred all bills on this subject to that particular committee, and there was evolved from that committee the bill which is now before the Senate for consideration, with some few changes.

When the subject of a rule to create a special committee was discussed before the Rules Committee of the House, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and myself happened to be members of that committee. They were cognizant of the fact that for over 10 years legislation touching Niagara Falls had been considered before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House and before the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House. Twice, I believe, a bill was passed through the House, known as the Cline bill, but which died in the Senate, making permanent legislation dealing with the subject in a comprehensive manner.

So the Rules Committee, without objection upon the part of any of the members of any of the committees that had bills touching water-power development before them, agreed that in considering this bill the subject of water-power development at Niagara Falls should be eliminated. So the rule was passed creating the committee, with a special injunction on that committee that water-power development at Niagara Falls should be considered exclusively by the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House. It was never contested in the House of Representatives. The bill came before the Senate with that understanding and with that agreement. Yet, although the acting chairman of the Commerce Committee of the Senate, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], has stated, no longer than 10 minutes ago, that in the consideration of this bill Niagara Falls water-power development was not considered, that he knew nothing about it, that another committee of the Senate had always had it before it, and there are Members of the Senate who object to excluding the Niagara Falls proposition from this bill. On what theory they can contend for that, I know not, unless it is on the theory that the conditions at Niagara Falls respecting water-power development are the same as at other places throughout the United States. They are not the same, and I shall show to the Senate that the conditions are vastly different.

This bill was designed to develop water power from the navigable streams and on the public domain in the United States. It was to encourage water-power development. The Niagara Falls water-power development is based on a treaty that we have with Great Britain. It is already developed, and has been developed for 40 years or more. The treaty was adopted in 1909, I think. It was adopted primarily between the two countries to preserve the scenic beauty of Niagara, something that has drawn tourists from all parts of the world, because Canada did not desire and the United States did not desire that the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls should ever be affected and disturbed. While the treaty primarily was to preserve the scenic beauty of the Falls, in order to do it, it said just how much water power might be developed, just how much water might be taken from the Falls on the American side and the Canadian side. They said in that treaty that to look after the matter there, to see that the scenic beauty of the Falls should not be affected, that no more water should be taken than was provided for in the treaty; that the rights enunciated in the treaty should be respected, a joint high commission, so to speak, should be appointed, three commissioners from the United States and three from Canada, who might look after the matter, and that questions of dispute might be referred to the commission. Yet by this legislation, without any consideration of it, you would put this question in the hands of the commissioners provided for in this legislation. You would, in other words, invalidate and destroy the treaty that we entered into.

I say that the conditions obtaining at Niagara Falls do not exist at other places, because other places have not treaty rights involved; though they have the scenic beauty question involved. May I call the Senate's attention to the fact—and I am sure that the Senator from New York will agree with me—that for a long time there have been two power companies developing power at Niagara Falls on the American side. Those power companies have made large sums of money. I will not say that they have grown fabulously rich out of their investment, but they have prospered, and prospered immensely. They have practically a monopoly up there, and I understand now they have gotten together and have practically one proposition there.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what effect would this legislation have on the contracts or licenses that those two companies have with the Government now?

Mr. HARRISON. Those are questions that should be considered by a committee studying this question separately and alone. I can not understand why we should legislate on a question of such importance, embracing so many various questions, without any consideration being given to it, as the chairman of the committee has stated. I say that these power companies have made a great deal of money. They are in a position up there to charge less for power than any other project that might be established in the United States. It is because they have the fall there; they have so much more power there than is found anywhere else. They can utilize the power so much cheaper at Niagara than anywhere else. There is no expense to go to there in utilizing it except in building the power houses, and so forth.

Yet, while the hearings show that they can develop water power for $6 a horsepower at Niagara Falls, they have charged in some instances, as I understand, $100 a horsepower for it. Over in the Province of Ontario, just across the Niagara River, there is a contract between the persons who develop water power on the Canadian side of Niagara Falls and the Province of Ontario to furnish power for $9.40 a horsepower. Yet on this side those power companies are charging at least $29 a horsepower, and I have heard it stated, and read it in the hearings, that in some instances they have charged $100 a horsepower.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator say that $29 a horsepower is the lowest rate?

Mr. HARRISON. No.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator said at least $29 a horsepower.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I will not say that $29 is the lowest rate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what the Senator said.

Mr. HARRISON. But in the hearings before the committee it appeared that the general charge was around $29 per horsepower. It may have been somewhat smaller; but I do not care if it was $15 a horsepower. Nobody ever stated that they ever sold any power there for $15 a horsepower. The facts are that Ontario is getting it for $9.40 a horsepower.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I happen to know of power being sold there at $8.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator to whom the power is being sold at that rate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To a manufacturing concern.

Mr. HARRISON. To what manufacturing concern? I will state the reason why I ask. The statements made before the committee show that the power companies developing power at Niagara would organize a power company, of course, and then another company was organized, made up of practically the same people, called a distributing concern, and another one called a transmitting concern, a wheel in a wheel, each making its individual profit; and some of the concerns up there are owned by the same people who are interested in those power companies. It may be that some of those favorites are getting the power at a rate much lower than that charged other people.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall reply in my own time.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not catch the Senator's remark.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it is wise for me not to interrupt the Senator. I shall reply in my own time.

Mr. HARRISON. I will be glad for the Senator to interrupt me. I know he has the welfare of the people at Buffalo at heart, and I was very much in hopes that he would help me exclude this from the bill, so that we could really get some legislation beneficial to the consumers in that particular section. You can not get it if you leave it to the provisions of this bill, because the charges that they can make to the consumers of the country have got to be proportioned, as I understand, according to the people who take out licenses under the provisions of the bill; and if that is true then the people at Niagara Falls who are making enormous profits, and have been operating for so long a time, and can procure the power so cheaply and develop it so cheaply, are to continue to make enormous profits out of the proposition.

There are so many different things attached to Niagara Falls, the conditions there are so different, that it does seem to me it should be excluded from the terms of the bill. I can not for the life of me see how the Senate can do otherwise than eliminate it, in view of the statement of the acting chairman of the committee, who said that they had not considered Niagara Falls in connection with this legislation, in view of the fact that the resolution that was passed in the House of Representatives creating the committee from which this legislation came expressly stated "except, however, bills and resolutions of which the Committee on Foreign Affairs has jurisdiction under the general rules of the House."

Mr. DIAL. Is the price named by the Senator as the price at which power was being sold the price per annum?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; per annum. There is another phase of this proposition in the bill that was passed by the House of Representatives affecting Niagara Falls, known as the Cline bill, that made it necessary that those power plants, or at least one of the power plants, if it was antiquated, should be remodeled and put upon a modern basis. I might say that under the treaty we are permitted to take 20,000 cubic feet of water per second from Niagara Falls; Canada is entitled to take 36,000 cubic feet per second from Niagara Falls. There are two power plants there, one of them built in a modern way, one of them developing power to the highest efficiency. The other, while it should perhaps, stating it roughly, develop 200,000 horsepower from the water it takes from Niagara Falls, is developing possibly 150,000 horsepower. That is because it is antiquated. The machinery is not modern. We made it necessary in the House bill that the power plant had to reform itself and be placed upon a modern basis, so that the highest efficiency might be reached. This bill does not do that. You can not get it under the terms of this bill.

Under the House bill, known as the Cline bill, we limited the lease term to 25 years. Here you give them a longer lease than that. Of course, the power companies at Niagara Falls want to be included in this general legislation. Of course they do not care anything about having the subject considered. But I submit to the Senate that this is too big a question, it is too important a question, to pass aside and include in a bill like this without any consideration of the subject at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have listened to some of the statements of the Senator from Mississippi with a good deal of interest and some surprise. The Senator fails to tell the Senate that the House of Representatives of this Congress voted, so I am informed, by a vote of approximately 6 to 1 to instruct its water-power committee to include the consideration of Niagara Falls along with the navigable streams. He has laid immense stress upon the action of the House of two years ago, but he has not told the Senate what the House did in this Congress. So I think if we are to be guided by what the House has done in the past or what it desires at the present time, we are justified to that extent in following the last expression of the House regarding the consideration of Niagara Falls and boundary streams generally well within our proper authority.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from New York state now that the committee in the House of Representatives in considering this bill considered Niagara Falls in connection with it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I say that the House of Representatives by an enormous vote authorized them to do it by a specific resolution. I do not know whether they did it or not. But the Senator from Mississippi has given the impression that the House of Representatives is opposed to the consideration of Niagara Falls in connection with the general water-power legislation, and that, I venture to say, is inaccurate.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator to cite the RECORD to the effect that the House did that, because I think the Senator is in error about it. I have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD here on the other proposition, which I can read to the Senator if he likes. The bill that came up this time is practically the same bill that died in conference during the last Congress, and it was considered in the House and excluded Niagara Falls.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I regret that I can not put my finger on the page of the RECORD. I am informed by a Member of the House who took part in that contest himself in this Congress that that is the fact.

The Senator has said that the bill will repeal the treaty. I venture to ask Senators to give serious consideration to that assertion. The description given by the Senator of the treaty which exists between the United States and Canada is accurate. Under that treaty no more than 20,000 cubic feet of water per second may be diverted from the Niagara River above the Falls on the American side, and no more than 36,000 cubic feet of water may be diverted from the River above the Falls on the Canadian side.

There is nothing whatsoever in the bill that goes toward the repeal of that treaty; there is not a word said about it, and you can not repeal a treaty except by a specific repeal. There is no such proposal or suggestion here. Should this bill be enacted into law, the treaty would still be in effect. The limitation as to the diversion of water on either side of the river would remain just the same; the International Joint Commission would remain absolutely undisturbed in its powers and in its functions, and it would not be disbanded, as the Senator has suggested. The treaty would not be abrogated. It would be in full force and effect all the time. As the Senator has asked me to point out something in the RECORD which occurred some time ago, I should like to have him or any other Senator point out any provision of the bill that repeals the treaty.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator tell us whether or not the effect of the passage of the bill would be to give a franchise of 50 years to the two companies that now have it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to know what effect it will have on those two companies.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will come to that in just a moment. I simply want to clear up one or two things in my inadequate way in the beginning.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. There is in this legislation, assuming that Niagara Falls is included, nothing that limits the diversion of water on this side of Niagara Falls?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Above the Falls?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Nothing in this legislation, but the treaty——

Mr. HARRISON. The treaty expressly states that we can not take over 20,000 cubic feet per second.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true; and the treaty will remain in effect just the same.

Mr. HARRISON. Every piece of legislation affecting Niagara Falls up to date, including the legislation in the House, the Cline bill, and the Burton Act, that passed the Senate and the House, limited the amount of diversion from the river above Niagara Falls on this side. Is that true?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; by reenacting the provisions of the treaty.

Mr. HARRISON. It expressly stated just what amount of water could be diverted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think so. I do not remember.

Mr. HARRISON. Under the express law if the commission should act they would have to act under the treaty, which limited the quantity to 20,000 cubic feet.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under the bill they would. That is why I say the treaty is not repealed. The Senator has admitted out of his own mouth that the treaty is not repealed. The commission could not authorize the diversion of more than 20,000 cubic feet of water because the treaty does not permit it. Mr. President, I will have to admit I am not as thoroughly familiar with the situation at Niagara Falls as some of my colleagues have asserted on the floor of the Senate. My only interest in the proposition is that the great water powers at the Falls and below them and on the St. Lawrence River shall be treated just as any other great power is treated, subject, of course, to the limitations of the treaty. Let us go back a little way and see what happened.

Something like 30 years ago, perhaps more, perhaps 30 or 40—the Senator from Mississippi will correct me if I am wrong—the first power company started its construction at Niagara. As I recollect, it is called the Niagara Falls Power Co. It was a pioneer in that kind of work. There were no industries there. There was no other water power worthy of the name on either side of the river. Nobody tried to go there. If I recollect aright that company secured its rights or grants from the State of New York. It built an exceedingly expensive power house and shaft and long raceway tunnel. I remember in my much younger days seeing the work illustrated in the paper called the Scientific Magazine as a remarkable engineering feat, and commending the initiative and enterprise of the people who did it.

As I have been informed, the company went along for eight or nine years without ever making a penny. They had no market for their power. They had to induce manufacturers and power consumers to come to Niagara, and after a considerable period of time the community built itself up into a great manufacturing community such as exists there to-day. I believe it was after something like 8 or 10 years of experience of that sort that the company finally began to pay interest on its investment.

I merely relate this to qualify, if I may, some of the assertions of the Senator from Mississippi that the companies have made a large amount of money. It was a bitter, hard struggle for the company at first, so I am informed. That was the pioneer company and its machinery and appliances were the best known in that day.

Considerably later on another company, which has been referred to by the Senator from Mississippi, installed its works, and they were much more modern, much more effective, because the science or the art, as the case may be, had progressed tremendously in the interim. So the result was, as the Senator has said upon a former occasion, that the old company was operating in a most inefficient manner, and was not developing the horsepower per cubic foot of water diverted that the new company was developing, solely due to the fact that the machinery and appliances of the old company were out of date. To renovate and modernize the entire plant of the old company would have involved such an enormous expenditure that the company was not financially strong enough to do it.

When the war broke out the War Department at Washington was so anxious to have power used in the chemical industries that had been built up at Niagara Falls that it took occasion under legislation passed by the Congress to practically commandeer all that power and compel its delivery to those factories which were making things that the Government had to have in waging the war. The same complaint about the inefficiency of the old company was, of course, constantly being made and admitted by the old company, but to modernize the old company would have imposed such a heavy burden that they could not do it by themselves.

Then, upon the recommendation of the War Department the legislature of New York passed an act during the war authorizing the consolidation of the two companies, the new one and the old one. The administration in Washington urged it and the legislature at Albany passed the act and the governor signed the bill authorizing the consolidation of those two companies under the supervision of the public-service commission of the State as to capitalization and other features. So there is now but one company. The assets of the two old companies are merged in one. My information is that the one company will be of sufficient financial strength to enable it to modernize the appliances and the machinery of the older of the two companies.

However that may be, let me say to the Senator from Mississippi that the one company can not act or do anything in the future with respect to the diversion of water from above the Falls in contravention of the treaty or without the permission of this commission created under the bill. The company now operating at Niagara Falls will fall completely under the jurisdiction of the commission just as any other water-power company anywhere in the United States falls under it. It will fall completely, as to the matter of rates charged to consumers, under the jurisdiction of the public service commission of the State of New York as is provided in the bill for every other company in the country. There is no difference whatsoever between the treatment of the water-power developer at Niagara Falls and the treatment of water-power developers on the Columbia River or any other river in the country.

They fall under exactly the same jurisdiction; the Government wields the same power over them. Under the terms of this bill the Government can condition the issuance of a permit as it sees fit, and the Niagara company must comply or it can not divert any water. Under that state of facts—and I believe it to be the state of facts as I read the bill—why treat Niagara any differently from any other place?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it the Senator's opinion that under this bill the commission to be appointed by the bill could compel one of the companies to remodel its plant so that it might develop a higher power efficiency at Niagara Falls?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is my opinion.

Mr. HARRISON. What part of the bill does the Senator have in mind that gives them that power?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is there not a provision in the bill which gives the commission the right to revise and approve the plans and specifications for the power houses and transmission lines and all machinery and appurtenances?

Mr. HARRISON. That is in connection with the question whether or not they will grant a license for the construction of a dam. That is before the power plant is built and before the development is undertaken. The trouble about that situation is that the power plant at Niagara Falls is already constructed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but the permit or the license has not been issued.

Mr. HARRISON. Permits have been issued.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Only temporarily, for a year at a time, until permanent legislation is enacted.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no interest in the world in this legislation, except that I think it is too important to be passed by the Senate without giving it special consideration; but I want to say to the Senator that I happened to be a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the other House and gave a great deal of consideration to the pending subject when that committee once—I believe at the invitation of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Buffalo—visited Niagara Falls and had a delightful time. At that time, as the Senator from New York will recall, on the American side we were only diverting at Niagara Falls 15,600 cubic feet of water per second, while under the treaty we had a right to divert 20,000 cubic feet per second. I was in favor of "raising the limit," so to speak, so that the full amount of 20,000 cubic feet per second might be developed, for I did not believe that it would affect the scenic beauty of the Falls, and I thought the power was needed. For that reason I voted for that being done.

However, I desire to ask the Senator a question. Assuming that what he says is true—and I take issue with him as to that—all the legislation which we have previously enacted touching Niagara Falls has contained a limit as to the amount of water that could be diverted at Niagara. The Burton law provided for 15,600 feet. The Senator admits that there is no limitation placed in this bill; that it is merely placed in the control of the commission.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not admit that.

Mr. HARRISON. It is up to the commissioners; but they will probably follow the terms of the treaty. I can not understand how the commissioners would do otherwise. I am, however, of the opinion that we ought to put a limitation into whatever legislation is now passed. As I have stated, under the present law there can be diverted on this side 20,000 cubic feet of water per second. Is that not true?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under a temporary permit.

Mr. HARRISON. Under a temporary permit. I think the last legislation, which was a war measure, provided for a three years' limitation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it provided a limitation of one year, which expires in July.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, after July, under the law, only 15,600 cubic feet may be diverted; but if this bill is passed we shall provide permanently that 20,000 cubic feet per second may be diverted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not without a permit.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, not without a license; but the Congress has reserved to itself the right to say how much water might be diverted at Niagara on this side; and there has been a great difference of opinion whether or not 20,000 cubic feet per second should be diverted or 15,600 cubic feet per second should be diverted. Time after time we have had a very hard row to hoe in order to get legislation providing for additional power being developed there; but under this bill, while it is not limited under its terms, it is set down that 20,000 cubic feet per second permanently, forever, may be diverted from Niagara Falls, and the only power which might say that it shall not be done is the commission named in this bill, which is also given the authority to say to whom the power shall go. Is not that true?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; I think not.

Mr. HARRISON. I can not agree with the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This bill does not confer any perpetual rights for the diversion of water in Niagara Falls upon anybody. The water-power company that is there now and all the companies that may be organized there in the future to develop power upon other parts of the river, we will say below the Falls, must come to the commission and get a license, and the commission can prescribe the conditions upon which the license is to be issued. That includes the water that is now being diverted by reason of the temporary permit, which, as I recollect, will expire in July next. The companies will have to come, hat in hand, to the commission and ask permission to divert that extra 4,400 cubic feet of water per second, and the commission can lay down rules and conditions before they will consent to such diversion. The bill is perfectly clear about that; there is nothing in the bill that gives them anything in the way of a perpetual right to divert the water. They have to obtain the permission of the Federal Government. They are treated just as any other company is treated in the matter of diverting water from a stream.

Mr. President, my principal interest in this matter is not merely because I have lived all my life in the western part of the State of New York and have seen that region grow and thrive industrially and otherwise as a result of the development of water power, but it is because I have a dream about water-power development for this country. I think the Niagara, the St. Lawrence, and other streams are going to be used to an extent that, perhaps, some of us do not imagine to-day. I doubt if the time will ever come when any more water will be diverted from above Niagara Falls.

If there is to be a development in the future on a large scale, it will be on the river below the Falls, and when this bill is enacted, if it is to be enacted, any person or corporation or municipality or the State of New York itself, if it so desires, as I read this bill, may make application for a license to divert water for the purpose of developing electrical energy. It is my hope that under the conditions laid down by the Federal commission created under this bill the future development at Niagara or in that vicinity and on the St. Lawrence River will be given exactly the same kind of treatment as is given water-power developments on other streams of the United States. For the life of me I can not see why all should not be treated alike. The Federal Government will be in complete control; the 50-year license will run there just as it will run anywhere else; the recapture clause will be just as strong there as anywhere else; the right of the State public-service commission to regulate rates and other matters, which it is already doing, will be just as strong there as anywhere else; and, if the State fails, if it ceases to maintain an agency for the regulation of those matters the Federal Government, under the terms of this bill, will have the same right there to exercise its control and its power as it has anywhere else.

I should regret if boundary streams were left out of this bill, because I think there is no essential difference in the water-power problem on a boundary stream than there is upon an interior stream. Our Government has control of the shore on its side of the river and to midstream; it must always be limited by some treaty with its neighboring power, Canada. Such a treaty is now in effect; other treaties may be added to it; other provisions may be added to it more restrictive or more liberal, as the case may be. That is for the two countries to decide, but when the countries have decided how much water each may divert, then, from that point on, in what respect does the problem differ from the problem presented upon the Hudson River, where there are large water powers, upon the Racket River, in my State, where there are large water powers, upon the Genesee River, upon which I live and where there is a possible development of water power? So long as this bill is careful to clothe the Federal Government through this commission with power to control this question, to straighten out the uncertainty that has existed at this particular point for 30 years as to the right of anybody to do anything, then I think we are perfectly safe.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to ask the Senator a question. If provision as to Niagara Falls were left out of this bill there would be no Federal authority under the law that could exercise jurisdiction over Niagara Falls?

Mr. WADSWORTH. None at all.

Mr. NELSON. They would be left in the air, would they not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely.

Mr. NELSON. And the joint waterways commission could do nothing?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They could do nothing.

Mr. NELSON. Niagara Falls would be left hanging in the air outside of any Federal regulation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is where they have been for many years.

Mr. NELSON. There would be required either a separate law on the subject relating to Niagara Falls or they would be left in the air without any authority to provide for the development of water power there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, a separate law would be required, and when we came to draw that law and to pass it—and that might take us a long time—I venture to say that it would almost be word for word what we have in this bill. There would be the same kind of control jointly between the Federal Government and the States, the same kind of a license provision, the same power placed in the hands of some commission of the Federal Government to lay down conditions upon which the licenses shall be issued, and I think we would have practically the same kind of legislation, for why does it demand legislation of a different character?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. With reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota that everything touching Niagara Falls will be up in the air if provision for power development there is not included in this legislation, it will not be up in the air any more than it has been up in the air for 20 years. It has been necessary to amend the Burton law year by year because no permanent legislation has been enacted touching Niagara Falls. The House of Representatives did its duty; it passed a comprehensive bill, a bill that did not impose a penalty of $1,000 a month if any of its terms were violated, but one that imposed a penalty of $10,000 a day and imprisonment for those who violated its terms. Under the penalty imposed by this bill a power company could violate it, pay the small penalty that is imposed, and go on with impunity. It would be but a mere toll, a mere tax, so to speak. I think the present law expires, as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], on the 1st of April. If it takes temporary legislation to extend that act, let us extend it. I am in favor of permanent legislation affecting Niagara Falls; I am in favor of a comprehensive plan; but I want to have Congress consider the proposition. I do not believe, however, that, in order to meet this little emergency, the Senate should pass a piece of legislation concerning Niagara Falls which they have not considered a particle, and which the Senator in charge of the bill says he has not considered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator and I have discussed that question. I want to call the Senator's attention to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. He asked me to point out the incident which I related earlier in my remarks. He will find on page 2147, under date of June 28, 1919, which was in this Congress, the record of the proceedings of the House on the matter to which I referred earlier in my remarks. If he will examine the remarks of Mr. FERRIS he will find that the very project which he discussed a little while ago was touched upon. Finally when the House came to a vote as to whether or not this committee should take under consideration the question of boundary streams the vote was 64 to 12 in favor of their doing so.

Mr. HARRISON. Was that vote taken before the committee considered it in the House, may I ask the Senator? How did the question come up?

Mr. WADSWORTH. When the resolution came before the House clothing this committee with power, or prescribing its functions, an amendment was offered excluding boundary streams. That amendment was defeated.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, that was when the bill had been reported by the House committee to the House of Representatives without specific instructions to consider Niagara Falls, and then a motion was made on the floor of the House to exclude Niagara Falls from it, and then a vote was taken. Is that right?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is my understanding.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the House committee did not give any consideration to Niagara Falls?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not say that it did.

Mr. HARRISON. I just wanted to get the Senator's position.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I said that the House itself was willing to consider Niagara Falls.

Mr. HARRISON. The House refused to exclude it. I stated that the House committee had not considered Niagara Falls, and that the rule that had created the committee especially said that Niagara Falls should not be included, and that the Senate committee had not considered it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is some doubt about that, Mr. President. I have not the RECORD before me. Now, may I ask the Senator just to listen to what Mr. FERRIS said:

> Mr. Chairman, to my way of thinking, and I feel sure I am right about this, this bill neither takes from or adds to any power that this International High Commission has. The real truth about it is it is not really a question involving the international commission at all. The bill makes no reference to it. The bill does not in any way involve them, and it does not in any way curtail their powers or reduce them. What are the facts?

Then he relates how the Foreign Affairs Committee and the Public Lands Committee and other committees have had jurisdiction over water-power legislation at different times.

Mr. President, I have taken more of the time of the Senate than I expected to take. I hope the amendment will not prevail. I hope that all the water powers of the country, regardless of their situation, will be treated upon the same basis.

Mr. LENROOT obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Harrison	New	Smoot
Beckham	Henderson	Newberry	Spencer
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Sterling
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Overman	Trammell
Colt	Kendrick	Page	Underwood
Dial	Kenyon	Phipps	Wadsworth
Dillingham	King	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
France	Lenroot	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard	Warren
Gerry	McNary	Simmons	Wolcott
Hale	Moses	Smith, Ga.
Harding	Myers	Smith, Md.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] are engaged in a conference on the railroad bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am in favor of the adoption of this amendment for two reasons: First, because the propositions upon the Niagara and St. Lawrence Rivers are of such magnitude that they ought to be dealt with separately by Congress; secondly, because the improvement of the St. Lawrence River is now under investigation by the International Joint Commission, consisting of three members of the United States Government and three members of the Government of the Dominion of Canada, with instructions from this Congress to report as early as practicable upon the improvement of the St. Lawrence River, and we all know that that report, if made and favorably recommended, will cover the water-power improvement upon that river; and if the St. Lawrence River is to be included in this bill and the authority vested in this commission to grant licenses for dams upon the St. Lawrence River, it is absolutely in conflict with the legislation that this Senate enacted in the last river and harbor bill.

As to the importance of that improvement, Mr. President, let me say that last month, at the Rivers and Harbors Congress, the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Vogelsang, read a paper upon this question and upon the potential water power in the St. Lawrence River. I ask at this time unanimous consent to include that paper in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Remarks of Alexander T. Vogelsang, first Assistant Secretary of the Interior, at the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, fifteenth convention, Washington, D. C., December 10, 1919.]

POWER DEVELOPMENT AS RELATED TO THE PROPOSED GREAT LAKES–ST. LAWRENCE TIDEWATER PROJECT.

"Gentlemen of the Rivers and Harbors Congress, I have been asked to make a brief address upon the question of hydroelectric power that may be developed along that part of the St. Lawrence River constituting the boundary between the United States and Canada in connection with a proposed waterway which will accommodate ocean-borne vessels.

"The advocates of this enterprise are chiefly resident far west of the St. Lawrence River, and the power feature of the work is only of incidental or general interest to them in their promotion of the navigation project; but to the State of New York and portions of New England it is a matter of extreme importance.

"The Department of the Interior is charged with the administration and control of publicly owned hydroelectric power sites and has therefore ever kept itself abreast of the development of the art wheresoever that development may have taken place, and in the beginning I wish to give due and full credit for assistance in the preparation of this paper to the magnificent annual report of the Secretary of the Interior just issued and to the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines. Through the agencies of these bureaus the Department is in daily touch with the power question, and out of its abundant researches and statistics I am enabled to present in outline some views which may create at least a conception in the average mind of the prime importance of power in our economic fabric. It is, indeed, the first among the present-day problems of science.

"The development of this waterway with incidental power production is a work that appeals to our constructive imagination. It appeals to true statesmanship as defined by Jonathan Swift 200 years ago, when he said in the Voyage to Brobdingnag:

"And he gave it for his opinion that whoever could make two ears of corn or two blades of grass to grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before would deserve better of mankind and do more essential service to his country than the whole race of politicians put together.

"I may add at this point that more than a million men are now engaged in producing mineral fuels the consumption of which expends and exhausts the stores of nature. On the other hand, the white coal of falling water is exhaustless, is everlasting. Any project that will lower transportation costs and at the same time yield energy for the use of man conforms to modern economic thought.

"There is a growing tendency to redistribute those industries of the country which require large amounts of power to locations where water power is abundant and cheap. Thus, water power will control the location of those industries in which the cost of power is a large item in the value of the product.

"Dr. Steinmetz estimates the theoretical maximum of hydroelectric power of the United States at 320,000,000 horsepower, though, of course, but a fraction thereof can be made practically available. The Geological Survey estimates the amount practically available to be 54,000,000 continuous horsepower, and of this the boundary waters in question can produce nearly 2,000,000 horsepower, half of which belongs to us.

"The census of 1912 shows that the developed water power of the United States was 4,870,000 horsepower. According to that census the installed capacity of stationary prime movers was 30,000,000 horsepower, furnished by water, gas, and steam. This does not include power generated in locomotives, marine engines, automobiles, and such apparatus. The average power furnished by these prime movers was probably not more than 20 per cent of installed capacity, so that power produced in 1912 was probably not more than 6,000,000 continuous horsepower.

"Seventy per cent of the water power is west of the Mississippi and over 70 per cent of stationary prime-movers horsepower is east of that river. Thus it is seen that the East is rapidly consuming the expendable resources of power, and that if she continues to sleep upon her water-power possibilities she may soon see the transfer of many of her great industries to the enterprising, forceful, and ever-alert West.

POWER POSSIBILITIES OF ST. LAWRENCE RIVER.

"St. Lawrence River from Tibbets Point, at the foot of Lake Ontario, to deep water at the level of Lake St. Francis at St. Regis, N. Y., flows about 113 miles along the international boundary and has a fall at low water of about 92 feet, of which about 91 feet is in the lower 48 miles, from Galop Rapids to St. Regis, there being a fall of but 1 foot in the 65 miles from Lake Ontario to Galop Rapids. The fall in the lower section of the river is concentrated in a number of rapids which are passed by means of canals and locks on the Canadian side. The Long Sault Rapids, with a fall of 48 feet, extend for about 12 miles along the lower end of this section.

"From St. Regis to ocean navigation at Montreal there is a fall of about 130 feet in a distance of about 70 miles, of which 129 feet is concentrated in two stretches of 14 and 8½ miles, the former including Coteau, Cedar, and Cascade Rapids, in which the fall is 84 feet, and the latter, including Lachine Rapids, in which the fall is 45 feet.

"It is only necessary to consider the immense amount of water flowing in the St. Lawrence River and its uniformity of flow to realize the tremendous amount of water power capable of being developed along the international portion of the river. The mean annual flow at the head of the river, as shown by records obtained from 1860 to 1917, is 241,000 second-feet. The effect of the Great Lakes, which act as a great system of storage reservoirs in regulating the flow in the St. Lawrence, is indicated by the fact that the maximum and minimum flow of the river differ by only about 25 per cent from its mean flow. A comparison of this ratio with similar ratios for the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers indicates that the flow of the St. Lawrence is remarkably uniform. The mean flow of the Ohio River at its mouth is about 300,000 second-feet, its maximum flow is about three times the mean, and its minimum flow is about one-tenth the mean. The mean flow of the Mississippi at the power plant of the Mississippi River Power Co. at Keokuk is about 50,000 second-feet. The maximum is about six times the mean and the minimum is about one-fifth the mean.

"The amount of theoretical power per foot of fall in the St. Lawrence River, as shown by the mean annual flow, is 27,360 horsepower, and as a total fall of 92 feet is available in the international section of the river the theoretical power in that section is about 2,520,000 horsepower. Assuming that only 70 per cent of this energy can be made available on account of losses in head and inefficiencies of water wheels and generating equipment, this strength of the river, owned equally by the United States and Canada, would furnish 1,764,000 horsepower, or 882,000 horsepower to each. About 95,000 horsepower of the portion belonging to the United States has already been developed by the St. Lawrence River Power Co. by means of a canal which diverts a maximum of 30,000 second-feet from the river near the head of the Long Sault Rapids through the power house into Grass River, which joins the St. Lawrence below the Long Sault Rapids. Here a head of about 40 feet is developed. After the power utilized at this development is deducted from the power of the portion belonging to the United States, the power not yet developed in that portion of the river amounts to about 790,000 horsepower.

"As a horsepower is practically three-fourths of a kilowatt, 790,000 horsepower is equivalent to about 590,000 kilowatts. This amount of power is about one-third the total installed generating capacity of all the plants engaged in producing electricity for public use in New York State, slightly more than the installed capacity of generators of similar plants in the State of Michigan, and about 75 per cent of the capacity of those in Massachusetts. In only six States in the United States does the total installed capacity of electric generators in public-utility plants exceed 590,000 kilowatts.

"This power may be used near the points of development by industries in which power is a large component of the product, or it may be transmitted as a public-service supply to power markets that are now dependent on fuels. Doubtless neither of these courses should be followed to the complete exclusion of the other, but it is worth while to examine somewhat the conditions of public power supply within transmission distance of these sites in order to see what are the possibilities of absorbing so large an amount of power.

"If the development were so made that a certain amount of regulation of stream flow by storage in Lake Ontario were possible, and if load conditions were adapted to the full utilization of all the power produced, it would appear that the share of the United States of the St. Lawrence River power would be about 425,000,000 kilowatt-hours per month. The amount of power produced from fuels in public-utility plants during the month of February, 1919, in New England and New York State was about 460,000,000 kilowatt-hours. The amount of power so produced from fuels during that month in the central New York region, from Albany to Buffalo, was only about 30,000,000 kilowatt-hours, so that if any considerable portion of the St. Lawrence River power were to be marketed for use by public utilities it would have to be transmitted to the metropolitan district of New York, a distance of about 350 miles. Here there is now produced from fuel at least 300,000,000 kilowatt-hours per month. Much of New England is within a transmission distance of 250 miles, and requires about 150,000,000 kilowatt-hours of fuel-produced energy monthly for public service alone. The industrial plants not supplied by public-service companies use a large additional but unknown quantity of energy. The transmission of these quantities of power over the distances indicated is unprecedented, but is not to be regarded as unattainable in the present state of high-tension operation. In view of these requirements there can be no reasonable doubt in anyone's mind that there would be an ample market for all the power that can be developed on the St. Lawrence. The annual value of our horsepower would be about $12,000,000, and figured on a 5 per cent basis would show a capital value of $240,000,000.

"The utilization of this power in public service to replace coal now consumed in the large manufacturing centers of New York and New England has an important bearing on the extension of the life of our coal deposits. On the basis of 3 pounds of coal per kilowatt-hour, this St. Lawrence River power is the equivalent of about 7,750,000 tons of coal annually. This is about 1.3 per cent of the total production of bituminous coal in the United States in 1918. The amount of coal consumed per year by public-utility plants in New England and New York is only about 7,000,000 tons.

"If, on the other hand, the demand for electrochemical and other products requiring large quantities of power increases, these water powers will give opportunity for greatly enlarged industrial development. Doubtless most of the power developed on the Canadian side, not only in the boundary portion of the river but in the purely Canadian portion below, would be utilized for such purposes. This portion is within easy reach of the largest commercial centers, and after the St. Lawrence has been made more fully available for navigation it would be possible for ocean shipping to reach the factory sites. Assuming, as seems entirely probable, that these developments are made at low cost and can deliver power at attractive rates, it is entirely likely that this power can be marketed as rapidly as it can be developed.

"Under normal conditions the railroads, especially those in the northeastern part of the United States, are overburdened with coal. From 35 to 40 per cent of their cargo space is given up to the transportation of coal. The full utilization of the water powers of the St. Lawrence would reduce greatly the tonnage of coal to be moved into New York and the New England States.

"The saving in man power by producing energy by water power, as compared with steam power, is large, especially if the number of miners required to provide coal is considered. A large southern power company shows, by comparing the number of men needed to operate one of its hydroelectric plants on the Coosa River with the number, including the miners, needed to operate one of its steam plants, that in a water-power plant one man is required per 5,250 kilowatts of capacity, whereas in a steam plant one man is required per 74 kilowatts of capacity.

"Applying these figures to the water power available on the St. Lawrence and assuming that the 590,000 kilowatts of water power would replace the same amount of steam power, about 7,900 men would be released for work in other fields.

"The power possibilities of the St. Lawrence have therefore very large economic importance, and any plans for developing the river for navigation should make provision for the maximum development of the energy that it will afford. This provision can be made only by working out a comprehensive plan in which both Canada and the United States seek the best engineering and economic solution of the problem. No doubt private capital is available to make all this improvement in consideration of a grant of the power privilege, but there is equally no doubt that this will not be done. Canada as well as the United States would not permit it.

"The availability of the water power of the St. Lawrence should also receive the most careful consideration if Congress authorizes Secretary Lane's plan for a power survey of the North Atlantic industrial region.

"It is now three years since Congress was urged to authorize a study of the power possibilities of the congested industrial part of the Atlantic seaboard, with a view to disclosing not only the fact that a great saving in power could be effected and a much larger actual use of the power now produced could be gained, but that new supplies could be obtained both from running water and from the conversion of coal into power at the mines instead of after a long haul. The feasibility of constructing a supertransmission line of electric power paralleling the Atlantic seaboard from Richmond to Boston, affording connections at New York and Boston with the vast water-power resources of the St. Lawrence on the north and Niagara on the west, a main transmission line into which would run many minor feeding streams of power, and from which would diverge an infinite number of small delivering lines tying together the separated power plants of 10 States, so that one could give aid to the other, so that one could take the place of the other, so that all may join their power for good in any great drive that may be projected, may well be investigated by the Government, not with the thought that the Government would construct or even operate such a trunk line but that the project might so attract the attention of the engineering and financial world as to make it a reality.

"Such a system of transmission lines would take from the coal mine and the railroads much of their burden, and insure the operation of street lights, street cars, and essential industries in the face of railroad delinquencies.

"The demand for power for the use of industrial and public utilities in New England and New York is increasing. Winter conditions like those of 1917–18 would again cause, and to a greater degree, the same difficulty that then occurred in supplying coal to the country's essential industries. The water power of the St. Lawrence would furnish sufficient energy to supply a large part of the power now generated by fuel in the northeastern part of this dominant industrial district of the United States. The demand for power in this district would undoubtedly consume all that portion of the St. Lawrence power that belongs to the United States and all of that portion of Canada's share for which there was no demand in that country.

"The power production will pay the entire cost of all the work. As I understand it, our neighbor proposes to go into the enterprise on a 50–50 basis in spite of the apparent fact that the present advantage is enormously in our favor. Shall Canada's 7,000,000 people say, "I will," and shall Uncle Sam's 110,000,000 say, "I will not"? Or shall we rather cooperate and develop this waterway, obtaining thereby, practically as a by-product, this tremendous resource of power?

A WORD ABOUT COAL.

"About 55 per cent of the world's coal is in the United States. We must some day become great as a coal exporting Nation. In the prewar period we sold abroad only 4,500,000 tons of our annual production of 700,000,000 tons, which Secretary Lane visualizes in his report by stating that this amount of coal would build a Chinese wall along the outboundaries of the United States from Maine to Vancouver, to San Diego, and eastward to Maine again. England exported 77,000,000 tons. In fact, England's primacy in commerce is due to her coal exports, which afforded cargo to her merchant fleet and gave her bunkering facilities all over the globe.

"She can no longer maintain this figure of exportation for many reasons, and is even now asking us for coal. Continental Europe freezes to-day, and will probably henceforth be forced to large purchases from us. Indeed, her prayers to us to-day are as fervent for fuel as they are for food and credit. We must also henceforth largely supply the South American market. It is easily imaginable that clearing this waterway to navigation will release for export millions of tons of coal from the central fields, and thus stabilize labor and general mining conditions, giving to the mine worker what to-day he craves most—more days of work per year—with necessarily resulting benefit to the mine owner and operator as well.

"The railroads, indeed, should be relieved as much as possible of the carriage of coal. It is the largest single item of railroad freight. Hydroelectric power and power generated by coal at the mouth of the mine will in no distant day not only avoid the great haulage of this low-grade freight but will propel the trains themselves, which will carry the high-value product of looms and factories that also are driven by electric power. We may indulge the high conception that one day this great coal-producing Nation will operate her mills, her mines, her railroads by electric power and ship a vast mass of her coal production by water routes almost from mine to foreign market.

"The value and importance of water transportation will be discussed by others, but I venture this question: Where would our iron industry be to-day were it not for the cheap water transportation enjoyed by four-fifths of our total iron-ore production tributary to the Great Lakes? That waterway and not that iron is the foundation of our position as the world's greatest producer of iron and steel. This is a fair illustration of the claims made by the proponents of this improvement, that transportation governs production. Indeed, obstructions to navigation are obstructions to commerce and obstructions to production. The removal of the first enhances the others. High cost of freight rates promotes high cost of living and puts production on the 'red,' and when production goes upon the 'red' it is evidence that it has bled to death.

"In his introduction to that most valuable work, recently issued, entitled 'The Strategy of Minerals,' Secretary Lane observes:

"There is an international right to those things which are essential to life. * * * We are to grow nationally by our generosity internationally.

"Dr. Smith, Director of the Geological Survey and editor of this publication, also wisely asserts:

"A nation's resources are of largest value if they serve the world.

"These are truths becoming more and more evident to the American mind as each of these present stressful days passes on. As never before in the history of the world must we realize that the prosperity and happiness of other countries means the happiness and prosperity of America.

"A real and a sound objection to the construction of this waterway and the incidental production of this power may be found and no doubt some of merit may be advanced. I do not know what they may be, but no doubt objections of a military or political nature may be advanced. They, I should say, are most insubstantial, are entitled only to passing consideration, and really may be answered in a sentence.

NEW YORK THE CHIEF BENEFICIARY.

"Recurring again to the power possibilities of the St. Lawrence, I venture to say that it is readily perceptible to anyone that of all the States bordering or tributary to this waterway the greatest beneficiary of the development will be the great and Empire State of New York. The letting loose of this flood of power over her territory will cause her to leap to the front as a manufacturing State, and her products so stimulated by cheap power will find markets in all the countries of the world. With her magnificent harbor and the superb advantage of her barge canal, affording cheap water transportation thereto, and at the same time enjoying and possessing all the benefits of the St. Lawrence route, hundreds of miles nearer salt water than her western competitors, her high-value manufactures will have a permanent primacy over any other State in the Union. Indeed it is no idle dream to picture her barge canal and her lake shore dotted with factories of all kinds in enjoyment of this white coal at low rates in operation 365 days in the year, independent of season, their power coming into the factory on a wire instead of by rail and upon cars, free from labor, climatic, or transportation trouble or interruption. No other State of our Union has the same strategic advantage in power, population, labor supply, and transportation, and these advantages for natural and geographical reasons can probably never be lost, and this notwithstanding that the day is coming when the West will hold most of the black-coal reserves of the country, in addition to her everlasting majority of the white-coal supply.

"In conclusion let me say that enlightened selfishness, the truest and highest interest of our country, our duty to all mankind alike dictate that our back door, as well as our front door, be opened to ocean-borne commerce. This is especially manifest because the by-product of electric energy will more than pay the cost of the job."

Mr. LENROOT. In this speech of Mr. Vogelsang he shows that the water power that can be produced upon the St. Lawrance River from Lake Ontario to St. Regis, the boundary, is very nearly 2,000,000 horsepower, one-half of which will belong to the United States under the agreement between Canada and this country; and he goes on to show that if the Government itself improves this river in cooperation with the Dominion of Canada, if it itself makes the expenditures, the revenue of the United States Government out of the water power produced will more than pay the entire cost of the improvement; and yet, under the terms of this bill, this commission is authorized to grant licenses to those who may apply for them that may utterly destroy that scheme of improvement, for aught we know. But certainly, whether it did or not, instead of the revenue coming to the Government of the United States, if the Senate shall take the action which I apprehend it will take, overruling the action of the Committee of the Whole in permitting compensation to be charged, it will be another gift to these great water-power companies that may be developed upon the St. Lawrence River without any return or consideration to the Government.

That in itself is a very good reason for the exclusion of the St. Lawrence River. But there is another reason that applies as well to Niagara Falls, where a tremendous power is capable of being produced. Why is it necessary, Mr. President, to enact a general law for the granting of these licenses for the development of water power? There is only one reason, and that is because of the great number of applications that are made. Congress has not the time, with the multitude of other business that it always has before it, to consider those applications and act directly upon them. So I have always been in favor of authority being delegated to some officer or commission of the Government to grant these ordinary applications for the development of water power.

But, Mr. President, when we come to a case like Niagara Falls, and when we come to a case like the St. Lawrence River, with its million horsepower—and let me digress for a moment to ask the Senate whether they realize what a million horsepower means. I wonder how many of us know what the aggregate horsepower produced to-day in this country is, both by water power and by all other agencies that are stationary—steam, and so forth. It is only 30,000,000 in the entire United States; and on the St. Lawrence River alone—not speaking of the Niagara River—there can be produced one-thirtieth of all the stationary power used in the United States to-day.

When we come to propositions of this magnitude, the objection to Congress acting directly upon applications does not apply in the least degree. When we come to a project of the size and magnitude of Niagara Falls there is no reason why Congress should not act upon a special bill on that subject. It is quite as important as the kind of bills that the Senate does act upon, and the Niagara Falls project, as has already been stated, has never been before the Committee on Commerce; that committee has never had jurisdiction of that subject; and the Committee on Interstate Commerce, that always had this legislation in the House, so far as navigable waters are concerned, never has had jurisdiction of Niagara Falls. This legislation always came from the Committee on Foreign Relations in both Houses; this matter of Niagara Falls and the St. Lawrence River was not brought up or considered in the Commerce Committee, except that as a member of that committee I did offer an amendment excluding Niagara Falls and the St. Lawrence River; but the members of that committee, never having considered the subject, of course knew nothing of the details of the proposition.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator think Congress or this commission should have jurisdiction to undertake to regulate water power on an international stream? Even if the bill passes without excluding Niagara Falls, would it not require a treaty between the two Governments before anything could be done on either side of the Niagara River?

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, it would; and we now have treaty provisions that take care of that very thing. As has been stated, we already have treaty provisions permitting the United States to use 20,000 cubic feet per second above the Falls, so that when this bill passes Congress will have nothing further to do with that subject unless it be to modify in the future the treaty provisions. Of course, they could not use more than 20,000 feet unless a new treaty were made. But so far as that 20,000 cubic feet was concerned Congress would have nothing more to do with it after this bill once passed.

Now, Mr. President, Senators will remember that there have been separate bills upon Niagara Falls, both in the Senate and in the House, and they have come up several years; and Senators will remember that the license of the present company producing the power at Niagara Falls has been extended from year to year by action of Congress. The last extension was made here last winter. But, strange as it may seem, there would have been no difficulty in securing at any time in the past permanent legislation upon the subject of the utilization and development of the Niagara Falls water power, in my judgment. As I said the other day, I can not produce the evidence, but I firmly believe that the present company developing that power defeated the legislation that was proposed.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who was a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the House, as well as of the Committee on Rules, well remembers the legislation that came from that committee. While they proposed permanent legislation with regard to this subject, the legislation never was enacted. There is no reason why Congress should not deal with it separately, and no reason why Congress shall not in the future take up this subject of Niagara Falls and deal with it in a separate bill.

That is especially true, Mr. President, if the Senate, when this bill gets into the Senate from the committee, shall overrule the action of the committee with regard to the Senate committee amendment whereby the United States will be prohibited from exacting any compensation, except a nominal compensation for the administration of the law. There is no question in the world but that the Niagara Falls power is worth millions and millions of dollars. Keep it in the bill, with the restrictions that are proposed, and you will just hand those millions of dollars to this special privilege.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If that is true of that particular water power, would it not be true of every one to whom you gave a license?

Mr. LENROOT. No

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why not?

Mr. LENROOT. It is not necessarily true, because a very large percentage of the production of power that is now used in Niagara Falls goes into manufacturing and production concerning which the public has no benefit whatever in any reduction of the price of the article produced. The Senator well knows that to be true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know it well. It is——

Mr. LENROOT. At least the Senator is suspicious that it is true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I am not suspicious that it is true. To tell the truth to the Senator, I do not know much about the rates they charge; but I do know that as a result of the development of power, an enormous chemical industry has grown up. I suppose the same kind of an industry would grow up alongside of any other power; but it happens that this power is so large that it did attract chemical industries, who have made enormous strides in bringing to the service of the people many articles which they could never have gotten without this power. For instance, take the carbide, which is made at Niagara Falls in one of the big chemical plants. Carbide has been of some benefit to the people. All the acetylene gas plants in the United States are run with carbide. Without that power and without that carbide plant at Niagara Falls I would say the people of the country would not be quite so well off as they are now. It has contributed something. The Senator's statement that it has contributed nothing is a little extreme.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not say it had contributed nothing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator said that the people got no benefit.

Mr. LENROOT. I said they got no benefit of a reduction in the price by reason of the low cost of power.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a matter of the relation of the price to production.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the very point, Mr. President. There are only certain industries that receive the benefit of the Niagara Falls water power, and those industries can not go to any water power. There are not a multitude of opportunities in the United States. I think carbide is one of them. Certainly cyanamide is one of them. Fertilizer is one of them. There are only four or five water powers in the whole United States that can produce what is produced at Niagara Falls. One of them is the Priest Rapids on the Columbia River. There may be one or two more in the West. Another is Muscle Shoals.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator suggest special legislation for Priest Rapids?

Mr. LENROOT. No; I have not suggested it, but I would be very glad if we did have it. But there is a very great distinction. On the development of Priest Rapids one of their principal activities, I am told, will be to pump water for irrigation and develop water above to reclaim a vast area of territory.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not mean to interrupt the Senator. I have some sympathy with some of the objections he has to the past history of the development of Niagara Falls, and a good many of the people in that neighborhood have the same objections, notably the city of Buffalo. If the Senator will remember, I introduced and secured the adoption of an amendment this morning which protects any municipality or all the municipalities situated within a power-transmission distance of a great power plant in such a way as to guarantee that they shall all get equal treatment in the distribution and transmission of the power. So that all industries, all peoples, and all municipalities will be treated alike; and the commission created under the bill, as the result of my amendment adopted this morning, is charged with the power and the authority to put that thing into the conditions of the license and then the State agency is to govern the rates. I think the thing is so thoroughly protected that we have nothing to fear.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I notice in the hearings on this question before the House Foreign Affairs Committee there appeared the Referendum League of Erie County, by Louis Stockton, president, and Frank C. Perkins, consulting engineer. I know nothing about that league, but they presented this matter to the committee and they made this statement on the question of rates:

> Electricity can be produced at Niagara Falls, using the public waters, at a cost not to exceed $6 for horsepower per year, and is actually sold to the Ontario government for less than $10 per horsepower per year.
>
> Power produced at the Falls and transmitted to a much greater distance from the Falls than Buffalo is sold for less than the prices charged for like amounts of power in Buffalo.
> The distributing company in Buffalo charges the small consumer at the rate of $600 per horsepower per annum, as against the $6 per horsepower cost of production at the Falls.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true, Mr. President. I recollect the testimony. One of the activities made possible by this water power is the manufacture of fixed nitrogen, as is also the manufacture of fertilizers. As I recollect the testimony, the cyanamide industry receives its power for about $15 per year. But in so far as the manufacture of these products with these great water powers is concerned, we must look to the chemical products coming out of fixed nitrogen as one of the chief products, and a monopoly is the result. We have heard much of Muscle Shoals in the past. I did not know until the other day that it was the people operating at Niagara Falls who had the contract from the Government for the construction of the dam and power project at Muscle Shoals, and the Government has spent some $62,000,000 there under a contract with these same Niagara Falls people, as I understand it.

I have no doubt that with the two or three great water powers in the East, because we have got to have at least a production of 100,000 horsepower in a dam before fixed nitrogen can be produced, there is going to be no competition. It is going to be a monopoly, of course, and if we lose control there is no way by which the public, through the regulation of rates, is to receive any benefit from it, and therefore Niagara Falls ought to be dealt with separately and by itself.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to remind the Senator that the West will furnish a few competitors even of a hundred thousand horsepower.

Mr. LENROOT. How many?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is the Priest Rapids; there is The Dalles of the Columbia River in Oregon; there is the Polson and the Big Horn in Montana; and there is the Cabinet Gorge in Idaho.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the Senator that I remember looking it up quite carefully three or four years ago, and it is my recollection that there were not more than five in the entire United States capable of producing a sufficient amount of power to produce fixed nitrogen.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I speak of these at least upon the authority of official records. All of them will furnish 100,000 horsepower.

Mr. LENROOT. Passing again from that to the St. Lawrence River, when an official of the Government who has made a thorough investigation of the subject states that if the Government itself develops, in the interest of navigation, the St. Lawrence River, that the revenue produced from the million horsepower thus created will pay for the entire cost of the improvement, will some one tell me why we should give a license to some one else to build dams and obstruct that river not directly in the interest of navigation? Why should we give to them this very, very great power, whereby, if we retain it ourselves, we will have an ocean waterway making the interior Great Lakes admit ocean vessels and carrying the ocean to the heart of the continent? Why should we by any legislation of this character interfere or conflict in the least degree with a project of such great magnitude?

For the two reasons stated I sincerely hope that the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator takes his seat I desire to ask a question for the purpose of getting some further information. The legislation we have heretofore passed provided for an investigation of the St. Lawrence River. Is there anything in that which provides that the Government shall develop this water power?

Mr. LENROOT. No. The legislation provides that the International Joint Commission shall investigate the subject and make recommendations to their respective Governments regarding the improvement of the St. Lawrence River, the two Governments cooperating. Under the investigation there can be and is now being no improvement of the St. Lawrence River without the creation of water power. Under the information that we now have, under a wise and comprehensive scheme of development, the water power produced will pay for the entire cost of the improvement.

Mr. NORRIS. I might say that in the development of that tremendous power, particularly when we must in order to develop it be in partnership as it were with another Government, and particularly when it involves also the navigation, as I understand that part of the contemplation, of the St. Lawrence River so that ships can sail across the Atlantic Ocean and up the St. Lawrence River and into the Great Lakes, to my mind those facts are sufficient in connection with the tremendous amount of power that can be developed for the Government itself to develop the power. If there were some assurance or reasonable belief that the Congress when the proper time came would provide for that, I would feel much more strongly in favor of voting to include in the bill a provision that would eliminate the St. Lawrence River and Niagara Falls, but——

Mr. LENROOT. May I say to the Senator at that point that the joint commission is now engaged in the work of investigating the subject. There are 14 States now organized for the purpose of doing everything in their power to further the project. Appropriations have been made by the State legislatures and officials appointed to represent the States in that organization for most of those 14 States, as I recollect.

Mr. NORRIS. Those are States bordering upon the Great Lakes?

Mr. LENROOT. All that do border upon the Great Lakes are included, and Idaho, which is the farthest west, is a member of the organization. The Senator's own State of Nebraska is a member of the organization.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the object of that association the passage through Congress, if necessary, of a law that will provide for the development of the water power by the Government itself?

Mr. LENROOT. That is the whole object, for the two Governments, in cooperation, to make the improvement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator from Wisconsin say that those 14 States through their respective organizations are advocating water power?

Mr. LENROOT. No; the improvement of the river.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For navigation?

Mr. LENROOT. For navigation.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, there are two things in the improvement—water power and navigation will go hand in hand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They should go hand in hand.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; they should.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the method of the development of water power is not a part of the policy laid down by any of these associations.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question, and I am doing it with the same purpose in view that I had in asking a question of the Senator from Wisconsin. I am moved entirely by a desire to get information upon which to act.

When you couple up with this great enterprise the water power and the navigation, which I think all students of the subject must admit are inseparably connected and ought not to be separated, would the Senator from New York think that it would be practicable to turn over the water power part of it to a private corporation? Would it not be an instance for the Government? I presume it will be the Government that will have to build the dam to provide for navigation. No private corporation would do that unless they were given by the two Governments a license to take toll on all shipping by the river, which, of course, we would not want to be done.

Does not the Senator think that coupling those two things up as we must that the Government itself ought to use some instrumentality of its own to have charge of its part not only of the development of the water power that will come about, but in the regulation of its use? If the Government develops it, it would be able to meet all the objections that can be made and that have been made—and I think with a great deal of reason—by the Senator from Wisconsin and others in regard to the prices charged for hydroelectric power.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, the Senator asks me a question directed at conditions which will arise quite a long distance from now. My own impression is, as to a power so enormous as that which may be developed in the St. Lawrence River, that the State of New York should develop it under a permit issued by the Federal Government.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not have any objection to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They have a right under the bill to do it. Let me remind the Senator of another thing when he suggests the Federal Government doing it. The Supreme Court of the United States, in a case having to do with this very place on the St. Lawrence River, has handed down a decision to the effect that these waters are held in trust for the people of the State of New York and that the Federal Government does not own the waters.

Mr. NORRIS. I would be just as well satisfied if the State of New York developed the power and owned it, and then let them handle it.

Mr. LENROOT. They can do it under the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I doubt that somewhat. I presume technically they could; but does the Senator think that the State of New York would make application now, if we pass the bill as it stands, to do that thing?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know, of course.

Mr. NORRIS. If I knew that, I would be glad to give them the opportunity to do it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know, of course. I think from former experiments that you will find the attorney general of New York contending against the right of the Federal Government to interpose at all to stop them from developing it, once they get the permit to divert the water in such way as not to disturb navigation. The State of New York, through its legal representatives, has never conceded ownership of the water in the Federal Government nor any of its control except in so far as that control was necessary to protect navigation. Governors and attorney generals have always said that under the Constitution of the United States that water was held in trust for the people of New York.

As coming from the committee the bill rather avoids that issue in a sense. It has been an old question between the Senate and the House, sought to be disposed of by authorizing the commission to charge a nominal rate to meet administrative expenses. I imagine that is one of the compromises.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from New York that that provision in the bill has a good deal of influence on me and on my mind in connection with this particular thing. As the bill stands now, by a vote of 29 to 28 the commission have been given the right to use their discretion in the amount of fee they shall charge the licensee. If I knew that was going to be changed when the bill gets into the Senate, I would not have any hesitancy in voting in favor of the pending amendment. I think that the illustration of the St. Lawrence River and Niagara Falls is quite apt as to the necessity of somebody being able to require the payment of a license fee or the cutting down of the fee that is charged by the power company for power and for light.

But the question I wanted to ask the Senator from New York is not that. I was diverted by the last sentence of his remarks. I rose to ask him or probably to suggest to him that he would not claim, of course, and would not advocate and would not want the State of New York to take the responsibility of improving navigation of the St. Lawrence River. He wants the Federal Government to do that, and he is very proper in that proposition, because it is greater than the State of New York, if we can improve the St. Lawrence River.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So as to carry ocean steamers?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have my own ideas about that.

Mr. NORRIS. We are benefiting the entire country. There is something that is practical, but I understand that is one of the purposes of the investigation now going on. That will require the construction of dams, and the same dam with locks in it that preserves navigation and makes navigation for ocean steamers possible will be the source of hydroelectric energy by the water power that it makes possible.

Would the Senator have the Federal Government construct the dam, and what arrangement would he have for the State to take over the water power that comes from the construction of the dam by the Federal Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The State, under this bill, can make application for a permit?

Mr. NORRIS. The State would have to build the dams in that case.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; not necessarily.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede that it might be possible it would not, but nine times out of ten where a licensee gets a permit from the Government he will have to construct the dams.

Now, here is a proposition which involves another nation. The dams have got to be constructed by agreement with Canada. It will be necessary to get the consent of the Federal Government and also of the Canadian Government as to the location of the dams, as to their size, and also as to how the power and the commerce shall be handled. That makes it an involved question; but when such an agreement is reached, if it is reached, and the dams are constructed, the water power is possible; and it is not possible until that is done. That, of course, is a practical proposition and will be taken into consideration, very likely, by the representatives of the two Governments when they construct the dams, when they place them, and, indeed, when they plan them. When the Federal Government does all that, where is the jumping-off place going to be? Where is the State going to come in? Will it say, "We will take the power that is developed here"? Will it pay to the Federal Government? If it does pay, how much will it pay? For what proportion of the expense of the dams will it pay in order for it to own the electric energy that is developed there? It seems to me that it almost comes down to a national proposition, and, while it is possible to divide it and classify it, it is going to be, as a practical proposition, a very difficult matter.

I would not want to take this power away from the State of New York, even if I could, and carry it to some other State. It ought to be used in the State of New York. I should be glad to give it to the people of the State of New York, just as I have always favored giving to any municipality or to any State the water, or even the public lands, where they can be used for the benefit of all the people; but it seems to me when we come to the proposition of turning this over to the State of New York we are met with a great many difficulties that from a practical standpoint are almost insurmountable.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I can not recall anything in any previous legislation of Congress or in this bill that should militate against including Niagara Falls and the St. Lawrence River under the provisions of the bill. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] referred to an amendment which was adopted in the last river and harbor bill, but that amendment does not warrant the construction which the Senator put upon it. It must be remembered that the St. Lawrence River and the Niagara River are international streams, and whatever steps we take in reference to those streams must be taken in cooperation and in coordination with the Government of Canada. Here is the provision to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers, which was inserted in the last river and harbor bill:

SEC. 9. That the International Joint Commission created by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain relating to boundary waters between the United States and Canada, signed at Washington January 11, 1909, under the provisions of article 9 of said treaty, is requested to investigate what further improvement of the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario is necessary to make the same navigable for ocean-going vessels, together with the estimated cost thereof, and report to the Government of the Dominion of Canada and to the Congress of the United States, with its recommendations for cooperation by the United States with the Dominion of Canada in the improvement of said river.

All that commission has to do is to investigate and report. There is nothing in the water-power bill now pending that will interfere, at least, with the work of that commission. That commission must first determine what improvements to make in the river; in the next place they must make an estimate of the cost, and then recommend some plan of cooperation between our Government and that of Canada; in other words, what proportion of the improvements in order to make the St. Lawrence River navigable for ocean vessels must be borne by our country and what proportion must be borne by Canada.

I have not seen all of the St. Lawrence River, but from what little I have seen of it, say, from the eastern end of Lake Ontario as far as the mouth of the Ottawa River, I know it is a great, big, broad stream, full of islands; in fact, in the upper portion, near its outlet into Lake Ontario, there is for miles and miles an archipelago of islands. When it comes to the improvement of that river, the boundary line existing in the thread of the stream, it is not always possible in laying out a scheme of navigation among all the islands in that great river to tell on just which side of the center channel the improvement must be. It may be that a part of it must be on the Canadian side and a part on our side; but, at all events, it strikes me that this is an improvement that ought to be carried on by the United States Government in the interest of ocean navigation.

In order that the water-power commission may have an opportunity to consider this matter, in section 7 of the bill, in the last paragraph, there is this provision:

That whenever, in the judgment of the commission, the development of any project should be undertaken by the United States itself, the commission shall not approve any application for such project by any citizen, association, corporation, State, or municipality, but shall cause to be made such examinations, surveys, reports, plans, and estimates of the cost of the project as it may deem necessary, and shall submit its findings to Congress with such recommendations as it may deem appropriate concerning the construction of such project or completion of any project upon any Government dam by the United States.

Mr. President, I am clearly of the impression that the improvement of this great ocean waterway from Lake Ontario to deep-water navigation below Montreal, on the St. Lawrence River, ought to be undertaken, and, so far as it is undertaken at all from our side of the line, be undertaken by the Federal Government and undertaken in cooperation with the Government of Canada. In the upper reaches of the river, where the Thousand Islands are found, I do not think it is possible that a dam will be erected from the main shore on the American side to the Canadian side. I think water power along the St. Lawrence River will be utilized pretty much after the same fashion or to the same extent as on the Niagara River at Niagara Falls; in other words, it seems to me that the most that can be done in that wide international stream to improve navigation will consist in the building of what are called wing dams, raising the water temporarily on one side, providing a navigable channel and a race to furnish water for any development that is made along that side of the channel.

Under this bill there is created a great water-power commission consisting of the heads of three of the great departments of the Government—the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture. That commission is to pass on all water-power questions in the entire country; and I can not, for the life of me, see any reason why Niagara Falls and the water-power possibilities of the St. Lawrence River should not come under the jurisdiction of the commission. If we leave them outside of the jurisdiction of the commission, we will have to have a special law, and whatever law is enacted we will always be subject to the proprietary rights, the territorial rights of the State of New York.

I recall the decision to which the Senator from New York refers, to the effect that under the Constitution and laws of the United States, outside of the purposes of navigation, the State of New York is entitled to the use of the water up to the boundary line, subject, of course, to the rights of Canada; in other words, our use of that stream must be in cooperation and coordination with the Dominion of Canada, because it is an international watercourse.

We hear much in this discussion about giving away millions of dollars worth of water power; but giving a thing away implies ownership; a man can not give anything away that he does not own; and the people of the various States of the Union, owning the waters within their borders, are entitled to the use of those waters for all purposes except those of navigation. So it is idle, it is mere camouflage, to say that we are giving away millions and millions of dollars of water power to water-power companies. We are giving it away to the people of the States and to their representatives. The Government has not anything to give. It is easy for a man to say, "I will give you this, and I will give you that," when he does not own it; but here the purpose is to assume full and complete ownership over the navigable waters in the United States, and then say, "By the grace of Uncle Sam we will give you this power; we will give you the use of these waters"—give to the people of the States what they themselves own. That seems to me to be a most monstrous doctrine; and yet it is dinned into our ears here, day after day, that there are millions of water powers, and we are giving them away. We are not giving them away. We are giving them to the people of the States for their benefit; and under the provisions of this bill, if the amendment to section 10 is finally adopted, as I hope it will be, we will leave it to the States to say what they will charge for the use of the water, and we will leave it to the States to regulate what charges shall be made for electrical power.

I am in favor of supporting the Federal Government in all matters that strictly pertain to that Government, but I am also utterly opposed to divesting the people of the States of any of the rights given them under the Constitution and laws of the United States. We have been held up here in this discussion by innuendo with obloquy as though we were oblivious to the welfare and the rights of the United States, as though we were negligent in our duties, as though we were suffering the property of the United States to be scattered in a profligate manner to millionaires and to corporations and companies.

Mr. President, I never have been actuated by any spirit of that kind in all my long life, and I am getting too old to fall into that channel at this date. I have always believed that the only way to maintain the Government is to accord just and fair rights to all, rich and poor, to the States and the Federal Government, all within their proper province; and I never have felt like being stampeded because a corporation got some rights that properly belonged to it.

These great corporations are needed for the development of water power, and the obstacle to water-power development that has intervened now for 10 years has created a monopoly in this country by leaving it to those who own now-existing dams. By holding up legislation, by preventing legislation for water-power development for 10 years, those that were fortunate enough to have water powers before that time have had a monopoly of it, and they are anxious to continue the monopoly; and if I were actuated by the same spirit that I see manifested in other quarters, I might insinuate that the men who have these water powers, and who have had them for years, are jealous, and do not want any further legislation; but I shall not do that, Mr. President.

Why should we seek to separate Niagara Falls and the St. Lawrence River? They are water powers, perhaps on a larger scale than anywhere else in the country; but there is no reason why this water-power commission, composed of the heads of three departments, are not competent to pass upon that as well as upon the other water powers. If you do not leave them under this provision, if you do not leave them within the purview of this law, you leave them in the air, as it were, unless you enact some special legislation; and it is difficult to see what legislation you can enact that will be different in its legal effect and its consequences from the legislation involved in this bill.

I have faith that this water-power commission will manage Niagara Falls and the St. Lawrence River development as faithfully and honestly as I believe they will manage all other improvements; and, as I read a moment ago from the provisions of this very bill, whenever the commission come to the conclusion that a great waterway improvement, improving the navigation of the country, should be undertaken by the Federal Government, the commission have a right so to decide and so to determine; and in that case they have no authority to grant a permit or license to anybody, but they are required to send the matter back to Congress.

So, in this case, I can see no want of harmony. If this international commission come to an agreement as to the mode in which the St. Lawrence River should be improved for purposes of ocean navigation, and they determine in their way—and it is doubtful whether they can do it exactly, but approximately—the cost, value, and plan of the improvement, and also agree upon a plan of cooperation with Canada—in other words, agree how much of the cost Canada must bear and how much our country must bear—that is an improvement that ought to be taken up by the Government of the United States and not left in the hands of any private corporation. Those are my honest views in this matter; and I can not for the life of me be imbued with the prejudice that seems to exist here against water powers because they are great and because they involve millions of horsepower.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota throws out the suggestion that it is present water-power interests that are opposing this legislation. I do not believe that my good friend from Minnesota knows just what does lie back of these amendments that have been adopted by the committee. I do not believe that these water-power interests represented in the gallery have been talking with the good Senator from Minnesota; but, nevertheless, they are getting exactly what they want in this bill. They are writing in this bill the provisions that have caused so much discussion here in the Senate during the past two or three days.

I know what I am talking about in regard to the requests that they are making, because some of them have talked with me. I do not blame them for trying to get all the provisions in this bill that they are asking for; but when the Senator from Minnesota suggests that they are opposed to these propositions, it is not true, although the Senator does not know it.

Mr. President, no innuendo has been cast out by me at any point in this discussion, nor do I in the slightest degree reflect upon the integrity or the good faith of the Senator from Minnesota. Nevertheless, Mr. President, with the action of the Senate taken this morning making a perpetual franchise in this bill, if the Senate shall adopt the committee amendment whereby only a nominal compensation is permitted to be charged, I repeat that there is a surrender of the public interest to special privilege in this bill.

Oh, the Senator from Minnesota says that we have nothing that we can charge for; that the United States Government does not own the water. Why, suppose my good friend from Minnesota had received a grant, running away back in the years, that no building could be constructed upon F Street in the city of Washington without the consent of the Senator from Minnesota. I can not imagine the Senator from Minnesota saying, "I do not own that property, and you can have it, and I will not charge you a cent for it." The Senator from Minnesota is too good a business man for that. No one would think in private business of doing what is proposed in this bill, and we are nothing but trustees for the public; and why should we be more liberal with the rights of the people than we would be with our own individual rights? There is not a Senator on this floor who would deal with his own property as he proposes to deal with the people's interests in this bill, if these amendments are adopted.

I said yesterday, Mr. President, that when it comes to denying any special privilege to labor, to those who toil, we find Senators aplenty upon the Senate floor decrying against special privilege. When the antistrike clause in the railroad bill was before the Senate, there was no dearth of Senators declaiming eloquently that labor must have no special privilege or rights; but where are they to-day, when here it is proposed to grant a special privilege to wealth? Their reply is, "If the Government does not want to continue the lease, it can take over the property," and yet every one of them, if it were proposed to do that, would cry, "Socialism!" and vote against it.

Now, getting down to this amendment, I am very much surprised that my good friend from Minnesota, in so far as the St. Lawrence River is concerned, at least, is willing that the commission created by this bill should take jurisdiction of the St. Lawrence River, especially after what was said by the Senator from New York, that under the bill the State of New York itself could apply for a license and develop this water power. The Senator knows that the only opposition that thus far has appeared against the St. Lawrence River project comes from the same State of New York, and the Senator knows that under the provisions of this bill if the State of New York gets a license to develop that water power it is absolutely in conflict with a comprehensive scheme of improvement for ocean navigation. Congress itself can not thereafter, without taking over all that is done and paying for it, develop that waterway for ocean navigation. Is the Senator willing to surrender the control of Congress over that project, in which he and I are so much interested, into the hands of three men, with the power to block for all time the completion of that project, that means so much to his State and to mine?

Oh, the Senator says that there is a provision in the bill that if the commission deem that the Federal Government should improve this waterway they shall not grant a license, but report to Congress; but if the commission deem that it should be improved through private license, what power has Congress thereafter over it? What good will be done by a report of a joint commission that there shall be joint cooperation between Canada and the United States for the improvement of this waterway? By this bill Congress divests itself of power and jurisdiction to do that itself and delegates it to three men, and if the State of New York wishes to defeat this project all it has to do is to get two of the three commissioners to grant a license either to the State of New York or to some private utility corporation there, and then good-by to your ocean waterway from Montreal to Lake Ontario, making the Great Lakes admissible for ocean-going steamships.

Mr. President, for the reasons that I have given, this amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I offer an amendment and ask that it be read and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). The Secretary will read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of section 8, page 15, line 7, insert the following:

Provided further, That the United States may have the option to redeem such site or sites by payment to the proper persons holding such title under and by virtue of such mortgage, trust deed, conditional sale, or tax certificate of the entire amount due at the time such option applies for a period of one year from the date such right or title is secured, and if said option is acted upon all rights to such lease or license shall revert to the United States.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I do not think that amendment should be adopted. That provision of the bill was amended this morning by an amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. The amendment relates to this paragraph of the bill:

SEC. 8. That no voluntary transfer of any license, or of the rights thereunder granted, shall be made without the written approval of the commission—and any successor or assign of the rights of such licensee, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, foreclosure sale, or otherwise shall be subject to all the conditions of the license under which such rights are held by such licensee and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original licensee hereunder: Provided, That a mortgage or trust deed or judicial sales made thereunder or under tax sales shall not be deemed voluntary transfers within the meaning of this section.

That part of it was amended, too. It continues—

That proviso was amended by an amendment of the Senator from New York, requiring that the mortgage or trust deed must be made in good faith, as I remember it. I can see no good of leaving authority for the Federal Government to come in and redeem the trust deed or mortgage unless the Government takes over the entire plant. If you leave the plant in the hands of the original owner or the assignee, it will accomplish no good to have a redemption of the mortgage, because it would simply compel the Government to invest a lot of money, and all the Government could hope to do would be to have its rights subrogated to the rights of the assignee or the general owner. I can see no good in the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I do not see that the amendment of the Senator from New York touches the point at all. The amendment does not compel the Government to do anything. It simply gives the Government an option to redeem, the same as a mortgagee or anybody else would have, and as I see it, it prevents a great many at least of these powers going into the hands of one great corporation. I am not particular as to the language. I do not know much about water powers, or anything of that kind, but I know that under the provisions of the bill, where it exempts, as it necessarily would have to exempt titles obtained by mortgages or trust deeds, there is a great chance that a large number of the water powers in the United States will naturally drift into the hands of some great corporations. Those mortgages, trust deeds, and that class of securities would naturally have to be exempted under the provisions of that section, as I understand it; otherwise they would not be able to raise any funds; and all that I ask by my amendment is that the Government be given a chance to redeem from sale, by paying the amount of the mortgage or trust deed, interest and expenses, the same as anyone else would have to do. I think, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota, that it is a very important provision to have in the bill.

Mr. NELSON. The trouble with it is that it would not make the Government, even if it redeemed, the owner of the property.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do not understand why we should not vest in the Government the same power it would vest in the man who held the mortgage and foreclosed it. I do not see why we should not permit the Government to stand in the same position as to title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask if a vote is about to be taken on the amendment I offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be taken on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, but the Senate must first reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted.

Mr. NELSON. I take it the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is pending. That has not been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is offered to an amendment of the committee already agreed to. The vote by which the amendment of the committee was adopted will have to be reconsidered.

Mr. HARRISON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. NELSON. That is a motion to reconsider the paragraph on page 4?

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 4, beginning on line 15, the committee propose to strike out all of lines 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21 and to insert the matter printed in italics defining what "navigable waters" means, down to and including line 9 on page 5, which has already been agreed to. The Senator from Mississippi proposes now to amend that amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I would suggest to the Senator that he can offer it as an independent proposition, without reconsidering the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent for the purpose of considering my amendment, that the committee amendment be reconsidered.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to reconsidering it for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the question then comes on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 5, line 9, after the word "authority," at the end of the committee amendment, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to the waters of the St. Lawrence or the Niagara Rivers.

Mr. NELSON. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] and withhold my vote.

Mr. NEWBERRY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], which I tarnsfer to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). Mr. President, I have a pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], which I transfer to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote "nay."

I desire to announce that upon the vote upon the committee amendment to insert the words "which is accepted" I voted without announcing my pair, not noticing the absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. If I may do so, I will allow my vote to stand with this announcement.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. In his absence I withold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (after having voted in the negative). I voted in the absence of my pair, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STERLING (after having voted in the negative). Has the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. STERLING. I have a pair with that Senator. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is absent from the city on official business, and that the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is necessarily absent from the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	McKellar	Sherman
Dial	Kenyon	Nugent	Trammell
Gerry	Lenroot	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Harrison	McCormick	Sheppard	Williams

NAYS—40.

Bankhead	Henderson	Newberry	Spencer
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Sterling
Chamberlain	King	Phelan	Sutherland
Dillingham	Kirby	Phipps	Thomas
Fernald	Lodge	Poindexter	Underwood
France	McNary	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Gay	Moses	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Gronna	Myers	Smith, Ga.	Warren
Hale	Nelson	Smith, Md.	Watson

Cummins	Johnson, Calif.	Owen	Swanson
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Page	Townsend
Edge	Kellogg	Penrose

So Mr. HARRISON's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. NELSON. The Senate reconsidered the amendment that had already been adopted. I now ask for its adoption again.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have learned with very considerable consternation that while I was down at lunch to-day the Senate adopted an amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] under which the commission created by the bill is authorized and directed to proceed to develop the Great Falls water power on the Potomac River at a cost not to exceed $25,000,000, and that it was accepted without any discussion to any extent and without any dissent.

I rise to give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote on that amendment in the Senate. I desire to say briefly in this connection that it has always occurred to me as a most remarkable thing that the water power out there was not developed and put to some good use. I thought it strange. If it was out in our part of the country, it would never lie there undeveloped, and yet right here at the very doors of the Capital it does. In our part of the country some private enterprise would long ago have taken hold of it and developed it. It looks to me as if it is a most inviting project.

I had a conversation a short time ago with an engineer of very great ability and capacity and very great experience, who told me he had made a careful study of the project for interests that desired to develop it, and that by reason of the fact that there was no storage it could not be developed profitably except to the capacity of the stream in the season of low water, unless by a supplementary steam plant that would supply the needs in the season of low water. I do not know whether he is right or wrong about it, but I remember very distinctly that as early as 1914, probably in 1913, the whole subject was presented very elaborately to the Senate by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

I was very much taken by the proposition as then presented by the Senator, but, Mr. President, a report that was made prior to the year 1914 which disclosed that the property would be developed and made productive is of no significance now. Things have changed wonderfully since that time. The cost of installation of the plant has been increased as a matter of course with the increasing cost of everything. The interest that must be paid upon the money necessary to develop the property as a matter of course has been increased. A report from an engineer that prior to the year 1914 this property could be developed and made profitable and made a paying enterprise would not justify us in ordering the enterprise to be conducted at this time at all.

I thought that what would be done with reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska would be to direct the commission to inquire and make a report to Congress about the advisability under existing conditions of making the improvement at the public expense. I believe that that would be commendable, but I can not believe that the Senate of the United States, upon the presentation that has been made to it, would want to go on record as willing to spend now $25,000,000 in the development of a plant without some further evidence that under existing conditions it can be made a profitable enterprise.

Mr. NELSON. I would suggest to the Senator from Montana that if he desires to make the motion to reconsider it, we can take it up in the morning.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I move now to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. NELSON. I move——

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the Senator yield for a moment? I wish to offer an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer an amendment which I ask may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suppose that nobody wants to pay $25,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States in connection with the Niagara project. I equally suppose that a great many people in the United States want to know something about this particular question, and I merely wanted to rise for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to the question at issue and asking each Senator to consider that independently of all the general questions which are at stake. It seems to me that this is a very important point, and if we are going to take care of the interests of the people at large as against the interests of the people who may fall heir to these licenses, or whatever you may choose to call them, we ought to think about it three times before we vote.

I have long since lost interest in the ordinary machinery of politics; I do not care anything about it; I contemn and despise it; but there are times when men ought to stop and think a while before they vote.

I find at this present moment that there are five Republican Senators present and that there are six Democratic Senators present. Those 11 Senators have heard the argument; none of the others has. This is a fair sample of the utility of the United States Senate to the people of the United States. Eleven Senators, five on one side and six on the other side, represent the two great parties here who are undertaking to determine very important industrial propositions; and this is a very important industrial proposition.

Mr. President, I withdraw my last remarks. There are two more Republicans who have come in since I made the reference. I ask that they be recorded. That is about the way the United States Senate, the fifth wheel in the Government of this country, is carrying itself. It is not paying any attention to its public business; I am not paying any attention to mine as a Member of this august body; nobody else is. Old Benjamin Franklin was about right when he said this was the fifth wheel and ought to be dispensed with. The American people are gradually rising to the height of demanding the abolition of the United States Senate simply because the United States Senate does not function; it does not operate.

Do you know, Mr. President, I feel almost tempted to demand the presence of a quorum in order to determine the pending proposition? I will not do so, because that would be unclublike, and I am a member of this club.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 14, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 13, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, for the spirit of good implanted in the soul of man which is ever struggling for supremacy. The most licentious admires purity in another. The most dishonest admires honesty in another. The consummate liar admires truth in another. We hold sacred the Bible not as a fetish but because it contains the fundamental principles of right, and truth, and justice. Every utterance of the prophet, sage, or exponent of righteousness appeals to all that is best in man.

We cherish the utterances of the Master. Every parable lives, because it finds a response in the heart. The Sermon on the Mount is immortal because it reaches the soul and inspires godliness.

Inspire us day by day with this holy truth and give us the courage to live it. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REQUEST TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Berger case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Berger case. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I object. The gentleman from New York would not let Mr. Berger be heard.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3681. An act to amend section 848, chapter 16, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to witness fees;

S. 3696. An act to change the time for holding court in Laurinburg, eastern district of North Carolina;

S. 3566. An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," approved February 5, 1917;

S. 3384. An act to provide for burial and expenses of transportation of remains of certain officers and enlisted men of the reserve forces of the United States;

S. 3386. An act to provide for the assistance of civilian aviators in distress by authorizing the Secretary of War to sell at cost price at aviation posts or stations gasoline, oil, and aircraft supplies to persons in charge of civilian aircraft landing upon or near said post;

S. 3385. An act to authorize the War Department to restore the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park to its condition prior to use for military purposes during the war with Germany, and to appropriate the necessary funds therefor;

S. 3387. An act for the relief of dependents of Lieuts. Jean Jagou and Fernand Herbert, French military mission to the United States; and

S. J. Res. 102. Joint resolution to equalize the pay and allowances of commissioned officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Coast Guard with those of the Navy.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 3681. An act to amend section 848, chapter 16, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to witness fees; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3386. An act to provide for the assistance of civilian aviators in distress by authorizing the Secretary of War to sell at cost price at aviation posts or stations gasoline, oil, and aircraft supplies to persons in charge of civilian aircraft landing upon or near said posts; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3696. An act to change the time for holding court in Laurinburg, eastern district of North Carolina; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3566. An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," approved February 5, 1917; to the Committee on Immigration.

S. 3384. An act to provide for burial and expenses of transportation of remains of certain officers and enlisted men of the reserve forces of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3387. An act for the relief of dependents of Lieuts. Jean Jagou and Fernand Herbert, French military mission to the United States; to the Committee on War Claims.

S. J. Res. 102. Joint resolution to equalize the pay and allowances of commissioned officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Coast Guard with those of the Navy; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ARMY DISTINGUISHED-SERVICE MEDAL.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the resolution H. Res. 428, and that it be placed upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from further consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 428.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the following facts in his possession incident to the awarding of the distinguished-service medal to certain officers and enlisted men of the United States Army and to civilians on account of distinguished or meritorious service during the World War:

(1) A complete list of officers and men recommended to receive these awards by their superior officers, together with the citation recommended in each instance and the specific act or acts on which the recommendations were based.

(2) A complete list of the civilians recommended to receive these awards by any official or board of officials, together with the citation in each instance and the specific act or acts on which the recommendations were based.

(3) A list of the names of the officers constituting the board or boards which passed upon the recommendations or made the awards of distinguished-service medals, whether sitting in Chaumont or Paris or London or Washington, D. C.

(4) A list of the names, if any, of the officers sitting on such boards who awarded distinguished-service medals to themselves or their colleagues.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we ought to pass on a question of this importance without a quorum. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms wil notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Eagan	Humphreys	O'Connor
Anthony	Eagle	Hutchinson	Oldfield
Aswell	Evans, Mont.	Johnson, Wash.	Rayburn
Bell	Ferris	Kennedy, Iowa	Riordan
Benson	Fess	Kennedy, R. I.	Rowan
Bland, Ind.	Flood	Kitchin	Rowe
Booher	Focht	Kreider	Rucker
Bowers	Fuller, Mass.	Langley	Sanders, La.
Britten	Gandy	Layton	Scott
Browning	Ganly	Lesher	Scully
Brumbaugh	Goldfogle	Linthicum	Small
Byrns, Tenn.	Goodall	McCulloch	Smith, Idaho
Candler	Graham, Pa.	McDuffie	Snell
Carew	Griffin	McFadden	Strong, Pa.
Cleary	Hamill	McKenzie	Sullivan
Costello	Hamilton	McKeown	Taylor, Ark.
Crowther	Hardy, Colo.	McPherson	Taylor, Tenn.

Dempsey	Hill	Moon, Tenn.	Walters
Dooling	Howard	Neely	Welty
Doremus	Hudspeth	Nicholls, S. C.	Wilson, La.
Dupré	Hulings	Nichols, Mich.	Woodyard

The SPEAKER. On this call 335 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the consideration of House resolution 428.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I understand this motion is not debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will make that ten minutes, so that in case I desire to use the time I have may five minutes.

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may address the House for five minutes and that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] may address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is clearly privileged.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask that the resolution be reported.

The SPEAKER. It has been reported once. Without objection, the resolution will be reported again.

Mr. KAHN. This will not be taken out of my time?

The SPEAKER. Of course not.

The Clerk read the resolution again.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the resolution is clearly privileged. It calls for information for the use of the Members of the House. The Committee on Military Affairs considered the resolution but thought it advisable to find out from the War Department about how much time it would require to get the information and how much clerical help would be involved in furnishing it. I took up the matter with the Secretary of War a day or two after the resolution was introduced. The Secretary told me that he would furnish me that information and let me know just exactly what was involved in those particulars. I have not heard from the Secretary since, and, of course, I am not able to give the House any information as to how many clerks it would take to get this information or how many volumes of reports they would have to go through in order to furnish it. I think the information should be given to Congress, and I have no objection to the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that I am recognized for one hour?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to be recognized for one hour.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that if there is any Member of the House who may feel inclined to oppose this resolution, that I will gladly yield some time to him before I have finished. I desire to be notified when I have consumed 45 minutes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the attention of the House very closely to what I have to say, because I can assure the House that I am not going to make any political speech or any political attack on anyone.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to note particularly that my resolution makes no reference to the awards of the distinguished-service cross. Many of the bravest of our boys, both officers and enlisted men, received this decoration for the performance of a service of unusual character and for exceptional bravery in the presence of the enemy.

The criticism to be made in awarding the distinguished-service cross is that of lack of uniformity on the part of the commanding officers in making recommendations, this lack of uniformity arising out of the different viewpoints of the several officers commanding troops as to who should and who should not be designated for having performed an unusual service under fire. It is known, however, that many recommendations for the distinguished-service cross never received favorable action. If there is to be any general investigation of the manner of making awards for distinguished service, whether that service be in the nature of the performance of administrative duty or of actual fighting on the battle front, then this investigation should include that of ascertaining the reasons why favorable action was taken on some recommendations and other recommendations were set aside. There is one feature, however, in the awarding of distinguished-service crosses which should be closely looked into by any committee making an investigation of the award of medals, and that is where these medals have been awarded to aides and special staff officers of high commanders whose posts of command were in rear of the battle lines. It is a notable fact that many line officers who commanded troops in the front-line trenches, exposed to the fire of the enemy for 24 hours a day, received no recognition, while staff officers who for various reasons may have visited the front lines for very brief periods of time were rewarded because of "exceptional bravery in the presence of the enemy."

DISTINGUISHED-SERVICE MEDAL.

The awarding of the distinguished-service medal—that is, D. S. M.—often referred to by the Army as the "desk" service medal, is the subject of most severe criticism by practically every member of the United States military service, except, of course, the favored few who have because of friends at court received them. It would be manifestly unfair to broadly state, however, that none of these medals have been meritoriously awarded. This medal, which should be respected by the entire service, has been awarded to many splendid officers and men, but it has been cheapened, even dishonored and certainly ridiculed, by the bold and brazen manner in which it has been passed out to those who belong to the elect. It has been used as a reward for friendship, regardless of the service of the recipient. It has even been used to placate those who have been removed to make way for some one else. Furthermore, it is believed that practically every member of the General Staff here in Washington has been awarded one of these medals, regardless of the character of service performed, and, mark you, I desire to include in this statement those assigned to the General Staff for temporary duty.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I prefer not to yield until I have concluded.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I simply want to know if these men were ever overseas.

Mr. GALLIVAN. No, sir; not the men I refer to.

The reading of the sum total of the citations in awarding the distinguished-service medal to swivel-chair officers of the General Staff, who never left Washington during the war, if believed, would certainly impress one with the fact that the war was fought with red ink at mahogany desks near the shadows of Washington Monument rather than in the Argonne and St. Mihiel sectors. If there is an officer of the General Staff who served in Washington during the war and who did not receive one of these medals, he must feel like a gray horse in a barnyard full of mules. [Laughter.]

Surely the "lounge lizards" of the "Second Army of the Potomac" can have no quarrel with their comrades, the "lobby lanciers" of the Capitol, as to the number of D. S. M.'s these two valiant units received for heroic service in this war. Scarcely a single one of them has been passed over.

As for France, wherever the commander in chief sent a "commissioned messenger boy" on an errand the D. S. M. was sure to be the reward. Napoleon said, "Every private carries a field marshal's baton in his knapsack." Gen. Pershing might have said, "Every staff officer and aid, with proper credentials as to standing with the elite, carries a D. S. M. in his messenger's case."

The "boulevard shock troops" of Paris and Chaumont and Tours can take oath as to the truth of the foregoing words. Scarcely a single member of that wonderful outfit but has received a special glorification by the placing of a distinguished service medal on his manly chest.

But let us return to Washington for the moment. We had four different Chiefs of Staff here in Washington during the period we were at war with Germany. Everyone who knows anything at all about the workings of the War Department knows that the predecessors to the present high priest of Prussianism, Gen. Peyton C. March, were considered unequal to the task. Through one pretense or another they were removed. Ordinarily when a man has failed in the performance of any specific task he is removed without reward. This, however, has not been true with reference to the removal of inefficients from their posts in Washington. These men have, on the other hand, been rewarded in the name of the President of the United States by the bestowal upon them of the distinguished-service medal. Whatever the answer may be for this action the fact remains that these men were here on duty in Washington and were tried out in the posts and were removed from their functions and transferred elsewhere.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I do not care to yield now unless the gentleman wants to make some assertion that should come in here.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman refers to Gen. Bliss. Gen. Bliss was sent to France and functioned with the war commission; he functioned in France after January 18, 1918. During the balance of the war he was not here to perform the duty of Chief of Staff, and that is why another Chief of Staff was appointed in his place.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Gen. Bliss was removed long before he went to France. I may be in error about that, but that is my recollection, that he was removed before he went with the President.

Mr. KAHN. I think the gentleman will find that he went to France to serve over there, and Gen. Biddle was appointed Acting Chief of Staff while Gen. Bliss was in Europe. Gen. Biddle was then superseded.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have not mentioned the name of Gen. Bliss. It is the distinguished chairman of the Military Committee who has brought names into the discussion.

Here are some quotations from the citations making the award of the distinguished-service medal to these men, no doubt honorable officers and of long and faithful service but unequal to the great task with which they were confronted. It is not my purpose to dwell too much in personalities in attempting to right a great wrong to loyal and faithful service. For this reason, names are not connected with the quotations of citations. Those who are interested may readily identify the officers concerned.

Quoting from citations relating to ex-Chiefs of Staff to whom the official action was tied:

For his most exceptional services as Assistant Chief of Staff, Acting Chief of Staff, and Chief of Staff of the United States Army, in which important positions his administrative ability and professional attainments were of great value to our armies.

Here is a quotation from the citation to another deposed chief, who became a charter member of that very much ridiculed body referred to in the Army as the "old women's knitting club"—the war council:

For exceptionally meritorious and conspicuous service as Chief of Staff in advocating and persistently urging the adoption of the selective-service law.

To a third, "* * * Who sat at the desk of the Chief of Staff * * *," weighed in the balance and found wanting, was given a distinguished-service medal, but some one's conscience must have been temporarily revived for no reference is made to his former duties while in the Chief of Staff's chair, but the citation is confined wholly to handing him a bunch of posies for service far away from the scene of active warfare.

The Kaiser, with some spark of appreciation for consistency, yet alive, said, "Me und Gott." Not so your Chief of Staff, United States Army, Peyton C. March, who sees no reason for including "Gott." It is simply "Me" with him. He naturally asks where this "Gott" comes in. Now, here is what is said, in the name of the President of the United States, of the man for whom no officer or soldier ever speaks a word except in contempt; the man whom the Regular Army believes has brought the entire service into disrepute and has destroyed the splendid morale of that once proud and loyal Army:

Gen. March (then major general, United States Army), as commanding general of the Army Artillery of the First Army from October 4, 1917, to January 31, 1918, initiated and prepared the plans for the organization of the Artillery of the American Army in France; as Acting Chief of Staff of the United States Army from March 2, 1918, to May 20, 1918, and as Chief of Staff of the United States Army (general, United States Army) after May 20, 1918, he performed with intelligence, zeal, and patriotic devotion duties of inestimable value in the development, the direction, and the carrying into effect of the military program of the United States.

No further comment is necessary. One is almost attempted to believe that the language is that of the Almighty High himself, for it is hardly possible that there is anyone in the military service who would voluntarily express himself in such laudatory terms—certainly no one except under orders.

In France there was a board of awards of medals that sat in Chaumont and looked with easy favor on giving awards to their friends, and with blind eyes and deaf ears to recommendations of those without the pale. The grand chief of this board is said to have been one "Davis," brigadier general, appointed to that grade over the heads of many senior officers of distinguished service; he was also adjutant general of the American Expeditionary Forces. Of course Davis has a medal, and it is also said that every other member of this famous medal board has a distinguished-service medal. For the sake of sparing the blushes and embarrassment of those very modest young men, it is said that each one was excused in turn from attendance at the sessions of the board while his remaining colleagues extolled him on his merits and wound up by reluctantly—because of the embarrassment to him—awarding, in the name of the President of the United States, a distinguished-service medal. Here are just a few extracts from citations in placing the distinguished-service medal on these manly breasts:

For exceptional and meritorious and distinguished services as adjutant general of the American Expeditionary Forces; he has performed his exacting duties with high professional skill and administrative ability. The exceptional efficiency of the Adjutant General's Department under his direction was a material factor in the success of the staff work at general headquarters.

It was this "efficiency" that sent officers all over France looking for their regiments, and in some instances traveling many miles to join their organizations, only to learn on arrival that the vacancy to which they had been sent had been filled many days before. This "efficiency" was marked by the rule of the martinet, for "Cockey" Davis was at the helm. The same "efficiency" is yet on exhibition at heaquarters American Expeditionary Forces here in Washington. If you want any information just try the office of the American Expeditionary Forces, where Davis, a junior, many, many numbers below distinguished officers who are now majors and lieutenant colonels, yet retains his status of brigadier general by the grace of the former commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces.

Here is another member of the famous medal board. They had to try it twice on him before it would take. Here is the first effort to justify the use of the President's name:

For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services. By his untiring efforts, his great ability, and his devotion to duty he has rendered most conspicuous services to the Government as deputy chief of staff of the American Expeditionary Forces.

That was the best that could be done extemporaneously, but it did not sound like much, so they took another whack at it:

For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services. As a member of the operations section, general staff, General Headquarters, American Expeditionary Forces, he exhibited sound military judgment and foresight in drafting important plans. Later as deputy chief of staff of the American Expeditionary Forces throughout the period of active operations and thereafter he discharged the important and complex duties of his position with admirable efficiency, and by his untiring efforts and devotion to duty rendered conspicuous service to the Government.

Here is the man who after the armistice kept our 2,000,000 men in France performing maneuvers, regardless of weather, regardless of clothing, regardless of character of billets and of food. This is the man whom 2,000,000 Yanks have to thank for those trying times during the early winter of 1918–19, when for hours they plodded knee-deep in mud, often inadequately shod, cold to the skin, participating in a so-called training schedule. Note the following:

For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services. In charge of the training section of the general staff, this brilliant officer perfected and administered the efficient scheme of instruction through which the American Army in France was thoroughly trained for combat in the shortest possible time. By his great depth of vision, his foresight, and his clear conception of modern tactical training he has enabled our forces to enter each engagement with that preparedness and efficiency that have distinguished the American Army in each battle.

What does the returning Yank think of that sentence which reads: "He enabled our forces to enter each engagement with that preparedness and efficiency that have distinguished the American Army in each battle"? Oh, that the thousands of American dead who were forced into the battle front without ever having fired a military rifle, with few weeks' military training of any character, could shout an answer from their poppy-covered graves in France!

Concerning another member of this board of immortals, as his friends thought, the quotation of the citation is expressed in the following manner when the distinguished-service medal is pinned by caressing hands to a blouse wrinkled through leaning over a desk:

For exceptionally meritorious and conspicuous services as assistant chief of staff. He handled with great executive ability and rare understanding all problems of equipping and supplying the large numbers of American troops arrived and operating in France, and by his large grasp of supply problems and tireless energy he has conspicuously aided the successful administration of the supply department.

Now for a few cases from several hundred pages devoted to placation, adulation, and admiration in Washington and in France:

For especially meritorious and conspicuous service in administering The Adjutant General's Department during the early period of the war. Through his efficient management this department was able to meet the excessive burdens placed upon it.

This is a case where the medal was given to a deserving man, not with the purpose of rewarding merit, but for the purpose of placating an officer who, because of his opposition to the plans of the General Staff to assume the administration of the entire Army, was conveniently dropped out of the office of that of The Adjutant General of the Army and assigned to the command of a division. Anyone having an intimate knowledge of the reasons underlying the change in the head of The Adjutant General's office can not help but smile when reading this citation conferring the distinguished-service medal upon a worthy and distinguished officer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have many more citations here which I will not read but I will ask unanimous consent to insert them in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, what does the gentleman intend to insert?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Citations which have been awarded in general orders of the War Department.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is criticizing the exercise of discretion of the war officers in awarding these medals?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman mention their names?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I announced at the start that I would mention no names, with one or two exceptions, and I have not.

Mr. WINGO. Does not the gentleman think it would serve a more practical purpose if he would point out these instances and give the names of the men?

Mr. GALLIVAN. If the gentleman objects, I will read them.

Mr. WINGO. Unless the gentleman can specify the citations and give the names of the men——

Mr. GALLIVAN. I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, that objection comes from the Democratic side of the House when there is no politics in it. When these cases come up somehow or other the objection always comes from the Democratic side.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Democratic side——

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman from Alabama is not in order. I have not yielded to him.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Democratic side is getting very weary of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I have not yielded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). The gentleman declines to yield. The gentleman from Alabama is out of order.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Here is the man whose attitude toward the National Guard officers of the Field Artillery is known to have been antagonistic and who attempted to institute such a high standard of technical qualifications as to eliminate a large number of these officers:

For especially meritorious and conspicuous service in planning and executing those measures responsible for the efficiency of the Field Artillery during the war.

Another officer whose services probably have contributed more to discontent on the part of the commissioned personnel of the Army than that of any other officer in the service, excepting the Chief of Staff, is the head of the personnel section, who formerly was secretary to the Chief of Staff and who was rapidly passed from grade of major to that of brigadier general and placed at the head of the personnel section of the General Staff.

For especially meritorious and conspicuous service as secretary of the General Staff and in the organization and coordination of matters relating to the commissioned personnel of the Army.

If any investigation is to be made of the awarding of distinguished-service medals, it is certainly urged that especial attention be given to this case, and also that of the former Chief of the Tank Corps. Here is what they say of him:

For especially meritorious and conspicuous service in the organization and administration of the Tank Corps.

If investigation is made of these cases, there is no doubt in the mind of anyone familiar with the work performed by these two officers as to what the result will be.

We find another officer who was on duty during the entire period of the war as a messenger between the General Staff and the foreign officers. They gave his function the high-sounding name of "liaison officer." His citation reads:

For exceptionally meritorious and conspicuous service. While on duty as liaison officer between the War Department and the foreign military missions he displayed the greatest discretion and ability and contributed materially to the successful conduct of military-diplomatic relations between the War Department and the allied military missions.

Now, listen to this one:

For exceptionally meritorious and conspicuous service; for duty rendered in the office of the Surgeon General as Chief, Air Service Division.

Then we have a medal bestowed on an officer for the following happy service:

* * * At the beginning of the war he was placed in charge of the physical training in officers' training camps.

There are other nice things said about this officer, but the above is the gist of the citation.

Mr. Speaker, I approach the next case with some trepidation lest I be accused of some political intent. I assure the House that my speech has no political significance. I am trying to correct an evil which has shattered the morale of our Army almost beyond redemption. Whether the passage of this resolution and a subsequent investigation will bring about the necessary reforms is a matter of speculation. May I now refer to an especial case of international notoriety?

Gen. Leonard Wood, as everyone knows, was considered by the Army as one of its most capable officers and the only officer on the active list of the service who had exercised a high command. He was never given an important active command during the period of the war. However, in order to placate public opinion something must be done in recognition of the service. The bestowal of the distinguished-service medal on Gen. Wood is hardly approved by the entire military service, I am told, although I do not agree with the opposition, but the reason for such bestowal looks like an interrogation point in the minds of everyone who has a knowledge of Gen. Wood's treatment. This is the way the citation reads:

For especially meritorious and conspicuous service as a department, division, and camp commander during the war. He has displayed qualities of leadership and professional attainments of a high order in the administration and training of his various commands and has furthered in every way during the war the system of officers' training schools.

Here is another notable and interesting incident in the awards of decorations:

Maj. Gen. John F. Morrison was returned from France for the purpose of assuming charge of the training program in the United States. He established offices with the General Staff in Washington, but for some mysterious reasons suddenly disappeared and was given an outside command. It was generally understood that Gen. Morrison was not in sympathy with the General Staff's program, and because of this lack of harmony was either removed or voluntarily asked to be removed from his duties. Whatever the underlying facts may be, Gen. Morrison was awarded a distinguished-service medal for:

Exceptionally meritorious and conspicuous service as department commander, Western Department, in handling with great skill, tact, and sound judgment many difficult problems arising in his department.

During the early part of the war one of the problems confronting those officers in the War Department who were opposed to National Guard officers holding high rank was how to get rid of them. Some one conceived the brilliant idea of organizing "A Brigade and Field Officers' School." Such a school was approved and was located at San Antonio, Tex. The idea was a good one provided the satisfactory man could be secured to head this school. Such a man was found in the person of one Thomas B. Dugan, brigadier general of the Regular Army, hard-boiled and firm, with very definite ideas as to the proper place of a National Guard officer. To Gen. Dugan were sent many field officers of the National Guard whose attendance at that famous institution, the Brigade and Field Officers' School, marked the end of their military careers. This school was often referred to by the Army as the "canning factory." Dugan was afterwards given command of an infantry brigade in France, and later was in command of the division. He was given a distinguished-service medal, but tactfully no reference was made in his citation to his former functions as the head of the "canning factory" in San Antonio:

For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services. He commanded the Seventieth Infantry Brigade during a part of the Meuse-Argonne offensive with great distinction and marked ability. By his painstaking energy, zeal, and great initiative he proved to be a material factor in the successes of the division.

It should be noted in this connection that the officers in Washington who approved in the name of the President of the United States and Secretary of War the discharge from the service of many National Guard officers were also rewarded with the distinguished-service medal.

And what shall I say of the notorious Bamford, who for 23 days was in command of the famous fighting Twenty-sixth Division, composed of New England's best and bravest boys in the National Guard? This man was removed after less than three weeks' command because of his bungling and brutality.

Bamford had gone to France as a captain, but because he was a favorite with the Leavenworth clique he had been advanced to the rank of brigadier general. When gallant Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, who had organized this wonderful fighting force and had led it overseas, who had rubbed elbows with even the lowliest private in his outfit and had lived with his men in trench and in hut, declined to do the dirty work of removing from their commands many brave officers from New England, whose only offense was that they were National Guard graduates, Bamford was sent up to take command of the division just before the armistice was signed, and he immediately proceeded to wreck its personnel by removing Brig. Gen. Charles H. Cole, of the Fifty-second Brigade; Col. Edward L. Logan, of the One hundred and first Infantry; Col. Hume, of the One hundred and third Infantry, and five other field officers. Frederick Palmer tells you in his book how thoroughly this wrecker—Bramford—did the job assigned to him, and yet when every officer so removed demanded a hearing and the outrage committed had been aired in Congress, the American "high command" in Chaumont ordered these officers returned to duty and every man of them came back to America in charge of his original outfit. Yet, Bramford received a distinguished-service medal. So, too, another in that division, Lieut. Col. Duncan K. Major, an officer loathed by every man in the outfit, and charged with disloyalty from the beginning to Maj. Gen. Edwards, was decorated with the distinguished-service medal. You may not know it but when the Twenty-sixth Division received orders to embark for home early in 1919, with its home port to be Boston, where the infamy of this man—Major—had been thoroughly advertised, he immediately requested a transfer because he did not dare to return to the city whose sons he had attempted to disgrace.

Who else in the Yankee Division are specially favored? Brig. Gen. Glassford, a regular; Col. Hiram I. Bearss, originally of the Marines; Col. Morris E. Locke, a regular. But, so far as I am able to learn, not an officer or man with the single exception of a second lieutenant, whose valor could not be overlooked—a lad named Reece—who went over and stayed with the division from the beginning to the end of its service was awarded a distinguished-service medal. Think of it, gentlemen! But five medals to a division through which there must have passed almost 50,000 men from the day it first set foot in the Chemin-des-Dames in February, 1918, until it finished its heroic work at 11 o'clock in the morning of November 11, 1918! Shame on the men who would deprive those who fought their best, under our colors, of merited decorations solely because those in power hated the commander of the Yankee Division!

But I have a few more interesting types among those selected for special preferment. We find an officer rewarded for performing, among other things:

* * * Due to his foresight and energy our armies in the field were at all times supplied abundantly with excellent maps of the theater of operations.

We find another officer decorated, because " * * * he revealed marked ability in the inspection of conduct and methods and showed military tactical knowledge of a high order."

We find another officer decorated because " * * * he organized and coordinated the several activities of the salvage depot at St. Pierre de Corps," and so forth.

We find that another officer engaged in the Services of Supply is decorated for: "* * * Under his administration the supply of troops, care of property, and the operation of the quartermaster depot at Gievere showed an excellent degree of efficiency."

Another officer gets the medal for performing "* * * the important duty of administering the Supplies Division of the Quartermaster Department of the American Expeditionary Forces."

Another quartermaster swells his chest to receive the medal because "* * * as quartermaster at Langres and at the regulating station at Is-sur-Tille his energy and thorough knowledge of methods and standards of supply have been of the greatest value to the Government."

Another officer gets the medal for "* * * most excellent service as a member of the United States Aeronautical Commission, charged with the selection of types of European aeronautical material to be manufactured in the United States."

Another case, and the special attention of the returned Yanks is invited to this case, for this is the gentleman who is responsible for the prompt delivery of letters from home. The specific information about this gentleman was given me by an officer returned from France who was in the American Expeditionary Forces three months before he received his first letter from his people in the United States. Listen to this:

For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services. As chief of the Postal Express Service, he organized and administered with marked ability the postal service of the American Expeditionary Forces. He displayed great breadth of vision and untiring zeal in overcoming the many obstacles that were encountered in the organization of the service of handling mail for our troops in Europe.

We find a colonel of The Adjutant General's Office had been decorated because "* * * he displayed unusual skill and untiring zeal in organizing and administering the Statistical Division of The Adjutant General's Office."

The mothers of the United States who received notices of the death of their sons when they were not killed and of their safety when they had been killed will appreciate the following language used in bestowing the distinguished-service medal on a lieutenant colonel of the United States Army: "* * * He handled the complex problems constantly arising with great discretion, displaying keen perception amid the maze of details involved in the reporting of casualties and changes of status of officers and soldiers. With unflagging energy and exceptional ability he performed a task of great magnitude."

Among the many officers who were rewarded for services in "the Battle of Paris" is that of a lieutenant colonel who was decorated for rendering exceptionally valuable service in connection with the selection of Signal Corps equipment.

The prohibitionists will appreciate the distinguished honor bestowed upon a colonel of the United States Army who now wears upon his proud and protruding chest the D. S. M. because he was "* * * responsible for the plentiful supply of pure drinking water to the combat troops."

Another officer, with the rank of lieutenant colonel, is given the D. S. M. because he "* * * was in charge of the locomotive and car repair shops at Nevers, and he carried out the installation and operation of this plant, exhibiting rare executive ability and engineering qualifications of the highest order."

We find another officer, a major in the service, receiving a medal "* * * by displaying untiring energy and enthusiasm in the performance of his important duties he developed efficient gas discipline in the Thirty-second Division, resulting in the prevention of gas fatalities."

We find that all of the personal aids of the commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces have been decorated, and it is also noted, in reading over the orders publishing the citations and the award of these medals, that three of the personal aids of the commander in chief have been decorated in the same orders.

We have a case of another colonel rewarded because "* * * as assistant to the adjutant general American Expeditionary Forces he was charged with the important duty of verifying, preparing, and distributing all orders and bulletins issued from general headquarters."

We find a colonel of Infantry who was decorated a long time after the armistice. He was in charge of the athletic training and received a medal for holding a track meet in Paris. The citation does not exactly say so, but the facts are that that was what actually happened.

It will be interesting to those soldiers who were passed through Brest on their way home shortly after the armistice to know that the officers in charge of that famous camp were decorated with the D. S. M. This information will be particularly interesting to the Senator's wife who broke down and cried when she saw the condition in which she found the American troops at that camp.

It is also noted that all the military attachés to foreign countries were decorated, regardless of the character of the service performed.

I would like to know how many civilians got a medal. Who were they? Most of us recall Eisemann, of Cleveland. Eisemann and his outfit were practically dropped, and yet I am informed this "brilliant genius" eventually received a D. S. M.

Mr. MOONEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I would rather not; but I yield to the gentleman lest I am in error.

Mr. MOONEY. I want to ask the gentleman if he knows that Mr. Eisemann was absolutely exonerated of every charge made against him?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I did not know that, and I am very glad to have the gentleman's statement go in with my remarks. My information was contrary to that fact, and that the McKellar investigation drove Eisemann out of Washington.

Oh, how my friend from Texas [Mr. BEE] enjoys this, as he enjoys everything I say when I address the House. He is my most impartial listener.

I have been asked whether more medals were given to officers who never left Washington than to men who went overseas, and I answer, proportionately, yes. I have been so advised by men who ought to know. At any rate, it seems advisable to me, in order to get all the information, to ask the Secretary of War for a report as to whom constituted the various boards designated for passing on recommendations for medals. While the officers of the Regular Army, including those youngsters who were appointed at the beginning of the war, represented less than 5 per cent of the total number of officers engaged in the war, it is believed that the report will show that practically 100 per cent of the members of the board named to pass on awards were Regular Army officers, graduates of West Point and of the service schools at Leavenworth. It is possible that there may have been some temporary officers on these boards, also some Regular Army officers who were commissioned from the ranks of civil life; but, if such is the case, the number of such in proportion to the whole will be found to be quite small. The control of all awards was practically in the hands of the West Point and Leavenworth cliques.

Mr. Speaker, an investigation has been ordered by another branch of this Congress into the awards of decorations by the Secretary of the Navy. I appeal to you to have another investigation which will include that branch of the military service, with its greater opportunity in the battle line to disclose heroes of rank or of file. When we find men honored and glorified by the award of this medal who were responsible for the frightful errors and delays in reporting casualties, men who made a madhouse out of the offices of the War Department throughout the entire country after the armistice had been signed, what answer can we make to the mothers and fathers who, exulting that their boys came out of the conflict alive, were driven frantic months afterwards to learn that they had been killed weeks, and in many cases months, before the armistice? You will recall at that time we had knowledge in this country of approximately but 80,000 casualties, and now we learn that the American Expeditionary Forces suffered 300,000 casualties. The armistice has been in effect over 14 months, some wounds have been healed, and our boys have been demobilized and have gone back to their civic pursuits. These lads did some wonderful fighting and have gloried in their participation in the war. How many of them have said to you as they have said to me, "Never again, never again"? Why do they hate the Regular Army and the system?

The proper answer to this is that the war was conducted from the beginning without taking into consideration the human element. Army theorists long trained in Prussian systems were in control. Their idea of an effective military force was to give a man a serial number and an officer a grade and to make grade and number fit in at any point where there were vacancies, regardless of whether or not there were any special qualifications. It is my firm belief that the underlying cause of this hate will be found in instruction given in the officers' training camps. These camps were in charge of officers of the Regular Army who had little contact with civil life and who had no appreciation of the necessity of making the military discipline of the Army conform to the average man's idea of a democratic army. It is the personal experience of many of the old officers of the Army who had profited by the experience of the war that it was this lack of appreciation of the human element that has caused practically every soldier who has worn the uniform to return to his home with an intense hate for the military institution. It should be borne in mind that the system of discipline in the old Regular Army can be traced to the same source as that of Frederick the Great, of Prussia, and there is but little distinction or difference in the methods. There is this difference, however, that in the Prussian Army an officer is required to make good. We have never been able to inject any such method in our system. The officers have been carried on, many of them wholly incompetent. Because of incompetence, together with a very autocratic system, nothing could be expected except that the system would fall down when it came in contact with any large number of American citizens, as was the case in our late war.

The remedy for existing conditions is one very difficult of solution by Congress. If the Army is to properly function, its administration must be left largely to the executive branch of the Government, as it is a part of that branch. Congress, of course, exercises its control largely through appropriations. The fundamental thing to be corrected is that of clipping the wings of the General Staff so that it can not exercise administrative control of the Army. Such control is not the proper function of the General Staff, never was intended to be, and never should have been permitted.

I am advised that the morale of the Army, as far as the enlisted men are concerned, has been shattered almost beyond belief. The officer morale has been shattered because of three particular reasons: First, the palpable display of favoritism in selections for promotion and in making citations and awards for medals; second, the reduction of many distinguished officers to junior grades upon their arrival at the port of debarkation of the United States, and placing them under the immediate command of officers many years their juniors and who have not been outside the United States during the war. This is quite a common abuse and the feeling in the Army over it is intense. Third, the manner in which the General Staff has handled the entire military situation. It has bungled practically every problem with which it has been confronted. It has handled the Army personnel with the total disregard of the human element. Selections for a high command have been made because of personal acquaintance rather than on military record. It has destroyed practically every administrative branch of the Military Establishment and has usurped their functions to itself. There is no part of the Army which can now turn its hand without consulting some officer of the General Staff who is often a man of inexperience and with little knowledge of the subject upon which he is called to give an opinion and make a decision.

Mr. Speaker, I can not refrain from saying to this House that it is common talk in the Army, whenever medal awards are discussed, that our present Chief of Staff and one of his assistants, a colonel, whose duty it was to escort and dine foreign missions here in Washington, have no space left between their belts to their collars to display the medals that have been given them as a result of this service, and yet neither heard a hostile shot throughout the entire period of the war. I have no thought of preaching to this House about individual cases of officers and men who were recommended for service crosses and medals and who never received them. If I should enter on this phase of the story it would take more time and space than is permitted to a Member of Congress, even under extraordinary conditions.

There ought not to be any sound reason why the majority of the 2,000,000 men who saw service overseas are not genuine admirers of the Regular Army, and yet they are not. Why? I ask again. Gen Pershing has his four stars, the stars of Washington, and the thanks of Congress. Admitting the good things that have been done, and there were many such or else we could not have won this war, there should be no objection to an honest investigation, not only about the expenditures, about decorations, about promotions and demotions, but the most important question of all, Why does the American boy who won this war hate what his superiors did in France, and why does he hate the Regular Army? This is a question of extreme importance to the Army, to the Government itself, and, most of all, to the mothers and fathers of the young men of America who gave their sons freely and willingly that a world democracy might be perpetuated and that all nations might be free. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL rose.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask if the reporter has noted that the applause was on the Republican side?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Oh, there was some on the Democratic side. There are some intense patriots on the Democratic side who applauded it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] is recognized.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] has been so very generous in the distribution of the time that was allotted to him, to wit, one hour, that I doubt very much whether anyone, even if he had the eloquence of a Demosthenes, or a Cicero, or a Daniel Webster, would be able to reply to him in this generous allotment given to me of eight minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. It is three minutes more than the gentleman asked for.

Mr. DEWALT. I never knew of any edifice that was ever erected, however beautiful, however strong, however fair its proportions, that some one was not able to criticize it and throw mud at it, and I believe also that it is far easier to tear down that which is built than to originally build it. There seem to be some men in this world, and their number is not few, who have the inherent desire to find fault and criticize that which has been done, instead of possessing initiative and trying to do that which should be done.

I have no quarrel with my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] as to what he desires to accomplish, namely, an orderly and seemly investigation, but I do have complaint to make, as a Member of this House, regardless of my political affiliation, in respect to the method that he pursues. I listened patiently to all that he had to say. In the course of his remarks, consuming 52 minutes, he cited possibly 50 cases, more or less, of those who had received the distinguished-service medal. Every one of them he condemned. Not one of them received his approbation. The wonder to me now is that we ever fought this war to a successful conclusion. All these men whom he has criticized took part in this great struggle, fostered and fathered, if you please, by the authoritative source of our Government, countenanced and upheld by the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief, recognized for their ability, if you please, by the Secretary of War. Yet the gentleman from Massachusetts condemns them all, finds no word of approbation for any of their acts. Again, I inquire, how it is that with these men in the service as they undoubtedly were, whether they were here in Washington performing the duties allotted to them and necessary for the prosecution of the war or in the front line of battle performing their duty—I wonder how it is that with them in the service, if they were such as he depicts them to be, we ever could have reached a successful issue.

I rise particularly at this time as a Pennsylvanian.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, careful perhaps and cautious in his way, not timid, for no one would accuse him of timidity, but perhaps overcautious, said that he would mention no names, but he does single out Gen. Peyton March. I know something of Peyton March's record. I have known him since he was a boy. I have what is to be considered the honor, not the distinction, but the pride, of being a Lafayette College graduate. I learned my first lessons as a college student under the guidance of the reverend father of Gen. Peyton March. I knew him as a boy. I have known of his career since his boyhood days. I have yet to hear from any authentic source, from any authoritative source, that he has ever been guilty of anything which deserves the just condemnation of any fair-minded man. [Applause.] I have heard him branded here in this House as that archfiend of rank Prussianism, or words to that effect. I cast them back into the teeth of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] and say that he is little deserving of the position he holds as a Member from Massachusetts to use epithets against the Chief of Staff of the United States Army, Gen. Peyton March. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. I yield.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Would the gentleman have made that charge against me if I had an opportunity to reply to him? Why does he wait until the closing hours of the debate to make that sort of a charge? [Laughter.] Oh, applaud, my southern Democratic friends—cheer.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. I will yield further if I am granted more time by unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Then I object for that sort of thing.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I shall ask for recognition in my own right.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I was going to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. I do for a parliamentary inquiry; yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Is it not a fact, in view of the fact that the previous question has not been demanded or moved, that any gentleman who is opposed to this resolution is entitled to recognition for one hour?

Mr. DEWALT. I am going to ask for recognition in my own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Any Member who gets recognition is entitled to one hour.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have recognition at this time, and I ask for an extension of that recognition beyond the eight minutes in my own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Well, the Chair declines to recognize the gentleman further. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. DEWALT. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks a very pertinent question, and says "If I had known the gentleman from Pennsylvania was to make a charge of that kind, I would have asked for time in which to reply." Ah, who knew what he was about to say except he himself? No one but he with his printed record before him. How could the gentleman from Pennsylvania, or any other Member of this House, anticipate what he was to say? I tried to make a reply in order, in my feeble way, as one Member to uphold what I believe to be a fair proposition, and that is this, that every man, whether he be in the Army or in the Navy, or whether he be in the ranks of civil life, should have a fair chance to meet his accusers face to face and also have a decent chance to make a reply. All these men enumerated by the gentleman from Massachusetts, whoever they may be, whatever their political affiliations may be, have been condemned by him upon the floor of this House, and not one of them will ever have an opportunity to make reply upon this floor. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced the Chair was in doubt.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 67.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum has been made, and the Chair will endeavor to ascertain if there is a quorum present. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-three Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 155, nays 174, not voting 99, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] is recognized.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] yield to the gentleman from Virginia for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. DEWALT. I will.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The previous question having been voted down, does not the recognition pass now to some one recognized in opposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania having asked for recognition and having obtained time from those in favor of the resolution, it seems to the Chair, would be the proper one to be recognized, and therefore recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I did not ask for recognition. I asked if somebody who represented the opposition was not entitled to be recognized?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is the only one the Chair has heard as being in opposition. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] is recognized.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] asked me to announce that he was compelled to be away on account of official business. If he had been present, he would have voted "nay."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] is recognized.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, first let me congratulate the Republican membership for the fairness of their conduct in helping to defeat the demand for the previous question. [Applause.] Nothing is ever gained, either in political dispute or in argumentation on the floor of this House, by attempting to use what might be strictly known as "gag methods." And it was with not personal gratification, but with an estimate of the high character for fairness exhibited by my brethren on this side of the aisle that I noticed many of them were willing to hear, at least in part, some refutation of the arguments made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

The gentleman from Massachusetts in the course of his remarks said that he did not desire to exhibit any partisan feeling. Far be it from me to have any such tenor in my thoughts or in my remarks. In fact, I can prove conclusively that there is no partisanship in this matter so far as I am concerned. I sit on this side of the aisle as a Democrat. The gentleman from Pennsylvania whose record I attempted, in a few feeble words, to defend, Gen. Peyton March, is a Republican, and I know it to be a fact. I know, further, that his brother, who is also a graduate of Lafayette College, was the Republican candidate for Congress in the Northampton-Pike-Carbon-Monroe district, represented by Mr. STEELE, and therefore I can well say, without fear of contradiction, that, so far as I am concerned, there is no partisanship in this matter.

But there is a greater issue than party here. What is it? It is the issue of fair play. Time and time again I have patiently—sometimes with impatience—listened to the arguments of men condemning the conduct of everybody, everywhere, and at every time—men in official station, men in private life, men in the Army and in the Navy—and I recognized, whilst that was going on, that these men had the privilege of the House, that these men who were doing the attacking had the privilege of the House, could say what they pleased to say, without the opportunity for anyone of these accused parties to be heard. From the very early Saxon days to this day there has been a right of trial. Every man accused under the laws, as now existing, and existing from all civilized time, has the right to be heard in his own defense. And yet as before said, just a few moments ago I heard the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] in a tirade, either because of personal spleen or for some motive unknown to me, besmirch the character of every one that he did not mention by name but described by official station. Is it any less an offense to accuse a man by innuendo than it is to point him out directly and say, "Thou art the man"? He took it upon himself to make the distinction as to Gen. Peyton March and Gen. Wood. I know nothing of the characteristics or the military record of Gen. Wood, except by what I have read, and by reputation. But it strikes me that if general report be true, there is no one second to Gen. Wood in ability as an Army officer. And I know that he is not a Democrat.

There is another issue that presents itself here. What good can this thing do? Is the country at large, are 110,000,000 people in this great country very much excited as to who received a distinguished-service medal? Are the people in California and New York and in Texas and in Maine excited as to whether or not Gen. Peyton March wears upon his manly breast, as characterized by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], this distinguished-service medal? Are there not other matters here of far more moment, more worthy of the consideration of the statesman from Massachusetts? Is there not a legislative program here of construction and reconstruction, of the lessening of taxes and curtailing of expenses, the reorganization of the Army, the equipment of our Navy, the establishment of peace in the world? Are they not of more moment than this question as to whether Tom Jones or Jacob Smith was awarded a distinguished-service medal? [Applause.]

Another thought presents itself to my mind at this time. What good can come of this? The gentleman from Massachusetts says a reorganization of the staff; a betterment of Army conditions. I beg leave to differ with him. There is nothing so provocative of disorder, there is nothing so enhancing of dissatisfaction and discipline in any rank, be it civil or military, than this constant harping on and criticism of superiors. [Applause.] He has openly charged here that the men of the Regular Army are opposed to the military organization; that they hate their superiors. I have yet to hear, and I have met many of the boys that come from across the water—I have yet to hear any one of them say that he hated his superior officer. I have heard remarks of condemnation; yes. I have heard criticism; yes. I have heard complaint; yes. But that is natural and inherent in all large bodies of men. But when the complaint comes in this form, when a Member of the House of Representatives, representing in part the great State of Massachusetts, known and admired for its war record, esteemed and loved because of its glorious history, rises on this floor and says that the Army and the Regular Army hate their superior officers, I beg leave to challenge the assertion. [Applause.]

I do not believe it. But whether it be true or false, the best way to create dissatisfaction, the best way to create disorganization, tumult, and discontent, is to further and foster this criticism by these untimely and, in my judgment, unseemly remarks.

I grant you that many of these citations that were read by the gentleman from Massachusetts were couched, perhaps, in extravagant language. I know that when members of the bar meet and pass resolutions of condolence upon the death of a deceased member they do not hesitate very much in regard to the extravagance of their praise. These men, most of them, I suppose, are still living who have been awarded the cross or the medal, and in so awarding this honor and this token of merit I have no doubt that extravagant terms were used—hyperbole, if you please. But the main question was this: Were these medals awarded honestly and fairly? And can you arrive at a fair conclusion in regard to this matter by having this report and this resolution taken from the Committee on Military Affairs and thrown into the body of the House, demanding of the Secretary of War this information? He has not refused it. He has not denied it. The only remark that I hear, in confirmation of a refusal, is from the honored chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, when he says that he made the request some time ago—how long ago he does not state—and that that request has not yet been complied with, and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs says he himself does not know how long the investigation would take, or how many clerks there would have to be employed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Recognizing the fact that there is a widespread feeling throughout the Army among the officers and enlisted men that there was a so-called "decoration ring," does not the gentleman believe that this resolution ought to pass, and that all the facts ought to be given to the American public?

Mr. DEWALT. In reply to that I have to say "Yes; there should be an investigation if there is any open charge of any unmerited awards." But we should have a bill of particulars, not a general blanket charge. When I plead in the courts, and when I file my declaration, if you please, it is a matter of right, it is a matter of justice that the party that pleads against me shall say, "Mr. DEWALT, file your bill of particulars of complaint." But here you have a general blanket charge, which says that every man, with a few exceptions, if you please—not naming the exceptions—has received an award not merited and by favoritism.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if the passage of this resolution will not lead to the giving of the facts upon which a bill of particulars can be made?

Mr. DEWALT. The resolution might lead to the giving of the facts, but the facts, in my judgment, can be more clearly obtained by a reply from the Secretary of War, and he has not yet said that he would not give it, and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has not so said.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If I said that every officer on duty at general headquarters of the American Expeditionary Force had been given by that "decoration ring" enough medals so that they jingle like a Polish Fourth of July, ought we not to pass a resolution to find out how they gave decorations to each other? [Applause.]

Mr. DEWALT. Well, in reply to that remark I will say that it jingles with glittering generalities. [Laughter.] Again I would ask the gentleman to present a bill of particulars.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does not the gentleman remember that the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] were in themselves, so far as they went, a bill of particulars? And is not that what the gentleman objects to?

Mr. DEWALT. No; it was not a bill of particulars, because in the very essence thereof he said, "I refuse or I, at least, omit to mention the names, and I give you a general description, and therefore I leave it to you as a special pleader in the case, and, under the circumstances as detailed by me, to select any individual that you see fit to designate or judge," and that in itself is not a bill of particulars.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yet the gentleman's statement was such that the gentleman himself was able to fit them to the persons concerned.

Mr. DEWALT. Yes, to some; but as to most I confess my ignorance; and I think the gentleman will confess his own ignorance in regard to most of them.

But that is not the meat of the question. The meat of the proposition is just this: How many awards there were we do not know; how many there will be we do not know; but this we do know, that there has been presented here by a reputable Member of this House, for whom I have the very highest regard personally, coming from the great State of Massachusetts, a blanket charge against the general awarding of these service medals, because, he asserts, that the General Staff and the "Leavenworth clique," as he calls it, have been the instigators of the awards.

Now, I may be perhaps what is called—I believe somebody did call me here upon one occasion—a technical lawyer, but whether I be a technical lawyer or whether I be in common parlance but a lawyer and a member of the bar, I am more than that in my own estimation. I try to be and I hope I will be always a just man and a fair man [applause], and I believe there should be a recognition of the rights of these gentlemen who are thus openly attacked, if not directly by name, at least by innuendo.

Now, my friends, one word more and then I shall have finished. I said a few moments ago that I wonder how, if all these distinguished gentlemen, or extinguished gentlemen, as perhaps my friend from Massachusetts would characterize them, were such as he pictured them to be—and all these men took prominent parts in the war, whether here at home or across the sea—I wonder how we were ever able to win the war, in spite of such mismanagement and such incompetency. But we did win it. Thanks be to God, it is over, and there was no partisan feeling in that and there never will be. There was no division on party lines nor on sectional lines. The boys who were of the boys in blue in the days of the Civil War stood shoulder to shoulder with those who came from the wearers of the gray of the Southern Confederacy; those from the Atlantic coast went on in steady tread with those from the Pacific. They were all engaged in a common cause, to wit, the freedom of the world and the maintenance of American doctrines. I say, then, my friends, there was glory enough for all and there is glory enough for all. Let us not attempt to besmirch the fair fame of an individual in order to enhance the private spleen of other individuals. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, I was sitting quietly in my seat a few minutes ago and inadvertently remarked to a friend of mine that I thought the names of the officers attacked ought to be put in, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] had occasion to refer to his "friend from Texas," who was his impartial judge.

I want to say to the House that I have been a Member about 10 months, and I know now what has been the matter with my service. I have not heretofore enjoyed the acquaintance or friendship of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN]. For the first time I have been so honored, and I expect from this on I will be able to proceed with some degree of satisfaction to my constituents. However, I am going to take this opportunity to say that the old-time custom that throws a constitutional privilege about the language used by a Member of Congress in debate ought to have been abolished long since, if a man's character and reputation are to be aspersed and a man is to be villified by name, directly and by innuendo, upon the floor of this House, as has been done by the gentleman from Massachusetts. If a Member surrounds himself with the constitutional prerogative that prevents his being called to account elsewhere for language used on the floor, the sooner and the better for the manhood of this country that provision is set aside and the less will men on this floor be inclined to attack personally, by name, men not entitled to the floor of this House. [Applause.] I have been in this House about eight months. I have heard the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] on various occasions. I have never yet heard him say a good word of any man except two or three that he mentioned to-day.

I have found out since I came here that there are different kinds of Congressmen. They are all excellent men, but there are constructive Congressmen and there are men who do not do very much, and there are Congressmen who constantly criticize and abuse and accomplish nothing, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] is in the front row of the last class. [Laughter.] If the gentleman from Massachusetts had been alive in the days of George Washington, he would have been one of the Conway cabal that pursued Washington through his entire career. Had the gentleman from Massachusetts lived in the days of the War of 1812, he would have condemned Andrew Jackson for using cotton bales instead of something else of a defensive character at New Orleans. If the gentleman from Massachusetts had lived in the days of the Mexican War, he would have condemned Winfield Scott and Zachary Taylor. If he had lived in the time of the Civil War, the great Abraham Lincoln would have found in him a constant carping critic because he did not appeal to this gentleman's wise military judgment as to how that great war should be conducted.

In the days of the Spanish-American War and in the days of this great World War there may have been individual awards that ought not to have been made. It may be that some men have been granted medals to whom they should not have been granted. The gentleman does not differentiate between the distinguished-service medal and the distinguished-service cross. Take the list just published by the War Department and see the names of thousands of brave soldiers of this country who have been decorated with the distinguished-service cross because of their gallantry upon the field of battle. There may have been instances in which friendship has intervened. My new-found friendship for the gentleman from Massachusetts and his new-found admiration for me impels me to hope that in the years to come if he is again honored as a Member of this House the Democratic side of the House will not constantly have to remain silent under the speeches that he makes upon this floor amid the uproarious applause of the Republican side of the House. [Applause.]

The Democratic Party did not win this war. The Republican Party did not win this war. Thank God this was a people's war, for the glory of our united country. The general who commanded those forces, the great Pershing, is a Republican in politics and has been talked about as the Republican nominee for President, and Gen. March, a distinguished soldier, whom I know only slightly but favorably, is a Republican. There is no politics in this matter. Let me appeal to all the Members of this House when I say there is an opportunity and a chance for the people of this country to decide once more that the war is over, and it is over with glory and honor and credit to the great flag of our country and to the gallant sons of America upon the battle fields of France. [Applause.] And carping criticisms, personal flings, or what not ought not to disrupt the morale of the American Army. The gentleman from Massachusetts talks about the morale of the American Army being disrupted because somebody got a distinguished-service medal whom he thinks ought not to have received it. Let me say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that such speeches as he has made upon the floor of this House from carefully prepared manuscript, from which he would not divert for one minute, circulated over this country, will do as much to destroy the morale of the American Army, to destroy the respect of the men in the Army for their officers as the efforts of the rankest Bolshevik in this country who is trying to destroy the sanctity and the security of our institutions.

Let us admit that mistakes have been made. Let us consider that the men who participated in this war are human as we are, and that they have made their mistakes. Let us stop and consider that it takes a great mind, a great heart, and a great conscience to build the magnificent edifices of our country; but any man, no matter how small and insignificant he may be, can blacken, pull them down. I read once of a man who had slandered the character of a woman. He went to his good, old priest and confessed his fault and asked that he might atone for it, if possible. The priest said to him, "Take a goose and pick its feathers, as you walk from here to yonder corner. The man did so. Now, said the priest, "Go back over the same ground and pick up those feathers again and place them where they were." The man said, "I can not do it." The priest said, "That is exactly what you have done with your slander of the character of the woman whose name you have aspersed. You have scattered your slander abroad, and you can not recall it."

Therefore, I say to you, gentlemen of the House, that when my new-found friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, scatters these aspersions against the character of these officers he leaves them in the position of the woman whose good name has been taken away from her. He gives them no chance for a word of explanation, because this record will be so full of innuendos that the enemies of these men can put them together to build an indictment against them and charge that they have been unworthy and unfaithful officers of their country in their country's hour of need.

Now, gentlemen of the House, I have taken more time than I ought. I am a new Member of the House, and the courtesy extended to me on every side by Republican and Democrat alike, the knowledge of their high character, has warmed the cockles of my heart and has done more to destroy the hot partisanship of my youth than any other agency that has ever come into my life.

I have found in this House that men are solely working for one single purpose from their viewpoints and localities, and that purpose is the upbuilding of our great country—the glorification of the flag—carrying this country forward to its great destiny beyond human ken. We all stand together for that flag and that country, and we look over here and there from our standpoint as we view the scene. I have found that out, but I could not let this opportunity pass without saying one word to this House, and I thank my friend from Massachusetts for his reference that gave me the opportunity to rise for these remarks.

Once more let us proclaim our allegiance to a united country, once more let us build our institutions so that they shall be impervious to attack, once more, be he a Member of Congress, an Army officer, or a citizen in the field, let this Congress put itself on record that no more shall personal aspersions destroy the character of helpless men who can not respond to these charges. [Applause.]

Mr. BEE had leave to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE].

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I was called from the House as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] was addressing it on his resolution. As I was leaving I heard him refer to the Prussianized Chief of Staff of the American Army. The Chief of Staff is Gen. Peyton C. March, who was born and brought up in Easton, my native city, in Pennsylvania. It was to him that this Prussianized allusion was made.

I have known the family of Gen. March all my life. His brother was a schoolmate of mine, and although he was my opponent when I was last a candidate for Congress I never ceased to have a high personal regard for every member of the March family.

The father of Gen. March was probably one of the most distinguished linguists in the world. For more than 40 years he was professor of languages at Lafayette College in my home town, and probably received degrees from all the colleges in the United States, together with Oxford and Cambridge, and the most celebrated institutions in Europe.

Gen. March inherited in a marked degree the abilities of his father. I recall very well when he was appointed a cadet at West Point. His appointment came from a Democratic Congressman from that district, who recognized his preeminent ability and fitness for the appointment. His whole course of conduct since then has simply borne out what was expected of him at the time of his appointment.

His career in the Army has been one of the most notable careers of those in the Army at the present time. He has been recognized not only for his ability but for his fighting qualities as well. He has served with distinction in all the appointments of the Army from the time of his entering into it down to the present time. His service in the Philippines was of special distinction, and by reason of his own force of character and his own ability he has risen to the high station which he now commands.

Therefore when belittling reference is made to Gen. March it seems to me very fitting that, being unable to say anything in his own defense at this time, no one should be permitted to besmirch his military fame and allow it to go unchallenged before the country as coming from the House of Representatives of the United States.

When this war opened he was sent abroad. He desired to remain there, but, like a true soldier, when the orders came that he should return to this country he came back, notwithstanding his anxious desire to remain abroad at the battle front. In support of what I have just said, I wish to give this House not my opinion of his merits as a military officer but the estimate of men in the Army who have had special opportunity to recognize his merit and his work as a military officer. Not only his work as a military officer but the distinguished services that he has rendered the country in the Great War which has just closed, and which in the opinion of expert military officers is second only to that of Gen. Pershing himself. I wish to read to the House for its information on this subject another voice coming from Massachusetts, but of an entirely different character from what you have heard here. It is a letter which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of last year, written by Gen. Duvall, a retired major general of the Army, to the Hon. HOKE SMITH, a Member of the United States Senate.

The letter is as follows:

BOSTON, June 21, 1919.

TO UNITED STATES SENATOR HOKE SMITH,
Washington.

MY DEAR MR. SENATOR: Because some time in the past 18 months you honored me by stating your confidence in my opinion on things military, and quite unsolicited gave me permission to address you on such subjects, I am going to take the liberty for the first time of offering you my professional opinion upon a matter in which I hope you will interest yourself for the good of the service, viz, the granting of suitable reward and honors to the Chief of Staff of our victorious Army.

Of Gen. Pershing's title to the recognition proposed by the President I need not speak to you, for the brilliant results accomplished by the commanding general in the field are plain to everybody, and can not be gainsaid by enemies or even ignored by the thoughtless, thus differing from the work of the Chief of Staff, which is little appreciated by laymen, and is only too likely to incur for him the enmity of those who feel a personal antogonism for the war-time rigors of military methods.

In this connection I can well understand that March's characteristic conciseness of diction and brevity of expression in both written and spoken intercourse might give offense to those who do not know the man, but this very failing, if you would call it so, is indicative of his power. He is habitually intensely concentrated, instinct with energy always unerringly and sharply directed. He can do and does do more work in a given time than any other three of four men, working in tandem, that I have ever known. I have observed him ever since he was a second lieutenant—in the regiment, in the artillery school, in the United States Volunteers, in campaign in the Philippines, and in the General Staff, where, when it was first organized (in 1903), he was in a division of which I was the head and in which Capts. Pershing and Dickman were also serving.

Knowing well his qualifications, as compared with those of all other officers of general rank, I say unhesitatingly that not only in ability to accomplish valuable work but in the amount of such work actually accomplished in this war he stands preeminent.

We are already beginning to forget the relief and amazement felt in this country and throughout the allied world at the size of the American force assembled in France for the summer campaign. Who accomplished this miracle? March, who was thus the author of Pershing's magnificent success. I do not believe there is another man in the Army who could have done what March did, and I say this from the standpoint of an old officer who has taken unmeasured delight in seeing come to the top in the test of war so many of the younger men whom I in former years had picked out and recommended for various advancements. March, in my opinion, though junior to many, always stood at the head of them all.

From my long experience and seasoned knowledge of the tone and spirit of the Army I wish to say to you, Mr. Senator, that whether March is at the moment popular or not in political or military circles, there can be no doubt that to reduce his rank in the face of his tremendous achievement would be a most disheartening precedent for all those in the profession capable of the sort of mental grasp, fearless decision, and energetic action necessary to military safety; the Army could but know that even consummate military skill is not sure of reward.

Finally, dear Mr. Senator, let me beg of you, for the welfare of the Army, to exert your powerful influence against the threatened denial of the fair reward intended by the President in nominating to the grade of General this great Chief of Staff.

With high regard, I am, very sincerely yours,

WM. P. DUVALL,
Major General, retired.

It is this man who brought about this great accomplishment referred to by Gen. Duvall, who performed the miracle necessary for Gen. Pershing to accomplish the great success that he had on the other side, that to-day is aspersed upon the floor of this House. It seems to me very fitting that the general estimate of the Army of the great accomplishment which Gen. March performed should be properly set forth in this RECORD. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent, Mr. STEELE was granted leave to extend and revise his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be present in the House at the time the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] made his argument in favor of House resolution 428, and I am not familiar with the charges and countercharges to which reference has been made by other Members of the House. I shall, therefore, confine my remarks to the resolution instead of discussing the wonderful achievements of the Army, talking about the Stars and Stripes and going far afield in a discussion concerning the relative merits of different Army officers. The resolution provides that the Secretary of War shall submit a complete list of the officers and men recommended to receive awards by their superior officers, together with the citation recommended in each instance and the specific act or acts on which the recommendations were based. It also provides that he shall submit a complete list of the civilians recommended to receive these awards by any officials or board of officials, together with the citation in each instance and the specific act or acts upon which the recommendations were based. It provides also for the list of the names of the officers constituting the board or boards which passed upon the recommendations or made the awards of distinguished-service medals, and also a list of the names, if any, of the officers sitting on those boards who awarded the distinguished-service medals to themselves or their colleagues. I submit that there is no reason in the world that should prevent the Secretary of War from giving these facts. It must be true that the majority of the officers who have been recommended for distinguished-service medals have been entitled to them.

This war could not be won in the front line by the combat troops. It took everyone, from the civilian to the combat men, to win. No one can or will object to the giving of a distinguished-service medal, but it is common knowledge and was common knowledge throughout the Army, and it is common knowledge throughout the Army to-day, that there have been some few cases where men have been awarded medals who were not entitled to them. Unless I had all of the facts in each individual case, I would not attempt to mention any particular individual officer, because it would be unfair for me, with the privilege of a Member of this House, to go upon the floor and attack some officer who could not strike back, but it being common knowledge and being admitted by all those who know, that there have been some injustices, I believe that without mentioning any names, without trying to attack an officer, without trying to defend one, these facts ought to be given to the House—each fact that has been asked for. I believe that the gentleman from Massachusetts is actuated by proper motives in making the request. The passage of this resolution is not an attack upon Gen. March nor is it a defense of him. It is not an attack nor a defense of any other officer in the service, but it is simply a demand for facts with reference to the giving of medals, and if there is one body of men in the world that ought to have those facts, it is this body, and I urge the enactment of the resolution.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, the resolution asks for the names of the persons, and the facts on which the award was made, who were awarded the distinguished-service medals, not for the distinguished-service cross, not for any other decoration, and the names of the boards recommending same. I call the attention of the House to the fact that these boards were formed under general Army orders, giving the name, rank, and branch of the service of their membership, and that every time an award of the distinguished-service medal was made a general Army order, printed at the expense of the United States Government, was circulated throughout the Army and published in the service papers and the public press. The name of the man to whom it was awarded was given, and the distinguished service which he had performed was recited in sufficient detail to justify the award. Any Member of this House, any citizen of the United States, who is interested in any single instance, or every instance, where a distinguished-service medal was awarded can secure a printed copy of the official order, which will give him all of the facts that he wants. I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] has in his possession a stack of those orders of the War Department carrying, if not every one, practically every one of the distinguished-service medal awards that have been made during the war. The distinguished gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] says that it was common knowledge that this was done by a clique; at least, I think that was the intent of his words, that it was common knowledge that favoritism was practiced here. Favoritism when? What is the common knowledge based upon? Is it based upon some general criticism of somebody who was dissatisfied, or has a glaring inequality been pointed out in any particular instance where a man's name was specified and the service for which he was recognized was criticized by any responsible person in the United States? If so, I have not heard of it.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. I have only six minutes. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] lays a great deal of stress upon what he calls the Leavenworth clique. Gentlemen, you remember that for years there has been a criticism in this country by irresponsible critics of the Army against the West Point men. Why? Because the West Point men, by reason of their training and education and ability and control, and certain men who did not have that training and ability could not get that control, and prompted by this natural and human jealousy, they criticized the men who were in power. For the same reason there has come about a criticism of what they call the Leavenworth clique. What is the Leavenworth clique? They are the graduates of the postgraduate school of the Army, an organization built at the expense of the American people, where Army officers of ability and distinguished character—West Point men and others—are sent for postgraduate training. Those of us who crossed the seas to examine what was done in behalf of the American people in this Great War were pleased to hear the reports on every hand from the men there who were explaining to us the service of our men in this Great War. They were proud of the service performed by the men from Leavenworth, because it was said that when a man was in battle, and he knew his neighbor was a Leavenworth man, even if communications were severed and conditions did change, he knew that by reason of the training that the Leavenworth man had, he could depend upon it that that officer would conduct himself as a Leavenworth man had been taught, and could go ahead with blind confidence. This was done, we were told, in many instances and justified that confidence and the expense to the American Government.

It is natural that men of the greatest experience and widest training, men upon whom we have lavished our money in order that they may be educated, should be put in control of our Army when it goes into battle and should be called upon to decide relative merits of men in the service. It is natural that the ambitious who are not so well equipped, who have not had such opportunity, should complain they have not the opportunity, and that somebody else was standing in their way, but it is also natural that a grateful American people will support the honored and distinguished men who have performed the service of winning this war for all humanity, and I hope that this House will not support an unjustified attack under cover against these men who have fought on behalf of American institutions. [Applause.] I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I shall use very much less time than the gentleman from Pennsylvania has so kindly allotted me for the little I have to say.

Now, what is the question which we are discussing? As I understand, the resolution which in the first instance was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs is a simple resolution of inquiry. It asks for information relative to a subject which is, of course, of general interest. Awhile ago the committee by a vote of the House was discharged from the consideration of the resolution. If it had then at once proceeded to vote upon the resolution I for one should have cast my vote in its favor. The naked resolution of inquiry would not have invited any opposition as far as I am concerned. If the Committee on Military Affairs to-morrow or at any subsequent time should bring in a resolution of this sort, I shall certainly vote in favor of it because I think it is to the advantage of all of us here and to the advantage of the people of the country that the information should be furnished. But while I should have supported the resolution if the gentleman from Massachusetts had not discussed it, I shall not now vote for it because he has coupled with it a violent and abusive attack upon certain individuals—a prejudgment of the case—and I for one do not propose to give my indorsement to the attack or the method of attack of the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Applause.] In my opinion that is unfair to those involved, the General Staff and the Chief of the General Staff. Why, if we vote for the resolution now it amounts to an adjudication of the charges against Gen. March. We may expect next week to be called on to vote a prejudgment of Gen. Pershing, and the week after, perhaps, a prejudgment of some other officer, and there may be an endless performance in the way of the House reaching and expressing conclusions derogatory of individuals without giving those individuals any previous opportunity of making any explanation or offering any defense.

I hold no brief for anybody connected with the War Department. I am only speaking in the interest of fair play and of ordinary justice. I have but very slight acquaintance with Gen. March. I have come in contact with a few cases that had to do with the matter of deciding whether medals or crosses should be awarded, and I have felt that in at least two of those cases there was injustice done. But I do not believe the young men I have in mind would desire me to express approval of the wholesale attack made here this morning.

Indeed, it is perfectly obvious that with such a large Army and large Navy discriminations are inevitable and the heart burnings that may result are inevitable. That is a condition we have to recognize, but whether that be true or not, the outstanding fact is that we ought not to acquiesce in a condemnation without a hearing, and that the whole subject should be proceeded with in a more orderly way. Let the Committee on Military Affairs bring in a resolution asking for the information and I believe I can say with confidence that the resolution will receive unanimous approval on this side of the House. [Applause.] That is not only the orderly way with which to dispose of the matter, but it is the fair and just way. I respectfully submit to my friends upon the other side that they should take the course I am suggesting. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FIELDS. Is it in order at this time to rerefer the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not with the previous question being demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the previous question is not ordered then it will be in order. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I understand it is too late at this time to move to rerefer the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLE. Am I in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LITTLE. How long has the Committee on Military Affairs already had to investigate the resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a proper parliamentary inquiry to propound to the Chair.

Mr. LITTLE. They have had it long enough, have they not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 64.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays. Evidently a sufficient number has arisen and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 183, nays 123, not voting 122, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. GALLIVAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

COMPENSATION OF LABORERS IN CUSTOMS SERVICE.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 11309.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 11309, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11309) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to fix compensation of certain laborers in the Customs Service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know exactly what authority this bill confers on the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FORDNEY. It confers upon the Treasury Department the right to pay the going wages for common labor employed in the loading and unloading of ships. Under existing law the Government is restricted to the payment of 31¼ cents per hour for that kind of employment at the present time, and laborers can not be employed at that price.

I might say to the gentleman that the Government has been, contrary to law, paying higher wages, such wages as are paid for that class of work by others; but in December the Comptroller of the Treasury ruled that the Government had been paying those wages in violation of the law. Now the Treasury is restricted to the payment of 31¼ cents an hour for common labor, and they can not obtain the necessary labor at that price, and therefore they ask for additional authority to pay such wages as are paid for that class of work to a limited number of common laborers.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does this give the privilege of raising wages as high as Government officials want to raise them?

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me say to the gentleman that the wages paid for this class of work vary at different ports of entry. The ports of entry mostly affected by these rates and concerned with this class of labor are named, and if I have the time I will give the gentleman the names of the ports. New Orleans is one of the ports. The wages there range from 50 cents to 75 cents an hour and a dollar per hour. Now, the Government, by the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, is restricted to 31¼ cents an hour, and can not find the employees at that price.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has the gentleman from Michigan investigated this matter himself?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have thus far: The committee requested from the Treasury Department a statement, copy of which I have here and which has been printed as a part of the report of the committee, showing the wages paid. I will say to the gentleman that Mr. Shouse, of the Treasury Department, the Assistant Secretary, points out that at New Orleans the wages are 80 cents per hour, and after 4 p. m. the wages are $1.20 an hour, while under the law the Government can pay only 31¼ cents per hour. At Galveston the wages are 65 cents an hour. At Norfolk, from 50 cents to 80 cents. At Tampa the wages are 55 cents an hour, and at Providence from 75 cents to $1 per hour.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, does the gentleman himself believe that this bill ought to be passed for the good of the public?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; for the good of the public; for the reason that the unloading of sugar at these points from vessels bringing sugar in from Cuba and so on is an important matter. Sugar is an important article of food that is badly needed by the people now. I say that for Government ships the Government can not find labor at 31¼ cents when others pay from 50 cents to $1.20 an hour.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. VARE. The gentleman knows that in all the large cities the lowest price for common labor is 50 cents an hour?

Mr. FORDNEY. I believe that common labor can not be employed in the cities for less than 50 cents an hour—in any city in the land.

Mr. VARE. I wanted the House to know that in Philadelphia common labor can not be obtained for less than 50 cents an hour.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WALSH. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts withhold his objection?

Mr. WALSH. I will withhold it. If there is going to be objection made to the bill, the gentleman can explain it.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, we all agree that at 31 cents an hour under the present conditions it is impossible to get labor. The gentleman knows I would trust the Secretary of the Treasury as much as I would anybody, but I am not in favor of allowing a public official to go out and employ anybody he pleases at any price he pleases. We ought to fix a maximum.

Mr. FORDNEY. If you fix a maximum, that maximum is going to be the minimum immediately. The Secretary of the Treasury asked for permission to pay the prevailing rates to this limited number of laborers, numbering in round figures 176 men.

Mr. WINGO. Let us first ascertain what is a fair wage for this character of work and fix it as we would for any other department of the Government.

Mr. FORDNEY. At what rate would you fix it, and what would you pay for overtime?

Mr. WINGO. If I were the Secretary of the Treasury, I would have an investigation made, and I would say to Congress what I regard as a reasonable and proper compensation necessary to be paid. If he will do that, I will take his statement on it; but I am not going to permit any bill to go through that will authorize any executive officer of the Government to pay any price he pleases.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman that that is exactly what the Secretary has done, and what he recommends.

Mr. WINGO. Then why not put it in the bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. How can you fix a rate from 40 cents to $1.20, and fix it by law?

Mr. WINGO. How do you do it in other employments under the Government?

Mr. FORDNEY. You can not do it. You can fix it definitely only in a particular port or city where the labor is employed.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is a business man and he knows that if he undertook to put that rule into his plants the wages would be going up all the time, and it would, if the money came out of the Public Treasury. I believe in high wages, but I believe we ought to put some stop to the height that you can go, because otherwise the rate will go higher. If one dollar is the proper height, say so in the act, and if $1.20 is proper, say so in the act.

Mr. FORDNEY. In line 4 I want to insert, at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury, the word "temporary," so that it will read, "authorized to fix the compensation of temporary laborers in the Customs Service as he may think it advisable."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MONDELL. Objection has been made.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask if any of these men whose salaries the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to fix are longshoremen who struck at New York some time ago, whereby thousands of tons of food were allowed to rot and be destroyed?

Mr. FORDNEY. The Secretary names the cities.

Mr. BLANTON. New York is not involved in this?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; the Secretary gives the names of the cities, and they are all southern cities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

THE VIRGIN ISLANDS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas submits a report from the Committee on Rules, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 69.

Resolved, etc., That a joint commission, to consist of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House, to be appointed by the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the House, respectively, is hereby created to visit the said Virgin Islands and to report fully to Congress as to whether or not the present plan of government of said islands is conducive to their welfare; what, if anything, Congress should do to stimulate industry and agriculture in said islands, and anything else with relation thereto that may be of aid to the American Congress in dealing with the problem of the government and advancement of the people of said islands. There is hereby appropriated the sum of $2,500 to be used only for the expenses of the members of said commission in visiting the said islands. Said commission shall file its report before the 1st day of January, 1920, and said commission shall end on said date.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That a joint commission to consist of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Vice President of the United States, and the Speaker of the House, respectively, is hereby created to visit the Virgin Islands and to report fully to Congress as to existing conditions in the said islands, and particularly to report and recommend action by Congress, if need there be therefor, with reference to whether the present government under executive direction should be superseded by civil government provided by Congress as contemplated by act of March 3, 1917 (39 Stat., p. 1132), said government being now only temporary in character and by order of the President being now vested in officers of the Navy; also, as to whether Congress should at this time provide for a civil government of the island by an organic act; also what, if any, legislation is necessary pending the formation and adoption of an organic act, and as to the general conditions existing in the islands. Said report to be filed at the earliest date practicable, and during the Sixty-sixth Congress. That the expenses of said commission in carrying out the provisions of this resolution shall be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and the House of Representatives, upon the audit and order, respectively, of the ranking Senate and House Members of said commission, the total amount not to exceed the sum of $2,500.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate resolution amended by the House committee for the purposes indicated in the resolution.

We are now governing the Virgin Islands through the Navy Department. At the time the matter was considered here a few years ago it was the intention of Congress that these islands should at as early a date as possible be provided with a civil government. They are still governed by the Navy Department, and it is the purpose of this resolution to appoint a commission to visit the islands, with a view of ascertaining whether or not there should be a civil government there, and if so, the kind of government that they should have.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. HICKS. Some two or three years ago the Naval Committee visited those islands, and I am wondering why it is necessary now for a commission to go there; because when we were there we found out that the naval authorities were making a thorough investigation of all the conditions on the islands, the sewerage system, the educational system, and everything pertaining to those islands, under the supervision of the Navy Department. Why can not all the desired information be obtained by inquiring of the naval authorities what in their judgment is the best policy to pursue, without going to all this additional expense? [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNER. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York, which is a very pertinent one, let me say that this legislation is at the instance of the Navy Department. I have a letter in my possession which I will not take the time to read unless the gentleman desires. When this resolution came over from the Senate it was sent to the Committee on Insular Affairs. I at once sent the resolution to the Secretary of the Navy. I had a conference with him and a conference with Admiral Oliver, under whose jurisdiction the islands have been governed ever since they were taken over. The legislation which we adopted provided that the occupancy by the military authorities should be only temporary, and it is the desire of the Secretary of the Navy that this be done. In other words, the time has come for the establishment of a civil government there, and that is the only purpose that this resolution has in view. These people down there have asked that this commission be sent there. As you will see this is a very small commission, consisting of three Members of the House and three Members of the Senate. The people of the islands have asked that this commission go down and hold hearings and allow them to be heard regarding conditions and regarding the kind of government they desire.

Mr. HICKS. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa, with the permission of the gentleman from Kansas, that I have no doubt whatsoever that a civil government should be established in those islands. My only point was that, with all the information now possessed by the Navy Department, which has been governing those islands for several years, it would seem an unnecessary expense for this Government to send a commission there to get facts which are now in the possession of the Navy Department.

Mr. TOWNER. In answer to that, I will say that I presume the Secretary of the Navy would be the better judge regarding that matter, and he thinks it very important that this commission be sent there.

Let me suggest also that probably one of the principal reasons that actuated the Secretary in taking this position is the fact that the people in the islands desire to be heard. They desire to have this commission come there and examine the situation and have hearings and allow them to be heard regarding the kind of government that they wish. It is for that reason largely that this inquiry is to be made.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I understand the people of these islands want to be heard by a civil commission which will report directly to Congress their wishes concerning legislation with respect to a civil government there, rather than submit their requests through the military or naval authorities.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. CALDWELL. This bill carries an authorization of only $2,500, and there are six members of the commission—three from the Senate and three from the House. That is only $416.66 apiece. Does the gentleman think that will pay the expenses of a commission to make that kind of an inquiry?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am informed that the commission will be able to make the investigation for that amount.

Mr. TOWNER. The Secretary of the Navy expects to make the expense as light as possible by placing at the disposal of the commission, at some port of the United States, a vessel to convey them to these islands. The Secretary of the Navy expects to send down perhaps one or two naval officers to accompany the commission.

Mr. CALDWELL. Are we to understand, then, that this commission will have a battleship or cruiser, at an expense of $2,500 a day, to take them down there, and that this amount of $2,500 is not going to cover it?

Mr. TOWNER. No; that is not the expectation.

Mr. CALDWELL. What kind of a ship is going to take them?

Mr. BAER. The Mayflower.

Mr. TOWNER. The proposition is that we shall go down to Key West, where some of the smaller vessels of the Navy are cruising, and that the members of the commission can be conveyed in that way to the islands without additional expense. One of the destroyers or smaller vessels of the Navy can take the commission over there without any additional expense to the Government.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the commission provided by this resolution is in no sense for a junketing trip. The inhabitants of the islands have been urging for some time that they be given a local self-government. As has been said by Judge TOWNER, the resolution comes at the suggestion of the Navy Department. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] concur that this is the proper procedure. The resolution is unanimously reported from the Committee on Rules. I think no further observations are necessary.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say that this resolution comes up as a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules. So that it may not be taken too seriously as a precedent, I want to suggest that, in my judgment, it is not a privileged resolution. However, I believe in passing the resolution. The expense will amount to nothing. It might properly be paid if it amounted to something. This commission will undoubtedly be taken through the islands upon a naval vessel upon one of the trips that the naval vessels make to the islands whether the commission be sent or not.

It is appropriate to the dignity of this country that, having acquired these islands, having given them no permanent form of government, having put a temporary government there purely under the Navy Department, that we should take up for consideration in some way whether there shall be, and if so, what kind of a civil government there. Due dignity of our country to the islands and the people there ought to cause us to send a representative of our legislative body there in order to talk with the people and get the local sentiment.

I visited these islands some years ago. Many Members of the House have been there, but I did not go with any committee of the House. When our vessel came into St. Thomas every man on board the ship, every woman and child, were more or less excited about getting ashore to buy things. St. Thomas was then what was called a free port; there were no duties on imports. It was the cheapest place to buy articles that there was on the American Continent, or probably in the Western World anywhere. Whether that continues now I do not know. They met with more or less of a loss when the Panama Canal was opened by changing somewhat the lines of trade, and they met with a serious loss when the war came on.

But we ought to deal fairly with these people. While we have acquired the islands for the benefit and protection of the United States, it is not the desire of the United States at any time to impose upon the local people because of the necessities of the Nation. I believe it would be a good thing if we could all go there, and I am sorry that we can not all go. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, something has been said about the manner of conducting the commission through the islands. I am informed that the Navy sends at irregular intervals its cruisers and destroyers down to that port, which is a naval base. They go at irregular intervals, and it is the intention that this commission shall go upon one of those trips, which will add nothing to the expense of the trip. The commission will only have the expense of traveling to the port at which they embark.

I suggest, as was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois and every gentleman here, that these people are entitled to the dignified consideration of the American Congress. We purchased these islands and the people with them. They have never seen a commission from the Government of the United States. They know nothing of the United States, except through the naval authorities. They have the right to know whether or not they are to be governed by a civil government or whether they are to continue under military rule.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can the gentleman state what the population of the islands is?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The population of the three islands is about 75,000.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. When did we buy them?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We purchased them of the Danish Government in 1917 at an expense of $25,000,000.

Mr. LAYTON. Was it by the determination of these people inhabiting the islands that we acquired control of the islands?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; we bought them for our own protection. We bought them for the purpose of keeping Germany from getting them. Now, we ought to give them a chance to tell the commission and Congress what kind of a government they would like to have.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). When this resolution was submitted the Chair was not furnished with a copy, and assumed that it was the usual privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules. When it was read the Chair was clearly of the opinion that it was not a privileged resolution, but no one raised the point of order, and the gentleman from Kansas did not ask unanimous consent to consider it. There was, however, a decided pause, and no one objected or raised a point of order. Therefore the Chair assumed that unanimous consent had been given.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Chair stated that a privileged resolution had been offered, but, as a matter of fact, I submitted a report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I do not recall whether when the joint resolution was read the amendment changing it from a joint resolution was reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that it was not.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be modified as indicated by the amendment in the report.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But the resolution has been passed.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings with reference to the passage of the resolution be vacated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the proceedings agreeing to the resolution be vacated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee recommends that the resolution be changed from a joint resolution to a concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman wish to make any motion with reference to the preamble?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not care to make any motion in relation to the preamble.

Mr. MANN of Illinois rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry to the parliamentary sharps of the House, after the Speaker has considered it. This is a joint resolution as it comes to the House—

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

We have agreed to a proposition to change that to a concurrent resolution. However, the language has not been suggested as an amendment. I am prompted to make the inquiry I do so that the engrossing clerk of the House may know what he is to do. Will this then read—

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring)—

Or will it read—

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring)?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that we can not change the work of the Senate, and that it would be—

Resolved by the House (the Senate concurring).

It is a Senate joint resolution.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It originates in the Senate, the House amends it and changes it to a concurrent resolution, but it seems to me that the House in making that change would still leave the resolving clause as having originated in the Senate—

Resolved by the Senate (the House concurring).

It occurs to me that that would be the proper mode. I do not think this question has arisen very often, though it has at times in the past.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The language that is left in the resolution as it is now presented to the Chair is—

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

It does not appear in the resolution what the change should be.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand, but it did not appear in the amendment. The amendment which we agreed to was the change from a joint resolution to a concurrent resolution. The amendment was agreed to, but the committee did not report the language striking out and inserting, leaving the matter to the engrossing clerk, and I expect the engrossing clerk will know more about it than all the rest of us put together.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that after the Senate has passed a joint resolution the House can so change it to a concurrent resolution, and that the Senate will not have to concur in the action of the House?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, of course the Senate would have to concur in the amendment—that is, if it becomes a law or is passed by both bodies. We can change it. We have changed it, as the man said, when he was in jail.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, I understood him to state that he thought the amendment would make the resolving clause read—

Resolved by the Senate (the House concurring).

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The Senate would still have to agree to that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly. They would have to agree to the amendment if it is passed by both bodies. That is an amendment that is suggested by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is finally on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. I understood that all proceedings had been vacated. How far back did we vacate the proceedings?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before the third reading.

Mr. GARRETT. The only thing in my mind is whether the amendment has been adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Both amendments have been adopted and the resolution is changed to a concurrent resolution. Therefore it did not require a third reading.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the other matter has not been acted upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Has the matter been disposed of finally?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution was agreed to and the proceedings by which it was agreed to were vacated. The resolution was then amended, and as amended has been agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I did not hear it put to the House. Was it put to the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. How was it decided finally that it should read—

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring).

How does it appear in the resolution as finally passed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will appear—

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring).

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is the form in which it will go to the Senate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the form in which it will go to the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want just to make a remark, that the thing was disposed of by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] referring it to the enrolling clerk. That was what became of it at last.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The action of the House was that the amendment be agreed to making it a concurrent resolution.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand; but I am asking the form in which it was finally passed. Was it with the House of Representatives concurring or the Senate concurring? That question was raised and discussed, but I never heard it disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the enrolling clerk that he has it with the House of Representatives concurring.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11578, the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11578, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to assistant postmasters at first and second class post offices, 5, at not exceeding $4,000 each; 65, at not exceeding $3,000 each; 15, at not exceeding $2,500 each; 10, at not exceeding $2,000 each; 20, at not exceeding $1,900 each; 70, at not exceeding $1,800 each; 200, at not exceeding $1,700 each; 250, at not exceeding $1,600 each; 250, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 215, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 400, at not exceeding $1,300 each; 650, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 600, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 350; at not exceeding $1,000 each; 50, at not exceeding $900 each; 50, at not exceeding $800 each; in all, including increases hereinafter provided, $5,672,125. And the appointment and assignment of assistant postmasters hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Minnesota a question. The procedure and table on which this compensation for assistant postmasters is fixed I notice ranges from $800 to $4,000?

Mr. STEENERSON. The figures here recited are the basic figures submitted by the department, so that the language is the same as it would be if we had not made the temporary increases, but the table is changed so as to correspond with the total of the temporary increases, and therefore we have this clause, "including increases hereinafter provided."

Mr. BEE. Do I understand as to assistant postmasters, for example, 350 at $1,000 each, that that $1,000 is the basic salary?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is the basic salary.

Mr. BEE. Added to that is the rate that the House fixed a while back?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly; there were two increases.

Mr. BEE. So it brings the increase up to what we gave them?

Mr. STEENERSON. The total will be sufficient to pay according to section 2, to continue the compensation now paid.

Mr. BEE. All right, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this, Mr. Chairman, to get a little matter of brush cleared up in the RECORD. On October 24 last I called the committee's attention to the fact that a fourth-class postmaster, under the ruling of the department, was required to do first-class work on fourth-class pay for about a year after the receipts showed a first-class office before getting relief.

Mr. STEENERSON. Would not the gentleman just as well wait until we reach the clause for unusual conditions. It is not in order now.

Mr. BLANTON. This is a matter of some importance. I do not like the gentleman to take up what little time I have.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman has not got any time.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a matter of getting the RECORD straight concerning a statement made by an official of the Post Office Department put in the RECORD last Saturday.

Mr. STEENERSON. Of course, the gentleman can not discuss unusual conditions in Texas on a motion to strike out the last word. Would not the gentleman prefer just as well to wait until we reach that clause?

Mr. BLANTON. Proceeding under such unusual conditions as the chairman finds himself in here now, with only a handful of Members present, I am sure he does not care to be fractious about a gentleman correcting the RECORD concerning a bill which he has in charge. I want to cooperate with the gentleman all I can, I am sure, if he will only let me.

Mr. STEENERSON. But I submit to the gentleman, would it not be proper——

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will just let me alone for a few minutes, I will get through.

Mr. STEENERSON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in order that I may not be interrupted, I ask to be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes to get a little matter straight.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I prefer not to be interrupted. In trying to get relief for the post offices in the oil section of my district, on October 24, 1919, I made the following statement on the floor of the House, to wit:

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 7453–7454.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, not long ago, in company with Mr. Johnson, who is chief clerk in Mr. Koons's office, we went to the office of Mr. Ellsworth, who has charge of the post-office service, and Mr. Ellsworth stated to me that where through receipts a fourth-class post office suddenly increased to an amount authorizing it to be raised to a first-class office, the postmaster was required to continue working for a salary of $1,000 per annum for a whole year before his salary could be raised. I told him of a situation where a village of about 400 people in my district had suddenly grown to a city of 25,000 people. The post office there was in the hands of a man under the fourth-class status, who was being forced to hold that office with a salary of only $1,000 a year, notwithstanding the fact that the receipts of the office showed that it was a first-class office. Mr. Ellsworth and Mr. Johnson stated to me that under the law and under the regulations of the department based upon that law it would be necessary for that postmaster to continue to perform the service of a first-class office for 25,000 people for a whole year before his salary could be raised above $1,000 per annum. I will ask the chairman of the committee if that is not the law? I ask the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the next ranking member on the committee, to state if that is not the law. They are silent. That is a condition that ought not to exist. Mr. Ellsworth stated to me that he had called the attention of our Post Office Committee to this emergency; and even though he had been granted an emergency fund, he could not pay that postmaster one single cent out of the emergency fund over and above his maximum of $1,000 a year for a fourth-class post office. Consequently you can hardly get a man to think of holding the office of postmaster in that thriving city. Postmaster after postmaster has tried it and resigned, and the citizens in that district to-day are standing in line two, three, and four hours, and some of them are paying $2 to get a place up at the front of the line near the window, in order to get their mail. The distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HARDY] stated to me a few minutes ago that this very condition existed at Cripple Creek years ago, and at other places in the mining districts of Colorado. Is it possible that this kind of an emergency has appeared in the past history of this country and that this splendid, efficient Post Office Committee has not taken some steps up to this time to remedy that situation?

Mr. STEENERSON. If the gentleman will yield, I will say to him that neither the Postmaster General nor anybody else in the Post Office Department has ever notified the Post Office Committee of the condition the gentleman speaks of.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Ellsworth stated to me that he had called on Congress repeatedly for a larger emergency fund, and that he could not get it, and that several times his department had called attention to these emergency situations without avail.

Mr. BLACK. If my colleague will yield, I think what he has in mind is that he came before the Committee on Appropriations for a deficiency. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads does not deal with deficiencies, so I am sure it has not been before our committee.

Mr. BLANTON. However uninformed the committee may have been heretofore, with regard to the emergency situations I have mentioned, they can not state that they are uninformed now, because I have brought it to their attention, and I hope they will remedy the situation, so that the people in a city of 25,000 population can get their mail without standing in line three, four, and five hours and paying $2 for a place every day or two in order to get their mail. Some of my constituents who are business men have been forced to order their mail sent to another post office 25 miles away, and to send their automobiles for it every day. This is an emergency that could happen in any part of the country. Five years ago it was never dreamed that oil was in this section, and to-day in two counties in my district there are 200,000 barrels of oil flowing out of the ground every day.

Mr. PARRISH. Can the gentleman suggest any way by which we can run the post offices in our section of the country so that the postmasters can get this increased compensation without having to wait for a year?

Mr. BLANTON. There is no way to do it until we change the existing law. My colleague who has just interrogated me represents another district in the same fix. The wonderful oil fields have been developed at Burkburnett and other places in his district, and he has postmasters doing service for a first-class office with first-class receipts, but still receiving a fourth-class postmaster's salary. It is simply outrageous and should be remedied immediately.

Mr. Chairman, the only mistake I made in the above statement, was that I stated that my conversation was with Mr. Ellsworth, when I should have said that it was with Mr. W. S. Ryan, who is Mr. Ellsworth's assistant, who was then in charge of Mr. Ellsworth's office. Hence, naturally, Mr. Ellsworth denied having the conversation.

My colleagues will remember that the office of Mr. J. C. Koons, the First Assistant Postmaster General, is on the fifth floor of the administration building, and that we do most of our business concerning post offices with either Mr. Koons or his chief clerk, Mr. J. W. Johnston. It is rare that we go to the subordinates. Mr. Ellsworth's office is on the fourth floor. On this occasion last October when Mr. Johnston took me to Mr. Ellsworth's office in my effort to get relief for the Desdemona postmaster I of course expected to see Mr. Ellsworth, but he being out our business was transacted by Mr. Ellsworth's assistant, Mr. W. S. Ryan.

So in speaking of the interview later on in the House on October 24, 1919, it was the most natural thing in the world to mention the name Ellsworth, as the information came from his assistant in his office.

And on last Saturday my good friend from Minnesota, the chairman of this committee [Mr. STEENERSON], because I had humiliated him a little bit in calling attention to the fact that he had an unlucky number here, only 13 of his colleagues, in the consideration of this great supply measure, got a little affronted and attempted to trip me up by putting into the RECORD the statement of the Postmaster General that Mr. Ellsworth disclaimed having the said conversation with me.

Now, the good chairman ought to be a better sport than that. He ought to be a good sport and take his medicine, like we good Democrats did when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] administered it to us so often during the Sixty-fifth Congress. But while the good chairman was attempting to trip me up he ought at the same time to have printed in the RECORD the statement signed by Mr. W. S. Ryan, which was also attached as a memorandum to the said statement of the Postmaster General. Although attached thereto as a memorandum, it was not printed with the Postmaster General's statement, but was segregated therefrom and put in his desk by the chairman and was not printed in the RECORD. Why did not my good friend from Minnesota put it in the RECORD? Let me call your attention to some excerpts——

Mr. STEENERSON. The time had expired. I did not have time to read the letter, even.

Mr. BLANTON. We permitted you to print it, and you might just as well have printed all the memorandum as to print Mr. Ellsworth's. That was a memorandum.

Mr. STEENERSON. I gave it to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Not until I specially requested it this morning. I did not fall out with my good friend about that, but I want to get the record straight. My good friend did give me Mr. Ryan's statement when I went to him this Tuesday morning and demanded it.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman did not demand it. He asked me for it.

Mr. BLANTON. I requested it politely, because I knew that was the way to get it. But it was a demand in effect.

Mr. STEENERSON. I did not know it or you would not have gotten it.

Mr. BLANTON. I went to Mr. Ryan yesterday, and found that he had made this statement, and that it should be attached to the statement of the Postmaster General. I was surprised that it had not been made public. Mr. Ryan did not deny having had the said conversation with me in October. He remembered every detail of it as I went over it with him. And, fortunately, one of my colleagues now seated here in the House happened to be present in October and heard it. Let me read the following excerpts from Mr. Ryan's statement:

[Excerpts from statement signed by W. S. Ryan on Nov. 11, 1919.]

I explained to Mr. BLANTON that the Post Office Department is without authority to increase the salaries of presidential postmasters except at the beginning of each fiscal year, and that such increases are based on the postal receipts of the previous calendar year. I explained to him also that a fourth-class post office must remain in that grade at least four quarters and that five quarters must elapse before reclassification can be made, except that a fourth-class post office, after remaining in the grade for four quarters, could be advanced to a higher grade at the commencement of any quarter when the compensation of the postmaster reached as much as $1,000 and the receipts amounted to at least $1,900 during that period.

Regarding the refusal of the department to grant sufficient amounts out of unusual conditions to conduct the offices in his district affected by the oil industries, it was explained to Mr. BLANTON that his postmasters had been granted every request since July 1 of this year; that during the last quarter of the last fiscal year it was necessary to curtail allowances for this purpose for the reason that Congress had seen fit to grant a less amount than was requested of the Appropriations Committee for unusual conditions. * * *

Mr. STEENERSON. What committee?

Mr. BLANTON. The Appropriations Committee, he states here. He did not tell me that then. He said "Congress." Let me show you what else he says:

In reply to his question as to whether this matter was brought to the attention of Congress he was informed that the same provision appeared in every bill, and it was presumed that Congress was fully acquainted with its provisions. * * * He stated that he was not aware of the fact that the Post Office Department is without authority to do the things he thought should be done, and that he was sure Congress did not understand the conditions. * * * He was told * * * that the matter had been brought to their attention in each appropriation bill framed for the Postal Service. * * *

It was pointed out to Mr. BLANTON, from records in this division, that every request made by the postmasters in his district, either for rental or clerical allowance, had been complied with, and that in some instances mentioned by him no correspondence was on file from postmasters making request for either clerical or rental allowance.

(Signed) W. S. RYAN.

Now, Mr. Chairman, who frames the bill for the Postal Service? What does Mr. Ryan mean when he says "that the matter had been brought to their attention in each appropriation bill framed for the Postal Service"? Are not such bills framed by the Post Office Committee?

He misled me. I am not responsible for that. That is what he told me, and I had a right to act on his information and to call the attention of the committee to what he told me. It is just a mere matter of his misleading me on the question.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of the few Democrats in this House who has ever been ready and willing to defend the Postmaster General and his administration. I have been criticized for so doing. In nearly an hour's speech I defended him against the assault made upon him by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]. The Postmaster General is from my State, and I am a loyal Texan. But when he says that "every request made by the postmasters in the seventeenth district, either for rental or clerical allowance, had been complied with," and he intimates that he has had no serious trouble in filling vacancies caused by resignations in my district, and further says that "the service in that section has been and is at this time as good as could reasonably be expected," I can not defend him longer.

Such are not the facts, and every man in my district knows it, and every employee in the whole Post Office Department in Washington ought to know it. Postmasters have resigned from such places as Breckenridge, Caddo, Strawn, Ranger, Desdemona, Gorman, Lueders, Stamford, and other splendid towns, and only loyal patriotism has kept the other postmasters on the job in my district. It has been a very difficult matter to get men to apply for such vacancies.

At the very time these communications were written by Postmaster General Burleson, Supt. Ellsworth and Asst. Supt. Ryan, the postmasters and chambers of commerce at Cisco, Gorman, De Leon, Eastland, Merkel, Breckenridge, Desdemona, and a number of other places were imploring the department for additional help, equipment, and assistance, and they are all still in dire need of it. Mr. Ellsworth tries to excuse himself by stating that he has had only six visits from men in the last six months. He does not attempt to state the numerous trips I have personally made to the First Assistant Postmaster General's office to see Mr. Koons and to see Mr. Johnston with regard to getting help for these offices.

Now, when Mr. Ryan told me in October that he had complied with the request of every postmaster I wrote the postmaster at Ranger, Tex., so informing him, and asking him to advise me if it were true, and, if not, to tell me what he still needed in order to give proper service to the 25,000 people in Ranger, Tex. He wrote me back that the department had not furnished him with the needed requirements, and gave me a specific list of his needs and necessities. At this time people in Ranger were paying $1 and $2 merely for a place in the line to get their mail, which was perfectly outrageous. I sent this letter to the department, and later on, to my great surprise and mortification, I found that the department had written an insulting letter to this loyal postmaster, who was serving more as an accommodation to his people than anything else, and had threatened him with suspension for having called on Congressmen for help, when, as a matter of fact, such Congressman had invited the communication.

Let me read you what the department wrote this loyal postmaster:

In view of the facts above quoted it is not understood why you should consider the Congressman's influence with the department necessary in order to secure authority for the employment of necessary clerical assistance. Furthermore, your statements to him are so grossly inaccurate as to raise the question as to your integrity. Ordinarily such conduct would subject the offender to summary removal. However, your record prior to the date of your letter to the Congressman has been good and you have evidenced an earnest effort to maintain the service at Ranger on a satisfactory basis. Therefore no action will be taken pending your reply to this letter, which you will be expected to submit promptly to me under personal cover.

J. C. KOONS,
First Assistant.

Now let me read you the letter from this good postmaster and the copy of his letter replying to First Assistant Postmaster General Koons:

RANGER, TEX., December 8, 1919.

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: You will pardon me for again writing you, but I am in receipt of a letter from the department in which they make this statement:

"It is not understood why you should consider the Congressman's influence with the department necessary to secure authority for the employment of necessary clerical assistance. Furthermore, your statements to him are so grossly inaccurate as to raise the question of your integrity. Ordinarily such conduct would subject the offender to summary removal. However, your record prior to the date of your letter to the Congressman has been good and you have evidenced an earnest effort to maintain the service at Ranger on a satisfactory basis. Therefore no action will be taken pending your reply to this letter, which you will be expected to submit promptly to me under personal cover.

"(Signed) J. C. KOONS."

Now, Mr. BLANTON, I took this office at a financial sacrifice in order to try to get the service on a basis that would be satisfactory to all concerned, feeling that I would be rewarded by the cooperation of both the patrons and the department, and that the salary would increase as the office progressed until I would not be wholly unpaid for the effort expended and the loss sustained.

Now, in view of the fact that I have been accused of grossly misrepresenting matters and unlawfully soliciting legislative influence to secure service at this place, I feel, Mr. BLANTON, that if I am guilty of these charges that I am not a fit personage to hold this responsible position, and I believe it your duty to ask that I be removed from the place. But if there is a doubt in your mind as to the correctness of these charges (copy of my reply to which are inclosed) I respectfully refer you to any of the following persons of Ranger, Tex.:

M. H. Hagerman, mayor; Gray Powell, chasier First National Bank; C. H. Butler, vice president Bank of Ranger; Mr. Chenowith, president Texas Bank & Trust Co.; George T. Hemingson, secretary of the chamber of commerce; Dr. M. S. Alexander; Dr. L. C. G. Buchanan, or any prominent business man in this city, and after your investigation you find that I am worthy to remain in this position as acting postmaster, I ask that you will kindly place this communication in your wastebasket and forget it.

Thanking you for your many favors granted to your people through your acting postmaster, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

F. O. KELLY.

RANGER, TEX., December 8, 1919.

J. C. KOONS,
First Assistant Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.:

Replying to yours of December 2, initialed SSH, I submit the following:

Refer to my two letters of September 24, wherein I made my first recommendation for clerical and carrier assistance for the quarter ending December 31, 1919. There had been no other allowance asked for this quarter's business, and I made this as soon as I was notified that I had been selected by the sureties of the late postmaster to succeed O. R. Cooper as acting postmaster, and in these recommendations I asked for the following:

There had been allowed 11 regular clerks. I asked for 16 additional, to bring the total to 27 clerks, and gave designations to which they would be placed. Also, I asked for 2 additional carriers, to make a total of 5 foot carriers and 1 parcel-post carrier; also asked for a department-owned delivery truck for the parcel post. I stated that this was necessary for the proper conduct of the office and to give the patrons satisfactory service, and if you will follow the record of progress you will find that I was correct in every detail.

Then, on October 18, your letter stating that I had been allowed 7 additional clerks—3 at $1,500, plus 15 per cent, and 4 at $1,200, plus 15 per cent—and with the 5 auxiliary clerks granted this made a total of 23 clerks. All right. In the same mail with this letter I received from the Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, Member of Congress, a letter stating that you had informed him that I had been granted all that I had asked. This letter from the Congressman of this district came to me unsolicited, so far as I was concerned. His statement that you had granted me all that I had asked and his request that I advise him at once if there was anything else needed to give his people service were in a letter dated October 17. I held this letter, waiting advices from your office as to whether I would be granted carrier help you had promised him to grant, or, rather, according to his letter, that you had stated had been granted ("the department advises me that it has now furnished you with everything you asked for"). Very good. On November 24, 60 days after my request for relief in the city-delivery section, not having received any word from you in regard to same, I, at the request of Dr. M. S. Alexander, who had just received a letter from Congressman BLANTON, his personal friend, stating that he had not had a reply to his letter addressed to me, I could do nothing else than answer the Congressman's letter, and in answering same I gave him a plain statement of facts as they confronted us, and I have on file sufficient evidence to prove the correctness of every statement I made.

Your letter (pardon me for the statement) was not written granting the extra help for the city delivery until November 22, 58 days after I asked for same and 35 days after the Congressman's letter to me stating that I had been granted everything I had asked.

That part of your letter in which you state that my statements to the Congressman are so grossly inaccurate as to raise the question of my "integrity," if you can prove that any statement I have made to you or to Congressman BLANTON are not true, I am sure that Congressman BLANTON is man enough to ask that I be removed.

In appreciation of your statement that my record had been good and that I had evidenced an effort to maintain satisfactory service, allow me to say that I am here for the good of the service and am trying to give everyone a square deal, and run the office as near to the postal law and regulation as possible, and without fear or favor to anyone.

Any additional information you wish on this matter will be cheerfully given.

F. O. KELLY,
Acting Postmaster, Ranger, Tex.

I merely want to call this to the committee's attention. It is the duty of a postmaster, when he makes complaint to the department that he needs facilities to furnish service, and that department does not furnish them, and the people are clamoring at him, and he is holding that office just as a favor to the community, to call it to the attention of his Congressman.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is he still in office?

Mr. BLANTON. He is still in the office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more in order to fully explain the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. STEENERSON. Reserving the right to object, it is understood the gentleman will not ask for any more time?

Mr. BLANTON. I will not ask for any more.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will not interrupt. I want to know if this is the last five minutes he is going to ask for?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. If the Post Office Department wants me to defend it against criticisms hereafter, it must not write any more such uncalled-for, insulting letters to the loyal citizens who are trying to serve the people as postmasters in my district. The Army may scare soldiers into keeping their complaints away from their Congressmen in war times, but the Post Office Department is going to have awfully rough sailing in trying to assume such ironclad discipline in denying to postmasters the right to appeal to their Congressmen for proper and needed assistance required to render their patrons decent service in peace times.

I am the personal friend of the Postmaster General, of the Assistant Postmaster General, and of the men in their departments, and have no personal feeling in this criticism. Because west Texas is about 2,000 miles distant, these gentlemen must not assume that the good people there are not entitled to proper service. They have stood great inconveniences a long, long time. It is true that the department has until recently been handicapped for want of emergency appropriation. But with the emergency appropriation provided for in this bill, to meet these emergency conditions in the oil section of west Texas, there will be no further excuse for the department to longer withhold proper necessities from the many post offices needing immediate assistance in the oil belt.

I want to thank my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], for his kind consideration in looking after this emergency, and I want to thank each and every member of this committee for their kind consideration. I wish for each of them, and their people, the prosperity that comes with oil abundantly flowing from the ground, and hope that Dame Fortune may similarly smile on their districts, and then they may better understand the problems which have beset my colleague [Mr. PARRISH] and myself, for lo, these many months.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have tried hard to satisfy the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who has just addressed you. On October 24 last he made the statement, in criticism of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, that the department had told him that they had frequently called the attention of that committee to the fact that there was not legislation sufficient to take care of these unusual conditions arising by reason of the oil developments in Texas. I stated then that the Post Office Department had never called the attention of the Post Office Committee to it, and Judge MOON corroborated my statement on the floor of the House on that date, October 24, and we let it rest.

The fact is, that there was at that time no bill introduced by anybody seeking to change the law in regard to unusual conditions. These, as I said on Saturday, had existed in some cases for a year and a half. Now, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, when it took up the appropriation bill, concluded to do a thing that was unusual.

This is not a legislative bill. This is an appropriation bill, and the rules of the House forbid that we should have any legislation as a rider on this bill; but because of the representations of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], who enjoys the confidence and respect of everybody on the committee, and I believe of everybody else who knows him, we yielded to his solicitation to change this law, and decided to report a section changing it, and I included it in the rule so as to make it in order. You will find it referred to in the rule making this provision in order, for the correction of the conditions referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. It was brought in when the bill was reported, and I thought one of the most pleased men in the House would be the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. Instead of that, to my great surprise, he began to lambast the Republicans for not being here in great numbers. I thought that whether we were few or many, as long as we were bringing in a bill for his benefit, he ought to be satisfied. I did not think he ought to lash us. All that I have said was in defense of the Post Office Committee, to wit, that the department had never called our attention to the matter or asked for any legislation in regard to the matter. I wrote to the department and asked if they had called the attention of the committee to the matter and if they had asked for such legislation, and the letters were read here on Saturday. The letter of the Postmaster General was read, all except the last clause, when the time expired, and at the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] the whole letter was printed in the RECORD. I tried to have it read in full.

It is true that there is an exhibit referred to in that letter, but I did not think that was very important. It was simply corroborative of what was stated before. The gentleman asked for it and I gave it to him, and he has read part of it, but not all. The substance of it is in corroboration of what Mr. Burleson says in his letter, and of what Mr. Ellsworth says in his letter, to wit, that they had not called the attention of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to this matter at the time they wrote, and that they had not asked for this legislation at that time. In fact, I think the Postmaster General's letter says that they did not need the legislation. However, upon further consideration the committee was satisfied that the conditions were such as to require legislation. We reported it, and I got a rule to make it in order as a rider on the appropriation bill. It is pretty hard to do anything more than that. I hoped that the gentleman from Texas would be satisfied. I tried to get him to wait until this clause in the bill was reached before taking up this personal controversy. I have no interest in the controversy between the gentleman from Texas and the Postmaster General. He can criticize the Postmaster General all he wants to. I am sure he will not think I had any intention of stopping that when I tried to limit him to 10 minutes.

Now, as I want to pass this bill at as early a moment as possible I hope this controversy may be ended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing certain documents in connection with this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by including certain documents. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, bookkeepers, cashiers, chief mailing clerks, chief stamp clerks, examiners of stations, finance clerks, stenographers, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, superintendents of registry, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 3,300, at not exceeding $1,800 each.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota if this same rule applies to this as applied in reference to the previous inquiry?

Mr. STEENERSON. Exactly the same.

Mr. BEE. And the aggregate will give all of them the amounts that we have allowed?

Mr. STEENERSON. The aggregate is sufficient to give them the temporary increase in addition to their basic salary.

Mr. BEE. That information is satisfactory to me. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to clerks in charge of contract stations, $1,350,000.

Mr. WATSON. I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask the chairman of the committee how many contract stations there are distributed throughout the country.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would have to look at the hearings in order to tell the gentleman that.

Mr. WATSON. What is a contract station?

Mr. STEENERSON. A contract station is a drug store or other store where they have a post office, and the department makes a contract with the proprietor of the store to attend to the business without regular clerks being appointed.

Mr. WATSON. This item is for compensation of clerks at contract stations. What salaries do you pay these clerks, and how many were employed last year?

Mr. STEENERSON. I would have to consult the record; it varies. I do not carry the figures in my head. There are quite a large number employed.

Mr. WATSON. I quested how the committee arrived at the amount of $1,350,000 unless they had some data.

Mr. STEENERSON. We have exact figures which are given in the hearings. The number is quite large. The gentleman will bear in mind that in the large cities, like New York and Chicago and even Washington, they have these stations mostly in drug stores.

Mr. WATSON. You do not mean substations, do you?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not mean substations, but contract stations, where they do not have regular quarters; they do their business in drug stores or stationery stores or other such places.

Mr. WATSON. I wanted to know if the gentleman could state the average pay.

Mr. STEENERSON. That varies very much. In some places they do it for nothing.

Mr. WATSON. Then the amount of salary each clerk receives is unlimited?

Mr. STEENERSON. The department has full authority to make a contract and to pay anything it sees fit.

Mr. MADDEN. Up to $1,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. The trouble is not that they pay them too much, but too little. There is a limitation of $1,000, as the gentleman from Illinois has stated.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For temporary and auxiliary clerk hire and for substitute clerk hire for clerks and employees absent with pay at first and second class post offices and temporary and auxiliary clerk hire at summer and winter resort post offices, including increases hereinafter provided, $9,750,000.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We are now on paragraph lines 13 to 17, page 11, appropriating $9,750,000 for temporary clerks and employees at summer and winter resort post offices. How much is that an increase over last year?

Mr. STEENERSON. Quite a large increase. We have changed the compensation from 40 cents an hour to 50 cents an hour.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does this provide for the additional help?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is an increase of $3,250,000.

Mr. CALDWELL. Did the committee cut down the department's estimate?

Mr. STEENERSON. No, sir; we are satisfied that the growth of the business is such that they will need all they ask for.

Mr. CALDWELL. The reason I ask the question is because we find an appalling situation along the water front in New York State in the summer resorts. The post offices have been without the necessary labor to handle the mail during the past year, and they have not had enough money to take care of it. I wanted to know whether the committee had allowed all that the department had asked for.

Mr. STEENERSON. We gave the department all it asked for.

Mr. CALDWELL. All right; if they do not give us better service next year we will curse them and they can not curse us.

Mr. ROUSE. This appropriation provides for 60 cents an hour and the last appropriation provided for 40 cents an hour.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class post offices, $8,000,000: Provided, That hereafter the Postmaster General may, in the disbursement of the appropriation for such purposes, apply a part thereof to the purpose of leasing premises for the use of post offices of the first, second, and third classes at a reasonable annual rental, to be paid quarterly for a term not exceeding 20 years.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is covered by the rule.

The CHAIRMAN The rule provides that this paragraph shall be in order.

Mr. TILSON. Then I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman the reason for making this extension to 20 years. Is it necessary to make the rental for such a long period in order to get the best terms?

Mr. STEENERSON. We had extensive hearings on that subject. Mr. Koons explained with minuteness the reasons for this. The parcel post has so increased in late years, in large cities especially, that they are crowded for room, and it is almost impossible to do the business. In order to get private capital to build suitable quarters, they will have to have assurance that they will be rented for a longer term than 10 years.

I will say to gentlemen that I expect to offer a similar amendment under the railway provision, because at many railway terminals the department has great difficulty in getting space enough to do the business.

Mr. TILSON. Is it the intention to erect or contract by lease for sensible buildings for conducting the business or is it to continue the policy of having ornamental buildings, as we have in the past, more for looks than for use?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; that is the intention, to have a business building; and the man that builds it furnishes the money and the departments rents it at a reasonable rental. They reserve the right in every lease to cancel it in case of an emergency.

Mr. TILSON. The policy of the Post Office Department should be to secure buildings whenever practicable in the vicinity of railroad stations so as to avoid the long haul of the mail to and from the post office.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; that is one of the developments and improvements in the Post Office Department.

Mr. MADDEN. Take it in the city of Chicago, we have several terminals, with 39 trunk-line railroads coming into that city. Each of the terminals has a separate distribution point. The proposition there would be to put all the terminals into one building and have the trains run into that building on the first and second stories. If that were done, the Government would save $605,000 in overhead charges alone.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For vehicle allowance, the hiring of drivers, the rental of vehicles, and the purchase and exchange and maintenance, including stable and garage facilities, of wagons or automobiles for, and the operation of, screen-wagon and city delivery and collection services, $10,250,000: Provided, That the Postmaster General may, in his disbursement of this appropriation, apply a part thereof to the leasing of quarters for the housing of Government-owned automobiles at a reasonable annual rental for a term not exceeding 10 years.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, after line 19, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to contract for pneumatic-tube service in the cities of New York and Brooklyn, in the State of New York, to the same extent and under similar conditions and provisions as was in force under the contract for this service prior to June 30, 1918."

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we all recall when the Post Office bill was before the House in 1918, the great arguments, pro and con, for this very valuable service. At that time the complaint against its continuance was made largely on the ground that it had not met with success in some places, but it was never questioned that it had been a success in New York and Brooklyn, either by members of the committee or the postal authorities themselves. This House has on every occasion when the Post Office bill containing the pneumatic-tube appropriation was under consideration, voted in favor of it. The various commissions and the committees of both the House and Senate appointed to investigate the efficiency and the usefulness of this system to the Post Office Department, have voted not only for its retention but its extension.

I have offered this amendment, and ask for the reinauguration of the system in New York and Brooklyn, because we believe—and in this I am indorsed by the Harlem Board of Trade, the Washington Heights Civic Association, the New York Chamber of Commerce, the government of that great city, and the citizenry in general—that it is needed, that it is efficient, that it is very much desired, and that it should be restored.

We have 54 miles of this service, and I particularly speak of it because I represent that section of the greater city—Harlem and Washington Heights—which was greatly benefited by the system. One hundred and twenty-fifth Street, in New York City, and thereabout north, is a city in itself. It is a community center, so to speak, and from that point radiates a large volume of mail. We find that by reason of the suspension of this service we are handicapped in the collection and distribution of the mail. New York City has spent $400,000,000 for the construction and the submersion of passenger transportation to relieve the great congestion of vehicular traffic on the streets. It means little in money for the Post Office Department to relieve the greater city, by the reinauguration of the tube service, but the use of the tubes, now in existence, will add greatly to the comfort of the citizens and reduce in a marked degree the dangers encountered, owing to the speed with which the autos now in use must necessarily travel in order to reach their destination on schedule time.

I urge the House to give this amendment serious consideration, with the hope that if you can not subscribe to the reinauguration of the system in some of the cities, that at least you will permit its restoration in Manhattan Island, where no complaint has been made either by the postal authorities or any of the committees. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is not authorized by law and it is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees to special-delivery messengers, $5,000,000: Provided, That the Postmaster General may, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, deliver special-delivery matter without obtaining a receipt therefor.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the proviso in this paragraph, or I will reserve the point if the gentleman desires.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think it is subject to the point of order. This is made in order by the rule, is it not?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is nothing in the rule with reference to that language.

Mr. MADDEN. I think there is.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not been able to find it.

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I do not think it is in the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Perhaps the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has a supplementary rule in his hip pocket.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the situation under existing law is this: A special-delivery messenger is required when he undertakes to deliver a special-delivery letter to take it back with him if there is no one there to receive it and give a receipt for it. It has been proved by experience that that in a large measure discommodes the business public, because it frequently happens that the special-delivery messenger can not find the person to whom the letter is addressed. The result is that he leaves a note, in which he says that an attempt was made to deliver the letter and that the letter can be found at a certain station, or, if it be not called for at that station, that it will be delivered in the next regular mail.

The request has been made by a very large number of business people throughout the United States that receipts for the special-delivery letter ought not to be required under the circumstances that are described, and that the letter should be put under the door or put into the office in some way where it is addressed. That is what this language is for.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that it seems to me that any patron of the Post Office Department who pays a special price for a special service is entitled not only to have that service but to know that he has it.

There is a tendency in the Post Office Department gradually to do away with everything in the form of evidence as to its failure properly to function.

Mr. MADDEN. That is not this case.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit. They have ceased to postmark the letters to indicate the time that they arrive at the city of destination so that they can pass the buck along from one office to another if a letter is unduly delayed in its delivery. In the handling of registered mail there is a very fine rule in the Post Office Department, so that if I pay a special fee for the registration of a letter or parcel in order to be sure of its delivery to the person addressed, unless I expressly state on the card that I want that letter or parcel delivered to the person addressed—that is what I paid for—unless I expressly state that it must not be delivered to anyone else, they deliver it to anybody they find, so that the result is often that packages are lost and the department denies liability. Now, there is a case of failure to secure the service to which the public is entitled. Now, there is not one person in a thousand—if the gentleman will permit—not one patron of the post office in a thousand who knows of that regulation so that he can expressly call for what he wants.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for this question——

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman, if he will permit, I see in this case of special delivery there is some excuse for this legislation, although I realize——

Mr. MADDEN. I was going to ask the gentleman this question: Would he prefer to have a letter left at his office if he is absent for an hour, sent there by special delivery, without a receipt, or if he would prefer to wait until the next day to get it? That is what this legislation is for.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think there is merit in what the gentleman suggests. I think it carries with it the danger that they will hold it around for a week and then make delivery, and if they have no record showing the time of delivery they may say that they delivered it a week sooner.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to read the gentleman what Mr. Koons says about it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have great respect for Mr. Koons.

Mr. STEENERSON. This is what Mr. Koons says; I asked him this question:

The CHAIRMAN. Your rules permit that after one attempt they either call for it or you send it by the regular official?

Mr. KOONS. Yes. There is one suggestion I want to make regarding the next appropriation, which really covers the matter we have been discussing—special-delivery messengers. At the present time an attempt is made to deliver a special-delivery letter or parcel, and if no one answers the bell a notice is put under the door that an attempt to deliver it has been made, and that the letter will be delivered by ordinary mail on the next regular carrier delivery. If that would be made at this hour of the day (4 o'clock), there would not be a regular carrier delivery before the next day, and you have either got to send to the post office to get that letter or wait until the regular delivery to-morrow morning, the same as was mentioned with regard to the box package.

If we could have a provision added onto this appropriation "that under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe, he may deliver special-delivery mail without taking a receipt therefor," the advantage of that would be that if the boy came to your house to deliver a letter, and there was no response to the bell, he could drop it in the letter box at the house or put it under the door and report to the postmaster when he returned to the office that he had delivered the letter without taking a receipt for it. We would prescribe a form for that. When you returned home you would have the letter, which is what you want. As it is now, you get a notice and have to go to the post office for it or wait until the next regular carrier delivery. It would be very satisfactory to the patrons. We would not abandon taking receipts where they could be obtained.

Mr. CRAMTON. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of the point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For travel and miscellaneous expenses in the Postal Service, office of the First Assistant Postmaster General, $1,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 11578 had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7752. An act relating to detached service of officers of the Regular Army; and

H. R. 484. An act to provide for the erection of a Federal office building on the site acquired for the Subtreasury in St. Louis, Mo.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BROWNING (on the request of Mr. ACKERMAN), for seven days, on account of illness.

To Mr. MCDUFFIE, for three days, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Wednesday, January 14, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report for fiscal year 1919, showing exchanges made in department and bureaus of typewriters, adding machines, etc. (H. Doc. No. 593); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Tresaury, transmitting deficiency estimate of appropriations required by the Navy Department to compensate owners for a tract of land on Paris Island, S. C. (H. Doc. No. 594); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting statement of receipts and expenditures in connection with the operation of the sewerage system at Fort Monroe, Va., fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 595); to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation required for "Construction and operation of railroads in Alaska," fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 596); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 597); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required for "Photolithographing, Patent Office," fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 598); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required for public printing and binding and for other expenses of the Government Printing Office, fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 599); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a proposed paragraph of legislation authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to credit in the accounts of the special disbursing agents of St. Elizabeths Hospital amounts paid, or to be paid, in carrying out the provisions of the act of July 19, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 600); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims which have been presented to this department and require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 601); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered against the Government by the district courts of the United States, as submitted by the Attorney General, and which require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 602); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. MINAHAN of New Jersey, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10989) for the relief of the owners of a drill boat known as drill boat No. 3 and a dredge known as dredge No. 9, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 540), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MACCRATE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9794) for the relief of Wendell Phillips Lodge, No. 365, Knights of Pythias, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 541), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HERSMAN: A bill (H. R. 11732) to provide for a public building at San Jose, Calif.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: Resolution (H. Res. 435) for the consideration of House bill 10074; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 436) for the consideration of Senate bill 3076; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. PORTER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 273) directing the President to require the exhumation and transportation forthwith of the bodies of all persons now buried in foreign countries who gave their lives in the late war in the service of the United States or in the service of the Allies; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 11733) granting a pension to Ira Fouche; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BEGG: A bill (H. R. 11734) granting an increase of pension to Daniel L. Portley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COSTELLO: A bill (H. R. 11735) granting a pension to William Costello; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JACOWAY: A bill (H. R. 11736) for the relief of Reinman & Wolfort; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 11737) granting a pension to Mary Martha Hopkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEE of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 11738) for the relief of Nels D. Anderson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McGLENNON: A bill (H. R. 11739) for the relief of William Marzahl; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RAINEY of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 11740) for the relief of Joseph A. Choate; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SEARS: A bill (H. R. 11741) for the relief of Mrs. Emma La Mee; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11742) granting an increase of pension to Sylvanus Strang; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11743) granting a pension to Thomas J. Herndon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 11744) granting an increase of pension to Peter L. Tremper; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 11745) granting a pension to William Eldmond; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 11746) to authorize the President to appoint Capt. Harold K. Hines, United States Navy, retired, a rear admiral on the retired list of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. TINCHER: A bill (H. R. 11747) granting a pension to Leonard H. Hemphill; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

844. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of Honolulu Post, No. 1, of the American Legion, favoring the formation of a separate air department to combine the air service of the Army and Navy and increasing the appropriation for equipment and personnel of the aerial forces, naval and military, now stationed in the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

867. Also, petition of general manager of the California Cotton Mills Co., of Oakland, Calif., urging the return of the railroads to private ownership and the arbitration of all labor disputes between the employees and employers; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

868. Also, petition of Red River Lumber Co., protesting against House bill 10738, providing for collective bargaining; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

869. Also, petition of Woman's Auxiliary, Local Post No. 64, Post Office Clerks, of Los Angeles, Calif., placing themselves on record as indorsing the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

870. Also, petition of Tegner Farm Center, of Turlock, Calif., relative to Japanese immigration to this country; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

871. Also, petition of Parents Teachers' Association, of Placerville, El Dorado County, Calif., indorsing the Smith-Lever bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

872. Also, petition of Leese & Gottfried Co., of San Francisco, Calif., protesting against House bill 8315, the Siegel bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

873. By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of the Associated Industries of Massachusetts indorsing House bill 11126, introduced by Hon. F. W. DALLINGER, entitled "To save daylight in the first zone"; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

874. By Mr. WARD: Petition of Willard L. Parker and other members of Dairymen's League of Hunter, N. Y., favoring enactment into law of Capper-Hersman legislation; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 14, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thy law is the law of all worlds and of all time, eternal and unchanging and perfect, and we seek to transcribe Thy law into the customs, manners, and purposes of this great Nation. We come to Thee for Thy guidance and blessing that we may have the inspiration to know the things of God, to write them in the forms of our laws and of our customs in our day. Guide us in the discharge of the duties of this day. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	Moses	Smith, Md.
Ball	Harrison	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Henderson	New	Spencer
Calder	Hitchcock	Newberry	Stanley
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sutherland
Colt	Kendrick	Overman	Thomas
Culberson	Kenyon	Page	Townsend
Cummins	King	Phipps	Trammell
Curtis	Kirby	Pittman	Wadsworth
Dial	Lenroot	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Lodge	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	McCormick	Robinson	Warren
Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson
Gronna	McKellar	Sherman	Wolcott
Hale	McLean	Simmons
Harding	McNary	Smith, Ga.

Mr. MOSES. I announce the absence from the city of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. TRAMMELL. My colleague, the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], is detained by illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] are detained by illness in their families.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] are absent on official business.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is detained from the Senate on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 69) appointing a commission to report on conditions in the Virgin Islands, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 484. An act to provide for the erection of a Federal office building on the site acquired for the Subtreasury in St. Louis, Mo.; and

H. R. 7752. An act relating to detached service of officers of the Regular Army.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Pratt and Osborne Counties, in the State of Kansas, and of the congregation of the Brethren Church of the southeast district of Kansas, remonstrating against universal military training, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to present a memorial from men who claim to speak for 600 employees of a large manufacturing plant in Atlanta, Ga., urging that in the pending legislation provision be made to prevent any suspension of the operation of railroads. The memorial is short, and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ATLANTA, GA., January 10, 1920.

We, the undersigned, representing more than 600 employees of the Frank E. Block Co., wish to insist that our Representatives in Congress use their utmost influence to put through a law that will make it impossible to stop the operation of a railroad.

We feel that too much time has already been lost discussing the demands of the owners, as well as the demands of labor, and that the time has come when the great mass of American people, consisting of the manufacturers, the employees thereof, the mercantile and the clerical people, and the general traveling public need to have some consideration.

For the past two years the employees and traveling representatives of manufacturing and mercantile establishments have been too often put on the anxious bench by numerous threatened tie-ups of railroads.

We want to be assured of continuous supplies of raw material, so that we can continue at work, and that our food is to be brought to us without delay.

ED. F. LOGAN,
Chairman, Chief Engineer for Frank E. Block Co.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present also a memorial from Atlanta Lodge, No. 65, Order of Railway Expressmen, of Georgia, suggesting that under the terms by which boards of adjustment are to be formed as provided in pending legislation there is no representation of independent organizations of railroad employees. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, Calif., praying for the enactment of legislation for the suppression of anarchy and un-American organizations, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a memorial of Post No. 74, American Legion, of Modesto, Calif., remonstrating against the leasing of agricultural lands to orientals, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 3406) for the purchase of buildings and grounds for the embassy of the United States at Brussels, Belgium, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate resolution 56, submitted by Mr. BANKHEAD June 2, 1919, seeking a convention between the United States and certain Central American countries for the protection of migratory birds, reported it without amendment.

LUDWIG C. A. K. MARTENS.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 277, submitted by Mr. MOSES on the 12th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, acting under the resolution of the Senate (S. Res. 263) agreed to on the calendar day of December 20, 1919, be, and hereby is, empowered to employ counsel.

LAND AT FORT SMITH, ARK.

Mr. FERNALD. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9089) releasing the claim of the United States Government to the block or square of land in the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, upon which is situated the old Federal jail, to the city of Fort Smith for a site for a convention hall, community building, or other public purposes.

Mr. KIRBY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Maine. It is a bill which provides for the grant to the city of Fort Smith, Ark., of the old Federal jail at that place. The proposal has been agreed to and recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and also by the Attorney General, whose department has heretofore had jurisdiction of the property. The House has passed the bill and I think it ought to be passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent granting, remising, releasing, and quitclaiming all right, title, claim, and interest of the United States of America in and to the block or square of land in the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, bounded by Second and Third Streets and Rogers and Parker Avenues, fronting 300 feet on Second and Third Streets and 290.25 feet on Rogers and Parker Avenues, upon which is situated the old Federal jail, being a part of section 8, township 8 north, range 32 west, to the city of Fort Smith, Ark., in trust, for a site for a convention hall, community building, or other public purposes: Provided, however, That if said land shall not be used for such purposes it shall revert to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE PROPERTY IN NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Mr. FERNALD. I report back favorably from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds without amendment the bill (H. R. 9183) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the terms of the contract for the sale of the old post-office property in New Haven, Conn., and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion and with the consent of the contractors, to modify and readjust the terms of the contract for the sale of the old post-office property in New Haven, Conn., entered into March 13, 1917, in such manner as he may deem equitable and just, if he shall determine that said contract has become inequitable and unjust on account of the unforeseen conditions arising since its execution, with respect to the Government's failure to deliver the property as soon as expected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3715) for the relief of James Rundle (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota:

A bill (S. 3716) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to determine and report upon the interest, title, ownership, and right of possession of the Yankton Tribe of Indians to the Red Pipestone Quarries, South Dakota; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 3717) to purchase a painting of Abraham Lincoln; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3718) to exclude certain foreign publications from second-class mailing privileges, to increase second-class postal rates, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. DIAL (by request):

A bill (S. 3719) for the relief of Elizabeth R. Nicholls and Joanna L. Nicholls, heirs of Joshua Nicholls; to the Committee on Claims.

CONSTRUCTION OF HOSPITALS AND SANITORIA.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 280), which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the United States Senate what, if any, contracts he has entered into under the authorizations contained in section 7, chapter 98, of the public acts of the Sixty-fifth Congress, third session (vol. 40, Stat. L., p. 1302).

FEDERAL RESERVE BANKING SYSTEM.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it is not often that the Washington Post gives credit to the administration for anything good, but in an editorial this morning it is so very fair, just, and even complimentary toward the Federal reserve banking system that I ask unanimous consent to have the editorial entitled "Banks are prosperous" inserted in the RECORD without reading. This is certainly a case of giving credit where credit is due, for certainly a banking system that has stood the stress and burden of not only financing this country during the war but of our Allies as well without a hitch and now, a year after the war is closed, makes such a showing as is in this editorial so well set out, is a banking system of which we are all proud.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BANKS ARE PROSPEROUS.

"The splendid record made by the banks of the country during 1919 is not only a tribute to the Federal Reserve System but it presents an encouraging outlook for business generally. It was a year of unprecedented prosperity, the banking institutions showing gross profits of about $1,000,000,000, with net profits close to $300,000,000.

"The call for reports on the condition of national banks on November 17 elicited the fact that national bank resources aggregated $22,444,992,000, which is $829,000,000 more than ever before were reported in the history of the country. Another very significant fact is that at the close of the fiscal year June 30 there were 18,240,300 individual deposit accounts in all the national banks, which was an increase of more than 10,000,000 accounts during a period of three years.

"It is highly complimentary to the efficacy of the Federal Reserve System that the element of safety to depositors has been so increased that bank failures are now a rarity. During the year ended October 31, 1919, there was not a national bank failure which resulted in the loss of a single dollar to a depositor. The increase in the number of national banks has been remarkable. The Comptroller of the Currency states that since March 3, 1913, more than 1,000 charters for national banks have been issued and that during 1919 more national institutions were chartered than for any other year in a decade.

"These facts indicate that, whatever handicaps this country may labor under at this time, the financial condition of the United States is excellent. There is plenty of money and it is in circulation. The circumstances are favorable for a great era of prosperity, notwithstanding the unfavorable conditions elsewhere."

LANDING OF THE PILGRIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the time within which the joint special committee shall report, which committee was appointed under the provisions of the resolution (H. Con. Res. 14) of the present Congress authorizing the appointment of a joint special committee to confer with the officials of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and others relative to the participation by the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims, be, and the same is hereby, extended until March 1, 1920.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will readily concur in this resolution. For the information of the Senate I may state that a joint committee has essentially agreed upon a report which it is to make to the Congress, but the introduction of a Provincetown feature of the celebration brought about the appointment of an additional commission on the part of the State of Massachusetts, and the committee did not think it becoming or considerate to make a final report until it could have a conference in this city with the Provincetown commission. For that reason it asks for an extension of time to make its report.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

CONDITIONS IN THE VIRGIN ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 69) appointing a commission to report on conditions in the Virgin Islands, which were to strike out all after the preamble and insert:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint commission to consist of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Vice President of the United States, and the Speaker of the House, respectively, is hereby created to visit the Virgin Islands and to report fully to Congress as to existing conditions in the said islands, and particularly to report and recommend action by Congress, if need there be therefor, with reference to whether the present government under Executive direction should be superseded by civil government provided by Congress as contemplated by act of March 3, 1917 (39 Stat., p. 1132), said government being now only temporary in character and by order of the President being now vested in officers of the Navy; also, as to whether Congress should at this time provide for a civil government of the island by an organic act; also what, if any, legislation is necessary pending the formation and adoption of an organic act, and as to the general conditions existing in the islands. Said report to be filed at the earliest date practicable, and during the Sixty-sixth Congress. That the expenses of said commission in carrying out the provisions of this resolution shall be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and the House of Representatives, upon the audit and order, respectively, of the ranking Senate and House members of said commission, the total amount not to exceed the sum of $2,500.

To amend title to read as follows: "Concurrent resolution appointing a commission to report on conditions in the Virgin Islands," and to strike out "S. J. Res. 69" where it precedes the title in said resolution and insert "S. Con. Res. 69."

Mr. KENYON. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments. The resolution has been changed from a joint to a concurrent resolution, and there are some other changes made, grammatical in their nature.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 13th instant approved and signed the following bill:

S. 2902. An act to amend section 5182, Revised Statutes of the United States.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, being what is known as the water-power bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I should like the Senator from Minnesota to kindly yield, in order that Senate resolution 247 may be now considered. I think it will take but a few moments to dispose of it, and I have been endeavoring for some time to get the resolution before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senate from Georgia for that purpose?

Mr. NELSON. I withhold my motion. What is the resolution to which he refers, I will ask the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HARRIS. It is the resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate as to the profits of the coal operators since the last report to the Senate a year and a half ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution referred to by the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PHIPPS. I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado objects to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. NELSON. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the water-power bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the pending bill, and I ask for the consideration of the proposed amendment by the chairman of the committee. I understand he will not object to it.

Mr. NELSON. I wish the Senator from Georgia would withhold his amendment for a moment. I think there is an amendment pending.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withhold the amendment. I thought the amendment to which the Senator refers had been disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to reconsider the vote whereby the so-called Norris amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me, I desire to say that there was an amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] which was not disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the amendment referred to by the Senator from Minnesota was offered simply for the purpose of being printed and to lie on the table until called up.

Mr. NELSON. Then it was not offered as an amendment to be immediately considered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not.

Mr. NELSON. Very well. Then the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to reconsider the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] on yesterday is the pending motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the pending question is the motion of the Senator from Montana to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I shall not offer any objection to the reconsideration of the amendment. I am willing that it shall be reconsidered to give the Senator from Montana an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if reference is made to the Great Falls amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. It is.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator from Nebraska is extremely generous in consenting to a reconsideration of his amendment, because he has tried unsuccessfully heretofore to secure favorable consideration of that project in different forms. He has convinced me long ago not only of its expediency but of the necessity of its development, and particularly in connection with the growing demands of the Capital City. Of course, if he does not object, I shall not do so.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Colorado that I feel that it is my duty to extend this courtesy to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall not object if the Senator does not.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I dislike to see the amendment reconsidered, but the Senator from Montana was not present when the amendment was adopted. I did not know that he wanted to be heard on it; I did not know that he had any objection to it; but I think it is the usual courtesy when such a thing occurs to let the amendment be reconsidered. I shall still contend for the adoption of the amendment, of course, but I am willing that it shall be reconsidered to give the Senator from Montana the opportunity he desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on reconsidering the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was adopted. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words in addition to what I submitted upon this matter at the last session of the Senate. I have a very strong prepossession in favor of the Government undertaking the development of the Great Falls water-power project. My recollection is that I voted in favor of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska some five or six years ago looking to the development of this property by the Government. To those of us who know something about water-power development, it looks, at least it would so appear to the casual observer, to be a most inviting project. Moreover, the Government of the United States in the city of Washington and in the adjacent territory is a great consumer of power, and it would seem quite appropriate that it search out some source from which it can supply itself, instead of purchasing power from private investors. It seems to me quite an appropriate thing that the Government should make this experiment, and I hope to be convinced again that the project is a wise one, and that it can be developed with profit to the Government of the United States; but, Mr. President, I have no information upon which I can form any kind of a judgment at the present time as to whether or not it would be wise to put the money of the Government into this project.

I recall very well the report submitted on this project by the Senator from Nebraska, my recollection is in the year 1913—certainly not later than the year 1914—five or six years ago. If any real investigation of the matter has been made since that time—I mean such an investigation as private investors would have made with a view to putting their money into the enterprise—it has not been called to my attention. If anything of the kind has been done I should be very glad to be advised about it; but since that time, as I stated upon yesterday, I have been informed by an engineer of very great experience and ability that it is not anywhere nearly as inviting a project as it would seem to be to the casual observer, by reason of the fact that storage is next to impossible, or at least exceedingly expensive, and that the development could go on supplying power for the entire year only to the extent that the water flows in the low-water season; or, if the development went beyond that, it would be necessary to have a very expensive auxiliary steam plant, and that, by reason of that condition of affairs, it is not under ordinary circumstances a feasible project, unless it should become one unit in series of plants the power from which could be interchanged, according to the well-known practice among power companies; indeed, I might say the almost essential practice. Whether or not that contention is sound I do not know. As the matter now stands, with the information I have about it, I am in this situation: I would not put my own money into the enterprise. If a man came to me, without any further information about the matter than I have now, and wanted me to put some money, if I had the money to invest, in a private corporation for the development of this property I would say, "No; I could not think of such a thing; the information that I have leads me to doubt the feasibility and the success of the enterprise." But I might easily be convinced, if a thorough investigation were made by a competent engineer who staked his reputation upon the success of the enterprise.

I shall offer as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska one to the effect that the power commission is authorized and directed to make an investigation as to the feasibility of the project and the financial and economic features of it, and report the same to Congress with a view to the adoption of some measure such as that suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, if the report shall be finally favorable.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I stated before, when this amendment was up, that, to my mind, the most serious objection which could be made to it was that it was not exactly germane to this bill; but I desire to say further, as I said before, that one thing that makes me favorable to the amendment is this: There is a scarcity in the supply of water in the city of Washington, and an agitation is being carried on for the purpose of securing more water, and there is a scheme on foot to draw water from the Patuxent River. In view of the fact that the Patuxent River is a very small stream—you pass it on the road from here to Baltimore, and it has two branches which are little more than creeks—it seems to me that the idea of taking water from the Patuxent River to supply this city, instead of aiming to get an additional supply from the Potomac River, is folly; and for that reason, inasmuch as we need an additional supply of water for the city of Washington, I think this power at Great Falls should be utilized. Additional water is urgently needed for the city; and it seems to me that it would be much easier and much more expeditious to secure water from Great Falls than to undertake a new scheme on the Patuxent River.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I agree with the Senators who want this amendment agreed to. I do not think the scarcity of water here has very much to do with it. If we are going to get a new supply, I think it would be well to go out to Great Falls. One reason why water is scarce in the District of Columbia, I think, is that we charge practically nothing to the consumer. That can be remedied somewhat; but I do not think it is necessary to keep on making surveys out here at this place. We have some magnificent reports already, and the capacity is the same now as it was then, and the only difference would be the additional cost of labor and machinery to bring the estimate up to date, if anyone wanted that information. But we all know that while labor and machinery have increased in cost, coal has also increased, no doubt, correspondingly; and if it was a good proposition in 1913, when that report was made, it is equally as good a proposition now.

It occurs to me that we should encourage all possible water-power development in the United States. It will have a wonderful effect upon the people at large to see a development of this kind here close to Washington.

I know the first time that I ever saw a dam of this kind the wonderful effect it had on my mind. That would suggest to other people the desirability of going home and developing the powers near by. They would see where it was practicable and where the use existed for the power near by. We ought to develop every water power that we possibly can and save our coal for future generations.

Personally, I doubt very much—I do not claim to be a hydraulic engineer, notwithstanding I have had a little experience, but I do not claim to be an expert—I doubt very much the practicability of building a dam anything like 115 feet high. That, however, is a question for the experts.

In this stream, of course, we have a low period of water, usually coming along in the fall months, but to undertake to have a great storage reservoir there would be very expensive indeed; so possibly a dam considerably below that height, so as to develop the natural flow of the river, would be all that would be necessary. But there is no question about water power being profitable where it can be developed at anything like reasonable cost, and where you are contiguous to a good market, as is the case here.

As to the secondary power during these months when the water is low some arrangement probably can be effected with the steam plants here. I am not familiar myself with the ownership of the steam plants in the District of Columbia, but I do not desire to confiscate anybody's property. Probably they can be bought, or arrangements can be made to have this plant operate in conjunction with present established steam plants, and thus produce a uniform quantity of power throughout the 12 months of the year. But by all means I think we ought to go ahead and develop that power. I think it is worth millions and millions of dollars, as I said before, to have a sample to show the people of the United States, and there is no use of having any more surveys about it. You can have an estimate brought up to date for a very small cost, if you want that, as to the cost of machinery and the cost of labor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I feel so confident that this amendment ought to be agreed to that I sincerely trust that Senators who have any doubt about it will give me their attention while I review briefly what I believe will convince all fair-minded men that this development ought to take place. I feel very deeply about it. It does not take an expert to go out and look at Great Falls and realize that almost within sight of the dome of this Capitol is a great flow of water that during all the years that are past has been going down the Potomac River without doing anybody any good that if properly harnessed will save thousands and millions of money, besides being a great measure of conservation.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], in his usual wise way, struck one of the keynotes here. We are short of water right now. Regulations had to be issued last summer, and it will be so again, in the Capital City restricting the use of water. There is not enough water to supply the people. There were times last summer when the city would have been in danger, had there been a great conflagration, on account of a shortage of water. We are at the danger point now. The great criticism with Congress is that this ought to have been done years ago.

The proposition is, as the Senator from Minnesota says, to go to the Patuxent River, a small stream, and get water. That is something that can be done. It is outlined in the report. They went into it in detail, and turned it down; not because it could not be done, but because it meant no water-power development. Whenever you get that through, whenever you disassociate from this proposition the water supply for the city of Washington, all those of us who know what a wonderful influence is being brought to bear to prevent the development of a great water power like this will have taken away from those who favor it one of their arguments. One-third of the amount that will be required for the development of this power can be properly charged to the increased water supply of Washington. There is no question about a supply of water—it is practically unlimited—if you develop this proposition, but if you take the Patuxent as a source of supply, while it will run for a good many years past our lives, by building a lot of conduits and spending a whole lot of money, the supply from that source is not unlimited. The time will come some day when our children even then will have to increase that supply and go further and expend more money.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is favorable to the proposition, as I understand; but his chief argument is that the report upon which I base my argument is old and that it has not been investigated recently by engineers. Mr. President, that is true. It was made before the war with Germany, and there has been none made since. That was not the first report that was made. There have been seven or eight investigations made. I presume more than $100,000 of public funds has been expended in the various investigations of this power, and wherever the investigation was made by competent engineers they have always made a favorable report; and then what happened? The report comes in, and Congress lays it aside until it gets old; and when it is proposed again, then it is said, just like the argument made here to-day, "Let us have another investigation." That runs it over for three or four years, and that report will go in the pigeonhole, and the investigation goes on forever.

It is true that it will cost more now, and the figures of the engineers, of course, will have to be changed. We know that. We do not need an expert to tell us that. But, Mr. President, God's laws have not been changed. Water runs down hill just the same now as it did before the war. The same amount of water going down the same distance will produce the same amount of power. The fundamental elements have not been changed. The desirability of harnessing this power is just as great and greater now than ever; and, Mr. President, the water supply is not the only thing that we ought to consider. We have suffered in this Capital City during the last winter, and to some extent we are suffering now, from a shortage of coal. If this water power had been developed a shortage of coal in the city of Washington would have been unknown. There would not have been a day when there would have been a shortage of coal. Practically all of the coal that is being used for the development of hydroelectric energy would have been saved. There is not any doubt about that, and that is true now just as it was before the war.

I feel that if you do nothing here but what the Senator says he is going to try to do by his substitute, you will have killed this project for another 10 or 12 years. In the meantime the city will have to have more water, and they will go ahead, as the Senator from Minnesota says, and develop the Patuxent proposition, which has nothing to do with power, and they will spend a whole lot of money in building an aqueduct. As the Senator from Minnesota suggests there will be a lot of other expenses connected with it, while here we have an aqueduct already.

Mr. President, I know that the construction of this project is going to cost a good deal. The estimate of the cost before the war was $15,000,000, in round numbers. I have placed a limitation in the authorization here of $25,000,000. It does not mean that that is going to be appropriated.

The amendment does not appropriate a dollar. The engineers that made this investigation and made the Langfitt report estimated that from the time of the beginning until it was all completed it would take from six to eight years. The appropriation and expenditure of this money is going to be divided up during quite a number of years.

Now, let me meet another objection. It is said that the water in the Potomac River varies a great deal, and that there is not any way to get a storage of water. That, in my judgment, is the only weakness of this proposition; but it is not true that there is not any place to develop storage. In the very plan that I am speaking of there is a storage lake 9 miles long and 115 feet deep, covering over 3,000 acres. That will store a good deal of water. It is not as complete a storage as ultimately will be brought about.

Finally, Mr. President, those who follow us, if we will take this first initial step, will build dams at other places. Col. Langfitt told me himself, although he has said nothing about that in his report, there are three places where, at a comparatively small expense, immense storage dams will be constructed. So, he said to me, if Congress will take this step, if they will start this development and then continue it as we go on and need more power, it will eventually reach a point where the flow of the Potomac River over this dam will practically be the same every hour in a day and every day in the year.

The cost, according to this report, of putting the electricity on the three stations in the city ready for distribution would be about one-fifth of 1 cent per kilowatt hour. I realize that has to be increased, because everything is higher now; but the cost upon the completion of the plan that he has recommended would take the price of the electricity down to 2 and a fraction mills per kilowatt hour, not to the consumer—I do not want to have any misconception—but on the switchboard ready for any plan of distribution.

Mr. President, the Government of the United States and the government of the District of Columbia use now about half of the electricity that is developed in this District. We are the great consumers of electricity. Those were the figures, in round numbers, as I remember them, when this report was made. I presume they have increased now, and they will increase more as time goes on. The Government will have to go further in the way of erecting buildings and the use of power and light. So we are making something for ourselves. Col. Langfitt made an estimate allowing for depreciation, for cost of handling the plant, and all the expenses that I think anyone could possibly ask to have included. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] suggests to me the city will grow, but the water power will not. But this water power can be developed by stages. This is only one stage of it. I was about to say that, charging off for depreciation in all lines, and the cost of operation in everything, Col. Langfitt showed in his report that this entire expense of a little over $15,000,000 would pay for itself in 43 years.

Mr. President, when we construct an improvement that we know is going to wear out in 10 years, we have to take that into consideration. The cost of the product, whatever it may be, depends somewhat upon the term of life of the improvement. When we take into consideration that this proposition, properly carried out, this dam properly constructed, means a thousand years, that it means all time, the cost absolutely sinks into insignificance. It may be that at the present time a business man would not go into the venture and would not go into other ventures because of the high cost of labor and the high cost of material. The amendment does not require the commission to commence at any particular time, and yet business men are going into all kinds of ventures. We have buildings going up in this city now and plans for more buildings next year that will outstrip any year that the city has ever had, notwithstanding the high cost. I am one of those who wants to be economical. I had this proposition put up to me at the beginning of the war, when the coal shortage was acute, when the Government was short of power everywhere, and I turned it down. I said, "I am going to wait until the war is over. I doubt the wisdom of the Government putting the money into it right now."

My amendment is so drawn—and if it is not drawn that way I would be glad to have an amendment that would make it so—it is so drawn as to give the commission complete discretion in the matter. But I am not willing to accept an amendment that will simply provide for an investigation and a report to Congress without any instruction for them to go ahead with it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Has not this project been surveyed from time to time?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Are not all the facts relative to the possibility of developing that power already available to Congress?

Mr. NORRIS. I can not conceive of a single thing in connection with the project that is not known, excepting that the figures will have to be added to on account of the high cost of labor and the high cost of material.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would like to ask the Senator if he knows just what primary horsepower may be developed at Great Falls?

Mr. NORRIS. That will depend to a great extent on how far we go. The particular dam that Col. Langfitt provided for, which was, as I said yesterday, near the west line of the District, across the river, 115 feet high, dammed the water up to the base of Great Falls, and made that lake, that storage capacity. It did not interfere with the fall of the water going over the rocks there. He said there was not any doubt in his judgment but that the next step to take would be to increase the dam which we already have now west of the falls and carry the water around the falls and drop it into the river at that point. That would give them a drop there of all the water which comes down the river of 33½ feet in addition. If that were developed we would have, in round numbers, 100,000 horsepower.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is, taking the power developed at the initial fall and the power developed at the outflow of the storage dam below the falls?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir. There are times in the year when the river gets low, when we would need steam facilities. But, Mr. President, we have them now. We have between 60 and 70 different electric plants in various places that the Government already owns in the District. It already owns, paid for by the Government of the United States, sufficient steam power in the driest day of the driest year we have ever had to supply the additional energy that will be necessary, and that is going to be only a comparatively small portion of the time. There are tables in this report based on a measurement of the river for 15 years; and, by the way, the water flowing down the Potomac River has been measured as carefully as the water of any stream anywhere in the world. These tables show exactly what we can expect, basing our estimates upon a measurement of 15 years.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. NORRIS. I will.

Mr. NELSON. In connection with what the Senator states I want to read a brief paragraph from the report made on this water power in the third session of the Sixty-second Congress. I read from page 10:

> The discharge of the Potomac River from 15 years' observation by the United States Geological Survey varies between 600,000,000 gallons daily and 84,000,000,000 gallons daily. As the predicted maximum daily consumption in 1950—> is only 129,000,000 gallons, it may be stated that the Potomac River at Great Falls can furnish for all time a sufficient water supply to the city, and that until long after the usual limits of predictions have been passed a surplus will be available, even in times of excessive drought.

That is, for the city of Washington—

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator for his contribution. Col. Langfitt in his report gives a table in which he shows the development of horsepower based on the measurement of this water for 15 years. It never would go down and never has gone down at any time when they have measured it to a less horsepower than 15,400. During a period of 15 years, according to this table, there was a minimum development of 15,400 horsepower. There were 300 days in every year for 15 years when there would be a development of 27,500 horsepower. There were 250 days in every year when there would be a development of 37,600 horsepower. There were 220 days in every year when there would be a development of 47,700 horsepower. There were 182 days in every year when there would be a development of 66,300 horsepower. There were 159 days in every year when there would be a development of 78,100 horsepower. There were 128 days in every year when there would be a development of 99,500 horsepower. There were 105 days in every year when there would be a development of 98,200 horsepower, and so on.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. That is, without utilizing the falls proper. If you would conduct the water around the falls and get the benefit of the falls itself, in addition to the dam that Col. Langfitt is discussing here, you would have an additional fall, as I said a while ago, of 33½ feet. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PHIPPS. I merely wish to ask the Senator if those figures are based on the natural fall of the stream without any reservoir to hold back a portion of the flood waters?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is my understanding of it.

Mr. PHIPPS. I wanted to get that clear.

Mr. NORRIS. The lake that I have mentioned, which would be the result of the construction of the dam if they follow this plan, will give a storage capacity covering 3,000 acres of land, and, as Col. Langfitt says in the report, that storage capacity would be be sufficient so that, unless they had a very long season of drought, they could regulate the flow of the stream over the dam without the necessity of asking anything from the steam auxiliary.

There are other plans—for instance, the Leighton plan, one developed before this, that did not contemplate the construction of a dam and would not cost nearly as much money; and you can get a great deal of electricity there without spending that much money. He proposed to increase the dam that the United States already owns—that is, above the falls—and then take the water out there and bring it around in a canal only 2 or 3 miles in length, or a few miles, I do not remember how much, and then drop it into the river just this side of the falls. Of course, that plan would not cost anywhere near so much money and it would develop a great deal of power. However, it would not have the benefit of the lake to store water. It would be able to store what the dam above the falls would store, and nothing else. We have one dam now. The Government owns it; the Government constructed it. That is where we get the water for the supply of the city. It stores a good deal of water. If we build the dam that is provided here, it would get the benefit of all the fall from the bottom of the falls to the District line, which is something over 115 feet. By using the falls proper, by using the water twice, we would get a total fall of about 150 feet, or in that neighborhood.

Briefly, let me, in conclusion, call the attention of the Senate to these considerations: First, we must have an additional water supply for the city of Washington, whether we ever construct this dam or not. We have to have it. We are now getting our water from the Potomac River. This plan provides for its increase almost to an unlimited extent from the same source from whence we get it now. If we do not do this, we have got to adopt some other plan, which will probably be the Patuxent River, and get a supply of water there, which will not be inexhaustible to begin with. It will last for a good many years. It will increase the supply, as I remember it, somewhere in the neighborhood of 90,000,000 gallons a day; but if the city keeps on growing long enough and demands an increased supply, that would eventually be insufficient. This proposed plan will end it forever, so far as the water supply is concerned, and by the building of this falls proposition we do several things at one time by the expenditure of the money only once. That is, we get power, we get light, and we get water.

Do not forget, Senators, that, laying aside all financial considerations, the question of conservation ought to be considered. There will be no more shortage of coal in the city of Washington, no more suffering for lack of coal if this proposition is put into effect. That will be ended forever. The cost of electricity to the consumers in this city will be at least cut in two. The Government will get its electricity for practically nothing.

I could go through the report and give the amount of money which up to the year 1912, when the report was made, had then been spent for electricity, but it is unnecessary. Everybody, it seems to me, can see the desirability of doing this work. Do not stop it at an investigation. There is not anything different in the river now than there was when it was investigated before. The water is there just the same. It has been investigated seven or eight times by competent engineers, and the result always is that Congress lays the report aside and does not act on it until it is old, and then when it comes up again the argument is at once advanced, let us have another investigation, and then you start to investigate.

With all respect to my friend the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], if the substitute that he said he was going to offer to the amendment is agreed to, I think it means the eternal death of the development of water power at Great Falls, because in the meantime other sources of water supply will be had, and then one of the great economies of this plan is killed, and killed forever.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was stated a while ago that the dam would be so high that it would be impossible of construction. Does the Senator remember what is the height of the Roosevelt Dam? It seems to me that it is higher than this proposed dam.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I can not give the exact figure, but I think the Roosevelt Dam is something like 250 feet high.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have seen it. I know it is very high, and I know it is very much higher than the one proposed in this project.

May I say further to the Senator that I feel about the amendment just as he does. I shall vote to amend the bill by adding the Senator's amendment. I think, aside from the necessities of the District and to relieve the coal situation here which is bound to come in the future days, that it would be a splendid object lesson——

Mr. NORRIS. It would be.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. To teach Members of Congress the possibilities of water-power development. The objections that many of them have to the development of western water power indicates that they have never given the subject very much consideration. I think every Member of Congress could then go out to Great Falls and see what a real water power is and what could be done with water power in the West.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Is it not a fact that the nature of the rock, the natural foundation there, is reported by engineers to be first class?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The abutments on either side constitute a foundation that would justify the engineers in building a dam to the extreme possibilities?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is all true.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is my understanding of the situation.

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment does not bind the commission to this particular plan. I have been speaking of a plan by Col. Langfitt. I am not an expert; I am not an engineer. I have to follow other men who are experts. I have no hesitancy in following him. I went all over it with him about the time the report was made, but I have left the way open in my amendment, so that if the commission does not think the particular plan ought to be followed they can adopt any other plan.

In the various reports that have been made by experts there have been various kinds of plans proposed. I leave that entirely open with the commission. They can adopt any plan they want to. Their hands are absolutely free. If the amendment does not so provide, then I am willing to accept an amendment that will do it. That is my intention in the bill. I do not want to tie their hands in any way. I want to have one thing in it for sure, and that is that they will be directed by the bill to go ahead and make that improvement. We have had investigations enough, all of them showing that it ought to be done.

I am not going to put my judgment up that this plan or that plan or some other plan ought to be followed. Any plan will suit me. Let those in charge decide it upon expert testimony. They will have it all before them. It is all a matter of record. But let us not stop by saying, "Look it up and report to Congress." Let us direct them to go ahead. I have not limited them in time. As I first drew the amendment I said they must do it within a year; but, as I have offered the amendment, I have stricken that out. It seems to me they ought to do it as soon as possible, but if it takes them more than a year to look it up and advise about it and examine the different plans, I am willing to give that time to them. I only want to make it certain that the sin that the Government has been committing during all these years in permitting that power to go to waste shall cease, and that we shall proceed not only for the benefit of the Government and the people particularly of the District, but, as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] says, as an object lesson to the entire country and to all the world in the development of power.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to ask the Senator a question. I agree that the power ought to be utilized. Can it be utilized in such a way as to avoid the destruction of the falls?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. There we will come to a disagreement. Personally I think if they would utilize the falls they would add to its beauty, but the particular plan which Col. Langfitt outlined did not touch the falls at all. He has shown the plan for a lake, which he says, and I think very properly, would greatly add to the beauty. It would be covered with boats. It would become a great place for people of this city to visit, being a lake that would cover 3,000 acres.

My judgment is that the falls proper ought to be utilized, but the commission does not have to do that under this amendment. Langfitt did not do it out of consideration for the feeling that was more or less general that the beauty of the falls should not be destroyed. To my mind we will add to its beauty. I would rather see the water power developed by a great dam there. In my judgment it would be more beautiful than the falls as they are, but that is not necessary, of course.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask the Senator where, with reference to the falls under Mr. Langfitt's plan, the dam is to be located?

Mr. NORRIS. Nine miles this side, which is either at or very near the line of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STERLING. Of course that could not interfere with the scenic beauty of the falls.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; it dams the water up to the foot of the falls, but does not go any farther.

If there are no other questions, I believe I have nothing further to say.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have no disposition to differ with the Senator from Nebraska concerning the merits of the project upon the basis of the report of which he speaks. I have that report before me. It was made and submitted to Congress on the 14th of February, 1913. That is all but seven years ago; and I submit there is not a business man in the United States who would put a dollar into a power site at the present time upon the strength of a report that is seven years old concerning the feasibility of a project.

Everybody knows that conditions have changed and radically changed since that time. We should have an investigation to show that it is just as inviting a project now as it was then, but I submit that it would be the height of imprudence for the Congress of the United States in a representative capacity to launch into this project without some information concerning the feasibility of it under conditions as they exist to-day.

I am very heartily in favor, if it can be done with profit to the Government of the United States, of the development of this project by the Government of the United States, and I want to make it an example, if I can, of the possibility of thus developing by the Government of the United States some of these powers with profit and benefit to the people of the United States. I hope the United States will some time or other take on the development of some other of the great water powers besides the power possibility of Muscle Shoals, but I want this to be an example instead of a warning. I want to see the States, I want to see the counties, I want to see the municipalities avail themselves of the opportunity that is afforded by the bill to construct and develop water-power plants within their borders.

I hope that we shall be able to create in the West irrigation districts that shall undertake to establish power plants in order to pump water for utilization in irrigation and to take care of our problems of that character in that way; but if we shall go into this enterprise, as I insist, blindfolded at the present time, and it shall be demonstrated by actual and sore experience that the project is a failure, the greatest kind of a deterrent will arise against any sort of a municipal or public development of water powers.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Montana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Montana speaks of the recommendation which was made seven years ago and of the different conditions which then existed. The Senator, of course, has reference to the difference in the cost of materials. Surely the general physical conditions upon which the civil and hydrographic engineers and topographers then based their reports have not changed. The question then would be as to whether the cost of material and of construction is such at this time as to deter us from carrying out the project which is seven years old, based upon its feasibility as a physical property which can be developed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly. As a matter of course, it was necessary at that time to institute a comparison between the cost of producing power through the fall of the waters of the Potomac River as against producing power by coal under then existing conditions; and that is the problem to-day. I do not know whether the same relation which obtained then between the cost of developing water power and the cost of the power produced as compared with the cost of power derived from coal obtains now.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I desire to vote for the amendment, because I believe that the lack of the conservation and utilization of the power at Great Falls for the use of the District of Columbia is a severe commentary on the Congress. The question of the initial cost may be one for consideration; but the overhead charges and the primary cost of installing the proper machinery to develop the power will be practically the only element of comparison in ascertaining the immediate difference between the cost of power derived from coal and the cost of light, heat, and power derived from the falls; for, after the initial cost has been met, then for the future there will be a gradual absorption of the cost, because there will not be a necessity for repeating the initial cost. In the production of coal the price rises and falls according to the wages paid those who dig it out and the cost of transportation; but here you have a fixed permanent charge, which is the initial charge; and after that the cost will be negligible as compared to the cost of production of heat, light, and power in any other way.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the Senator from South Carolina is quite right about that. The actual running expenses in the operation of a water-power plant are, as a rule, very trifling. The burden comes in the interest charge upon the original investment. Even in the application of the power that is true, for in the application of the hydroelectric power to the operation of steam railroads the cost, of course, of turning on the current is practically nothing as compared with the feeding of coal under a boiler for the generation of steam; but the cost of the installation of the plant in the first place is a great one. Of course, that cost is continually bearing interest, and so it becomes a question as to the original cost, which, of course, enters into the question of the continuing charges and the cost of producing the power as it is used by the consumer.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is, the Senator's idea is that the initial cost, the cost of installation, may be so great that the interest on it would not compare favorably with the cost of power derived from steam produced by coal?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is quite right. In many parts of the country where coal is readily available there are water powers lying perfectly idle, and it is uneconomical to develop such water powers, because power can be produced from coal at a less cost than it can be secured by the development of the water power. So I might say, in some parts of the West—in the State of California, for instance—they are able to produce power by fuel oil at a less cost than would be involved in the development of the water power.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, the Senator's idea is that before we commit ourselves to this proposition an investigation should be made in order to ascertain what under present conditions the initial cost of constructing this dam and the other necessary appliances to develop the power would be, in order to ascertain the charges for heat, light, and power that would then be necessary through a term of years to absorb that cost as compared with the present cost of providing such power?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; to bring the information down to date before we undertake the enterprise.

Mr. President, there is just one other thing that I desire to say. The Senator from Nebraska says the trouble about this matter is that after an investigation is directed and had Congress puts the proposition off. Of course, that does happen; it has happened in this case; but there is no reason why the amendment which is now offered by the Senator from Nebraska should not be put on the District appropriation bill at any session of Congress. Of course, it would be even more appropriate as a part of that appropriation bill than it would be as a part of the pending measure.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator know that it would be subject to a point of order upon the District appropriation bill, and that any one Senator could keep it out of that measure?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes. The Senator succeeded, however, in getting it upon the District appropriation bill in the case to which I referred. I do not agree, however, that the committee having the District bill in charge would decline to give its approval to the proposal if the report seemed to justify it; but, for the matter of that, there are many bills to which it could be attached quite as appropriately as to this bill. Accordingly, as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, I offer the following:

The commission is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and, on or before the first Monday in December, 1920, report to Congress the cost and, in detail, the economic value of the power plant outlined in project No. 3, House Document No. 1400, Sixty-second Congress, third session, in view of existing conditions, utilizing such study as may heretofore have been made by any department of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have just been reading the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings, and find that in the discussion of this bill yesterday a distinguished and able Senator, one whose long and brilliant career in public life properly entitles his utterances to very great weight, severely criticized the Senate, and in the course of his remarks referred to a statement by Benjamin Franklin to the effect that the Senate was a fifth wheel and ought to be dispensed with. The Senator called attention to the fact that there were but few Senators upon the floor at the time he participated in the discussion.

Mr. President, yesterday more than 20 committees were in session, and a number of hearings were being conducted. Many of them began at 10 o'clock in the morning, and several continued in session until 6 o'clock in the evening. Of my own knowledge there were scores of Senators yesterday in attendance upon committees and hearings for from four to six and eight hours.

The service of Senators is not to be measured by the number of hours they are in attendance during the sessions of this body. I am one of the Senators usually in the Chamber when the Senate is in session, but in endeavoring to be present I am neglecting important work—perhaps more important to the country than even the work here upon the floor—which is going on before committees. Yesterday many Senators were required to attend as many as four committee meetings, and these committees were sitting during the session of the Senate. It was impossible for Senators to be present here and in attendance upon committees.

There are now in session, engaged in very important work, two committees of which I am a member. In order to discharge what I conceive to be my duty in being present here I am omitting the performance of work which is committed to these committees of the Senate.

Mr. President, Senators work from 8 to 12 hours a day, and I know of many Senators who give as much as 14 hours a day for weeks at a time to their senatorial duties. In my opinion no men in public service or private employment spend more hours in hard, onerous service than do the Members of this body. The mere fact that they are not always upon the floor during the discussion of measures is no indication of a failure to discharge the duties which rest upon them.

The Senator stated that the Senate had "ceased to function." Mr. President, permit me to state that in my opinion——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KING. Let me complete the sentence. The criticism is not warranted. The Senate does function and enacts a vast amount of important legislation and considers questions vitally affecting our Nation as well as the entire world. I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I notice that the name of the Senator who so severely criticized the Senate in the closing hours of the session yesterday is not recorded on two out of the three roll calls had on yesterday.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, numerous committees are now in session and many of the Members of the Senate are attending such sessions. There are not many Senators in the Chamber, and they either have considered this bill and have made up their minds as to what their votes will be upon its features, or they are willing to be guided in part by those who have given, perhaps, months and years to a consideration of the question involved in this proposed legislation. It is humanly impossible for each Senator to investigate the thousands of questions presented for consideration and action in the Congress of the United States. As everybody knows, much of the work of Congress, indeed most of its work, is done through committees, who make extensive investigations and conduct elaborate hearings in order to present to the Senate measures for consideration. In the performance of this work Senators are almost daily occupied, not only when the Senate is not in session, but also prior to its convening and often after adjournment has been had. The scores—and I was about to say hundreds—of volumes of printed testimony taken at each session of Congress are convincing evidence of the constant and grinding work of Senators and disproves any charge that the Senate is negligent in the discharge of the responsibilities devolving upon it.

There is a committee of conference now considering the railroad bill, a measure of vital importance to this Republic. The conferees now considering the matter have spent but few hours upon the floor of the Senate since that important measure was committed to their hands. They would have been derelict in their duty, in my opinion, if they had spent their time here upon the floor instead of meeting with the conferees of the House and attempting to work out some legislation that would deal with this question, the most important domestic question now before us.

Now, Mr. President, just a word in regard to the amendment which has been submitted by the Senator from Montana.

I hope that amendment will prevail. I am not unfamiliar with the project for which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has so ably and eloquently pleaded. If I may be pardoned a personal allusion, a number of years ago, when I was in the House, I was appointed in connection with Gov. Odell, then a Member of the House, to make an investigation of the Great Falls of the Potomac River.

I made as full an investigation as possible of the Great Falls, the question of their acquisition by the District of Columbia, the advantages, if any, that would result from such action, and generally all related questions. At that time a suit was pending against the Government for several hundred thousand dollars because water had been diverted above the falls, which, it was claimed, diminished the value of the riparian property upon each side of the falls. Indeed, as I recall, a judgment against the Government for over $400,000 had been rendered in the Court of Claims, and another suit was pending for a sum, as my memory now serves me, somewhat in excess of the judgment which the Court of Claims had rendered against the Government.

After making an investigation, and being brought into contact with the owners of the falls, the riparian owners, a tentative arrangement was made under the terms of which the Government or the District would acquire the falls and the riparian rights upon each bank for a sum very little in excess of the judgment which had been rendered against the Government.

The arrangement, if carried into effect, would have satisfied judgment, abated the pending suit, and given the falls, with all of the benefits and advantages resulting therefrom, to the Government of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. What happened to the Senator's report?

Mr. KING. The Committee on the District of Columbia in the House approved the report made by the subcommittee and recommended that the Congress make the necessary appropriation to acquire the falls. Opposition developed when the matter came before the House. Able and distinguished Members of the House, at least one of whom is still there, opposed the proposition. I was young and callow, and their prestige and standing enabled them to vanquish the supporters of the measure.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, let me ask the Senator another question. Is it not true that those who succeeded in defeating the Senator did it on the ground that there had not been sufficient investigation made there, and they wanted more light and more investigation; and what year was that?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am afraid if I tell the Senator the year, he will think that I am an antediluvian, it was so long ago. As I recall, it was in the year 1898 or 1899.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator know that that same kind of proceeding has been going on ever since? And the thing that surprises me is that the Senator now is adding his powerful eloquence and influence to that same kind of proceeding, "more investigation," "more light." They have been investigating it for a long time. The Senator was not the first man who investigated it. It was investigated in 1839, I believe, to begin with, and people have been yelling for more investigation ever since.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator does me great honor in attributing to me great influence——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire of the Senator whether he would advise undertaking a project upon a report made in 1839?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I would want to see the report. I have an idea that probably I would, if I saw it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it may seem somewhat inconsistent with the view which I then entertained that I should now be found in opposition to the position taken by the Senator from Nebraska; but I do not think there is any incongruity in the position which I then assumed and the position which I now assume. I was not then contending for the construction of a power plant, or for the investment of $25,000,000. I was only pleading for an appropriation of approximately $500,000 to settle a judgment against the Government of nearly that amount and to defeat a suit which was then pending for as large a sum, and which would have resulted in another judgment against the Government, and to give to the Government the falls, with all riparian rights. It was also understood that still greater quantities of water would be required for use in the District, which the Potomac must supply, and that the diversion of the same above the falls would result in still further claims for damages. As I now remember, the view was entertained by some of the committee that if at any future time an electric power plant was deemed necessary or feasible the Government would be unembarrassed by condemnation proceedings or by having to combat the fanciful claims of those who might claim ownership of the falls or the property upon either side thereof.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. KING. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will not contend, will he, that he was not then advocating taking the first step necessary to construct a hydroelectric power plant? Why would the Government want to buy the land that the Senator wanted it to buy unless they expected to utilize it by developing this power?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the paramount object which I then had in view was to satisfy the judgment against the Government and abate the suit then pending, which was meritorious, because the District had taken out above the falls a considerable quantity of water, and thus had diminished the value of the riparian property, and obtain the lands upon either side of the falls so that when further diversions occurred, no actions for damages would lie against the Government. I knew that with the growth of the city we would be compelled again to go to the stream and divert more water for municipal purposes, and that such action would certainly lead to further litigation. But I will say to my friend in perfect frankness that I did believe then and I believe now that the falls did possess some potential value for power purposes; but that, as I said, was a secondary consideration in influencing the conclusion which I then reached.

Mr. President, the amendment now pending before us calls for the construction of an electric plant at an expense of $25,000,000 within one year after the approval of this act.

Mr. NORRIS. No; Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator. The language "within one year after the approval of this act" is not in the amendment as I have offered it. If the Senator will strike out that language, he will have the amendment as I have proposed it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that I have not before me, then, the amendment as finally perfected.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will strike out the words commencing on line 2, "within one year after the approval of this act," he will have the amendment just as I have offered it.

Mr. KING. The printed copy of the amendment which I have before me reads:

> The commission is hereby authorized and directed, within one year after the approval of this act, to construct or cause to be constructed on the Potomac River the power plant outlined in project No. 3, House Document No. 1400, Sixty-second Congress, third session.

And so forth. As I understand the Senator now, the words "within one year after the approval of this act" are to be eliminated. That removes one of the serious objections which I had to the measure, because I think it would be very unwise for us to direct the construction of a plant of this magnitude within the coming year, taking into account the shortage of labor, the high cost of production, and the many difficulties and obstacles that would not be encountered at a date more remote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I believe this measure carries an appropriation of $25,000,000 for all purposes.

Mr. KING. No; just for this plant.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I mean for this plant at Great Falls—the purchase of land and the building of power houses and dams and transmission works. Can the Senator tell us when that estimate was made and by whom?

Mr. KING. I am unable to throw any light on that matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Perhaps the Senator from Nebraska can do so.

Mr. KING. I was just about to say that the only knowledge I have on the subject is contained in the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska, and, as I understand, his statement, in part at least, is predicated upon a report found in House Document No. 1400 of the Sixty-second Congress. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] a moment ago called attention to the fact that that report was 7 years old, and everybody knows that in seven years remarkable progress has been made in electrical development, and machinery which seven years ago was adequate and suitable for electrical purposes is out of date. In other words, plans for an electric plant of the magnitude and importance of the one under consideration prepared seven years ago are but a poor and uncertain guide for action now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What I am trying to ascertain is, who makes this estimate of cost? Perhaps the Senator from Nebraska can answer that question. Who makes this estimate of $25,000,000 as the cost, and when was it made?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to yield to permit the Senator to furnish the information requested.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say that the estimate made by Col. Langfitt, when he made this report, was $15,000,000, in round numbers. There were some extra dollars that I can not remember, but the estimate was approximately $15,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. When was that report made?

Mr. NORRIS. It was made in 1913 or 1912, I believe. The reporter has taken the report from my desk and has not returned it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, I want to ask the Senator a further question. The estimate made in the report was $15,000,000?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to ask the Senator if he does not recognize that the cost of everything that would enter into the construction of a plant of that kind has at least doubled, and perhaps trebled, since that time?

Mr. NORRIS. That is the reason why I have placed the authorization at $25,000,000. I want to say to the Senator in that connection that in round numbers one-third of the expense is properly chargeable to the increase of the water supply of the District of Columbia, which, as I have shown—the Senator was not here, but I think I have shown it—is something we have got to expend money for anyway, and we have got to do it within the next few years, or we will be out of water in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator will yield one moment further——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have been at Great Falls several times, and, while I am not an expert, I think there are great possibilities there for power. I think it ought to be developed; I think it ought to have been done before now; but I do not think it ought to be put into this bill in this way without any preparation or without any knowledge of the situation as it exists now. You might just as well go out here and select some other favorable site and put it onto this bill as an amendment because it appears to be a necessity for some great city, or something like that.

I should be perfectly willing to vote for a carefully prepared bill, carefully guarded, after a thorough investigation has been made now by competent hydroelectrical engineers, and all that; but I am not going to vote for this as an amendment to this bill. My experience is that Army engineers, as a rule, know very little about hydroelectric engineering. They build dams, they improve rivers, but it is a very different proposition when you come to the construction of a great hydroelectric power plant. It takes a different kind of talent and a different caliber, and all that. This amendment ought not to go into this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield further?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to say, in reference to the Army engineer knowing nothing about electric power, that Col. Langfitt, in the expenditure of $20,000 that was given for the purpose of the investigation, spent the greater portion of it in the employment of hydroelectric engineers. I think he employed one of the greatest hydroelectric engineers in the country, if not in the world, whose judgment he took in making up his report as to the hydroelectric power.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the statements just made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] are very pertinent, and show the unwisdom of incorporating the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in this bill. Let us just for a moment—and I am diverting from what I intended to say—consider the object of this bill. This bill is not primarily designed for the purpose of enabling the Government to engage in the erection of hydroelectric plants or to construct dams. The theory seems to be that private capital is willing to develop the water-power resources of our country, but that under the commerce clause of the Constitution the United States must assume control for administrative purposes of the navigable streams. The commission created by this bill is administrative in character rather than executive. It is to grant licenses to applicants who seek to develop the power resources of the Nation. It is not constituted primarily for the purpose of constructing dams or electric-power plants, and the devolving of the duty contemplated by the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska upon this commission, of the construction of a vast hydroelectric plant, I submit is not consistent with the primary duty which rests upon the commission created by this bill.

Indeed, to constitute the commission an executive body to build dams and electric plants is at variance with the letter and the spirit of the bill.

Mr. President, if it is necessary—and perhaps it is—that a power plant should be constructed at the Great Falls in order to conserve the power that is now going to waste and to furnish power and light to the District, then it seems to me improper to place the duty and the responsibility upon this commission for that purpose. If, as an original proposition, aside from this bill, and assuming that the commission provided by this bill were in existence, we were called upon to pass upon the question of building a power plant at the Great Falls, I doubt if any Senator here would suggest that the duty be devolved upon the commission provided in this bill, because, as I said, the commission's duties are administrative. It is called upon to grant licenses to various corporations and persons who seek to avail themselves of the opportunity to develop the unused power of the country. I think the District Committee ought to go into this matter, ought to determine whether or not, in the interests of economy and the public welfare, a power plant should be constructed; and if the District Committee upon full investigation believes that the plan of the Senator from Nebraska is rational, is sound, is advantageous, let them report a bill and make provision for the instrumentality or agency that will be employed in the construction of this plant. However, it would be consistent with the bill to direct the commission to make such investigation for the guidance of Congress.

With my present view, it seems to me that the duty ought to be devolved upon the engineering force of the District to construct the plant if the erection of one is determined upon, empowering it to call such technical skill to its assistance as would be necessary.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is too much of a leap into the dark. We do not know what it will cost. The Senator says that in the report $15,000,000 were fixed as the maximum, and yet this bill calls for $25,000,000. Is it known what the land will cost? Everybody knows that land has appreciated in value during the past seven years. Farms which seven years ago could have been purchased in many places, to my knowledge, for a few dollars per acre now bring hundreds of dollars per acre. Lands along the Potomac undoubtedly have appreciated very much in value—or at any rate such will be the claim of the owners of the same.

What will be the value of these lands if we wait a year or two years, when some of this vast volume of credit has been reduced and inflated values lose their altitudinous heights, when we get down to normal conditions again? Under the exaggerated view which prevails in this country as to the value of everything, Mr. President, we do not know how much the Government will be mulcted, and I use the term advisedly. I have no doubt that the jury would give thousands where Col. Langfitt, if he determined the value of the land, fixed hundreds of dollars. It is too uncertain a proposition, it is too indefinite, for us now to act intelligently upon it. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana ought to prevail. The report called for by it will be submitted at the close of this year; by that time, the Lord willing, we will be getting down nearer to bedrock in prices, getting down more nearly to the real value of property, and down to normal conditions.

With labor to-day only 60 per cent efficient, as it is claimed, it is apparent that the costs will be greatly augmented. If the Government should enter upon the construction of the plant now, with the present shortage of labor, with the high price of labor, the costs would be considerably more than 100 per cent over what they will probably be two or three years hence. Let us wait a little while. We have waited for many years, it is true, as the Senator has said. All things come, as we are told, to those who wait, and sometimes a little procrastination makes for economies, makes for improved conditions, and more satisfactory results. If we will wait a year or two years before engaging in this undertaking and then go at it with a will, with full and complete knowledge before us, we will complete the enterprise just about as soon as if we should start now and at a cost very much less than if we undertake this project now.

Let me again refer to this sentence in the bill:

> And the commission is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a suitable site for said dam or dams and for all other real estate necessary to the carrying out in detail of said project, including all real estate that will be overflowed by the formation of the lake mentioned in said project.
